In a recent dissertation President Eliot, of Harvard, stated that "the whole store of knowledge now available is too vast for any man to master, though he had 100 lives, instead of one, and its growth in the nineteenth century was greater than in all the thirty preceding centuries put together. Culture, therefore, can no longer imply a knowledge of everything—not even a little knowledge of everything. It must be confined to a general knowledge of some and a real mastery of some small part of the human store."

ALDERMAN KILLED

By Former Officer on the City's Force

At Ensley, Alderman D. H. White was shot and fatally wounded by ex-Police Officer Glenn Tetherow. A bullet from a 45-caliber revolver pierced his right lung.

The assailant, Glenn Tetherow, one of the best known citizens of Ensley, was arrested as soon as the shooting was over.

While it is not positively known, it is believed that the shooting grew out of the reduction of the police force that the city council is advocating. Tetherow is himself an ex-policeman, and until recently had two brothers on the force, one of whom arrested him in this instance. The city council recently made certain reductions in the force, and J. R. Tetherow was not re-elected, and W. B. Tetherow, formerly night captain, was reduced to a patrolman when his office was abolished. Alderman White, it is thought, was considered by Tetherow as being instrumental in the reduction, which turned one of his brothers adrift and reduced the rank of the other, and on this account, it is charged, he made the attack.

KILLED BY FALLING SLATE.

John T. Brady, a miner of Blossburg, and an ex-alderman of Pinckney City, was the victim of an accident by which he died in agony. His head was crushed by falling slate in a room in the Blossburg coal mine. Mr. Brady was in the room cleaning it, and at the time the accident occurred. Companions in adjoining rooms heard a loud noise and rushed into his room in time to see him lying on the floor buried in slate from the roof.

The following Alabamians will sail from the Grosse Kurfurst from New York March 8th to attend the world's Sunday school convention to be held in the city of Jerusalem April 18th to 27th: Judge Joseph Carthel, of Montgomery; A. C. Harte, of Mobile; the Rev. E. L. Hill, of Eufaula; W. E. Stratton, of Huntsville; J. D. Pittman, of Evergreen; Miss Stewart, of Mobile; and the Rev. J. L. Thompson, of Selma.

IT RESULTED FATALLY.

The Boy Died From Little Girl's Shooting.

Charles D. Kopman, the little boy who was shot some weeks ago by his little girl playmate, died Friday night. He was playing in the yard of his parents' residence in North Birmingham with the daughter of a neighbor. The children had a rifle, which was thought to be empty. The little girl placed it through the fence and playfully pulled the trigger. A shot followed and young Kopman fell with a ball in the abdomen. It was not thought at the time that he was fatally injured and physicians had hope for his life. Attending physicians said his death was the result of exhaustion rather than a direct consequence of the wound.

ANOTHER MURDER IN ENSLEY.

Brought About by Dispute as to Who Should Pay for the Drinks.

Two Laws shot and fatally wounded Neil Mullin Saturday night in a row. The difficulty, it is stated, was over the payment for beer purchased by Mullin.

According to witnesses, Mullin, Laws and others were drinking together. Mullin started out without offering to pay the bartender. He was followed back. Laws is alleged to have gone behind the counter and procured a revolver. He pointed the weapon point blank at Mullin and fired twice. One of the bullets took effect in Mullin's arm and the other in the back, piercing the kidneys.

Birmingham's council adopted an ordinance authorizing an election to be held in April 11th for the qualified voters of the city to decide whether or not bonds to the amount of $200,000 shall be issued for the purpose of constructing public school houses and bridges."

The county's grand jury returned several indictments.

The robbery surrounds the robbery Saturday night of James M. Crooke, a Montgomery photographer, who was robbed, he says, of $2,060 by six men who drugged him, bound and gagged him in order to carry out their plans. Crooke was found insensible and helpless on the floor of his office, lying on his back, his hands tied behind him with a note on his breast which is supposed to have been written by one of the robbers.

It is reported that A. J. Dine, a druggist of Montgomery, called on God to strike him speechless if he ever touched certain drug again, and on going to the temptation his tongue was paralyzed.

A Lively Bullet.

Charley Reed, foreman for Brewer & Jones, contractors for Seaboard Air Line work between Birmingham and Atlanta, accidentally shot himself in the leg Sunday night. The bullet struck the thigh bone, coming out between the knee and the thigh. After coming out it struck the floor, bounced upward and struck another man in the abdomen. The ball did not penetrate the skin, but the man thought he was shot.

Bobby Walthour, the champion bicycle rider of the world, has sailed for Europe, where he will meet all comers at middle distances. Walthour holds the world's record for a mile, 1:06.

Detected in Time.

Albert Driscoll and J. E. Russell are confined in the Montgomery jail awaiting trial on a charge of safe blowing. While in jail the two have been permitted to take exercise in the corridors during the day, being confined in their cells at night. Suspicious actions of the men caused the jailer to make investigation of the windows along the corridor Sunday and he found that they had already sawed the bars so nearly through that it would have required but a few moments more for them to work their way to freedom. How the men secured the saws is a mystery to the authorities.

County Officers Indicted.

The circuit court grand jury of Clay county returned bills of indictment against Sheriff W. D. Mayo and the board of county commissioners. The sheriff was indicted for the condition of his books, and the commissioners for the condition of the county jail and the county poor house. The removal of the county poor house keeper was also recommended. It is alleged that upon examining the books of Sheriff Mayo the examiner of public accounts found that he was due the state and county a small amount, and that he has not made the proper settlement of the claim.

Army Inspection.

The adjutant general's office has been notified that Captain A. S. Morgan, of the artillery corps of the United States, would inspect the companies of the Alabama national guard under the terms of the Dick bill for the war department. The inspection begins March 21st at Phenix City.

This inspection is separate and distinct from the one ordered by Governor Jelks for the third infantry.

Prospectors have been examining the coal vein which has been discovered about four miles west of Fort Payne. It is thought to be anthracite or cannel coal. This coal was discovered while mining a very fine bed of fire clay. It is thought to be a very valuable find.

LATEST WAR NEWS

Diplomatic circles are discussing a nice question of neutrality which will arise when the Russian Baltic fleet starts for the far east, which is expected to occur early in the summer. The fleet will be accompanied by colliers, and it is understood that the French government will raise no objection to the fleet coaling in French ports from its own ships. After the fleet passes Jibutil (French Somaliland) there are no ports until the fleet reaches Saigon, French Indo-China, and it undoubtedly will put in at an Indian or Ceylon port for more coal.

A diplomat who expressed an opinion on the question pointed out that belligerent ships could properly demand at a neutral port enough coal to enable them to reach the nearest home port, and that in this case the nearest home port was Port Arthur.

It is said that during the past few years all the available guns and war material which it was possible to send over the single line of the Trans-Siberian railroad, have been used for the strengthening of Port Arthur, and points in Manchuria, leaving Vladivostock with the old type guns of short range. It is reported that Vladivostock is illy supplied with provisions.

It is believed that the Japanese are now between the Russian cruiser squadron and Vladivostock.

It is pointed out that if this is true the Russian vessels are in a critical position, since they must run the gantlet of the Japanese squadron off Vladivostock, or the Japanese squadron off Port Arthur, before reaching a Russian port.

Dispatches from Tokio speak of the sacrifices being made by the Japanese nation. It is said that the mikado is abandoning all luxuries, the court is following his example and all are going to live abstemiously until the war is ended.

At a general meeting of the Red Cross it was reported that 30,000 cots, $700,000 worth of bread and $20,000 worth of meat have been prepared for shipment. The funds available for Red Cross work amounted to $3,000,000.

It is reported that the Russian authorities have been approached indirectly by American shipping firms desiring to fit out privateers to prey on Japanese commerce, but that they met with no encouragement.

It takes the wages of 15,000,000 men to pay the daily cost of the war between Japan and Russia—a war confined within a radius of 1,000 miles.

Fatal Family Row.

From Vaiden, Miss., comes the information that in a fight between Aaron Stewart and son on one side, and W. W. Hill and two sons on the other, the Stewarts shot and killed W. W. Hill and his son, John Hill, and seriously wounded Hunter Hill. The weapons used were 38-caliber pistols. The difficulty arose in a dispute over a boundary line. The parties were neighbors.

A Jewish Colony.

A Jewish colony is being established at Creola, on the line of the Southern railway, near Mobile, and it is thought that at least three hundred will be located there and engage in farming. For the most part the settlers are coming from the large cities. The agent of the colony says a large number of Russian Jews will be brought to the colony soon.

An experimental farm will be established on the property recently purchased by the Presbyterian Orphans' home at Talladega. Money has been appropriated for this purpose by the United States government.

Land and Industrial Agent W. L. Henderson, of the Southern railway, is now engaged in conducting through the state Charles F. Smith and J. B. Finster, well known promoters of New York. These gentlemen contemplate securing about 150,000 acres of land in Alabama for colonization purposes.

Hares have no eyelids.

Little Girl Burned to Death.

Little eight-year-old Elberta Terry, daughter of a section foreman for the Southern railway, was burned to death while trying to resuscitate a fire with kerosene at Anniston. The can exploded, setting her clothing on fire, and before the flames could be subdued burns were sustained that ended the little girl's life in a short time.

It is reported the Baxter company will soon resume business. It is expected that they will pay 100 cents on the dollar.

FIVE WERE KILLED

In a Railroad Collision Near Meridian, Miss.

Tram No. 1, of the Queen and Crescent Route, Alabama Great Southern Railroad, the limited train from Cincinnati to New Orleans, collided head-on with a northbound freight, seventeen miles north of Meridian. The two trains were making very fast time and the collision which occurred at 5:50 was an awful one.

Engineer P. H. Larkin was at the throttle on train No. 1, while J. B. Capehart was the conductor. According to information given out the passenger train has the right of way.

The engineer on the passenger train was handling his train in the usual manner, making good speed when the northbound freight train hove in sight. There was an awful crash as the two trains came together. The passenger train going almost completely through the freight train. The dead are Pat H. Larkin, engineer; Robinson Riggs, and D. D. Nicholson, mail clerks, of Chattanooga; Mail weigher Davidson, Henry Banks and Autrey, colored.

Fatally injured: J. H. Hinds, of Nashville, express messenger, and Engineer Case.

Less seriously injured: John Capehart, conductor on passenger train; M. Brown, colored, brakeman.

All mail, express and baggage on the passenger train was destroyed by the fire following the collision.

It is stated officially at Alabama Great Southern headquarters that the wreck was the fault of the crew of the freight train, which is said to have left Meridian without finding out if the passenger train was in or at least failing to make any allowance for the passenger train.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH

From the Catching of a Pistol Trigger.

Near Atmore Mrs. J. M. Maxwell accidentally shot and killed herself. Mr. Maxwell was away assisting a neighbor at a piece of work when the sad news was carried to him. Mrs. Maxwell went to a trunk to secure some pieces of old cloth for bandages, and in pulling out the cloth in some way a pistol which was in the trunk and had slipped from its usual place got caught and went off.

The bullet passed through her body just above the left breast, causing death immediately. Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell had recently moved to this county and were originally from Natchez, Monroe county. She leaves a husband and six little children to mourn her death.

A contract for the printing of fifty thousand additional advertising pamphlets has been made by the advertising committee of the Huntsville chamber of commerce. The pamphlets will be sent to farmers in the north and west. Thousands of them have been sent to those sections during the past few months and many farmers have removed there as a result of correspondence begun in that manner.

The Tombigbee Valley Railroad Company has been organized with John T. Cochrane, of Tuscaloosa, president and general manager. The company has purchased the line in Washington county owned by Kansas City capital and known as the Tombigbee and Northern railway. It is reported that substantial railway development in this part of the state is projected.

Work will be commenced in a few days on some extensive improvements at the plant of the Empire Plow company at Ensley. The new additions will equip new industry for manufacturing plow handles. The machinery has been ordered and as soon as it arrives the work of installing it will begin.

Alabama's railroad commission will hold a special meeting in Mobile, March 17, to determine and select a site for the construction of a union depot in that city, under the terms of an act passed by the legislature.

In the state executive committee meeting no opposition was shown to the printing of the name of Richard Pearson Hobson on the official ballot.

LITTLE WHITE SHOON.

Little White Shoon, you are dainty and slim
As you flit o'er the ballroom floor;
Worthy are you for an artist to limn,
A poet to hymn—and adore.
I gaze in amaze at your frolicsome flight,
As a wight by enchantment bewitched—
But what do you care as you trip it to-night?
You snare that the Pixies have stitched!

Little White Shoon, like twin butterflies
That circle a garden a-blow,
With rapturous sighs and love-laden eyes
I follow wherever you go.
'Neath satin a-shimmer you glimmer as gay
As lily buds wet with the dew—
If I mix up my similes, pardon me, pray,
Each moment I'm wildered anew.

Little White Shoon, you have gallants, a score,
Around you they sigh and aspire,
And into your ear vapid compliments pour
Unmeet for the grace they admire;
But melody springs from my lyre, for its strings
Are a-quiver because you are near,
And when you have vanished, like all lovely things,
The world of your beauty shall hear.

Little White Shoon—afar from the rout,
What fancies are blent with my dreams!
As you pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat gleaming about,
I catch the sweet ripple of streams;
The scent of the wild rose a-sway in the wind,
The song of the shy forest bird,
The glamour of moonlight with shadows entwined,
In my dreaming are felt and are heard.

Little White Shoon, the night's ebbing fast,
The East's growing pink with the morn;
The fairer the vision the quicker 'tis past—
Alas, must you leave me forlorn!
The 'cellos are breathing a final refrain:
May your beauty ne'er wither or blight,
And soft be the touches of sorrow and pain;
Little White Shoon, good night!

AN UNPRECEDENTED LOSS.

By A. B. SCUDDER.

Jeanne Prentice, only daughter of Doctor Prentice, the old rector of St. Jude's, was gazing abstractedly at a sweet face before her in the looking glass. Jeanne was thinking. As she rested her elbows on the dresser, supporting her dimpled chin with her hands, the expression around her mouth settled itself into unbecoming dissatisfaction.

Out of pure wilfulness she had quarreled with, and was now parted from, the man she loved. True, she had repented immediately, for Jeanne had meant to do nothing more than tease Bob Marsden. But Mr. Robert Marsden had seen fit to take her acceptance of attentions from the new curate, Renwick Krecting, in a more serious manner that Jeanne had intended.

After a reception at the church during the winter, at which the tall young curate had monopolized Jeanne's time more than Bob liked, he had remonstrated. Jeanne had laughed at him. That was all.

Just then, Dannie, the boy who pumped the organ used for the Sunday school, came with a message of importance from one of the members of the firm with which Bob was associated, and he had gone off hurriedly and coldly. The next afternoon she had sent a repentant little note over to Bob's office, by John, his father's servant, who came to return an umbrella. No answer came, and a couple of days later she heard that Bob had gone away on a business trip for the firm—gone without a word of good-by.

In all the city there was not a merrier girl than Jeanne, but during the last three months of Bob's absence there were times when in the midst of a laugh a sigh would come and her sweet face become o'ershadowed.

Tonight she was going over to the church, and with the assistance of several other young girls and men of St. Jude's arrange the flowers around the altar and in the font, for an anniversary tomorrow; a service to commemorate the twenty-fifth year of Doctor Prentice's rectorship at the church.

So Jeanne sat thinking in front of her glass, thinking of past happy times at the church, where from childhood Bob had always been with her, a ready and willing helper. She felt she could not endure his silence longer. She must do something. But what? Bob had not answered her note, and was gone. Nothing could be done.

Jeanne rose wearily to join her expected friends as the doorbell rang; but somehow she could not get her mind away from Bob, and as they entered the church she thought of how last year he was there and how much she missed him now. Jeanne abruptly turned to Renwick Krecting, who had come forward to welcome her, and began a lively conversation. But under the stream of idle chatter she heard in loving memory Bob's voice, as he softly called her "sweetheart."

She was sinking into reverie again, and aroused herself with a start.

"What foolishness!" she thought. "I am wasting my time thinking about a man who has forgotten me."

At this moment the door in the chancel opened and a gentleman stood looking at the altar made so beautiful by the light fingers of the young girls.

"Why, Mr. Marsden, is it really you?" they cried, running forward to meet him.

What had happened to Jeanne? She stood perfectly still, but the walls of the old church were spinning around; the electric lights bobbed up and down and the flowers and the altar seemed to float away in a great white mist. It was only for a second. No one happened to look at her; no one noticed that she had turned as white as the lilies in her hands.

In the round of handshaking that so heartily welcomed him, Bob came towards Jeanne and bowed gravely as he took her hand. She managed to greet him with a slight smile. She felt she must keep up appearances, whatever happened. Every one here had known that Bob Marsden had loved Jeanne, and it was generally thought that she had refused him. They should never know her punishment for a foolish moment; never know that he had forsaken her and that her heart was breaking in its intense longing for her old playmate.

And Bob? Well, he had come back because of the desire to see his mother, and besides there had come such a flood of memories of Jeanne; her bright and happy face; the flitting of the color in her cheeks. He could not remain away and had come back—come back to find her enjoying herself, and the curate still in attendance. He had better not have come, and yet how glad he was and how his heart beat to see her sweet face again.

The evening proved a weary one for both, and they were glad when it came time to go home. The crowd of young people parted from Jeanne at the door of the rectory with a noisy "good-night." Bob did not touch her hand or speak as he raised his hat and started down Fifth Avenue, with the rest. Jeanne sobbed herself to sleep in remorseful sorrow, and came down in the morning with pale cheeks and heavy eyes.

Her father, quick to notice the tone of her voice as she wished him "good-morning," said gently,—.

"Are you well, dear?"

"Yes, father, quite."

But the doctor, still doubtful, said—"Perhaps you had better not go into the church this morning."

"Oh, yes, I must. You know I have a solo to sing for you. I shall be all right."

But she wondered, as she wearily took her place in the choir, if she would be able to sing with such an aching head and heavy heart.

As Jeanne stood up her eyes wandered from her music to the crowded church below. Yes, there he was in his old seat, and for just one second his eyes looked straight into hers.

There was no doubt about her singing now. Love, pride, something thrilled through the young girl. "I know that my Redeemer liveth" came in a sweet burst of song from her lips. Never once did she falter; never had she sung so sweetly before. Even her father turned with a look of wonder upon his face which settled itself in a rapt expression of adoration of the Christ as her voice rang out the words of peace and comfort.

After the service was over she was slipping out of the vestry door to reach the quiet of home, only a few steps distant, when she heard some one following her. Her heart gave a quick jump, but it was only Dannie.

"Miss Jeanne, be you goin' home? Won't you write a letter for me, Miss Jeanne, please?"

It was most trying to have this request come, just when she felt so nervous and longed to be by herself. But she could not see her way clear to refusing the boy who could not read or write himself.

"Well, come on, Dannie, and I will write it." Upon entering the house she went to her father's study table. Sitting down she said, "Now tell me what I must write for you, Dannie."

"Well, you see, Miss Jeanne, it is this way. Mr. Marsden"—Jeanne gave a start—"has just come back. Last winter," continued Dannie, "he gave me a letter to mail. I had an old jacket on and the letter slipped down between the lining and the outside. I thought I had lost it. He went away the next day, so I could not tell him. Afterwards I accidentally found the letter, but thought I had better keep it until I seen him again. But now I am afraid to tell him, Miss Jeanne, and I want you to write to Mr. Marsden and explain it out to him. Mother says he won't mind then. Do you think he'll be awful mad, Miss Jeanne?" The boy looked anxiously in her face.

"Have you the letter?" said Jeanne, with a strange feeling of tightness about her heart.

"Yes."

"Let me see it," as the boy fumbled around in his pockets.

Yes, there it was in Bob's bold handwriting—"Miss Jeanne Prentice."

She stood up and steadied herself by holding on to the table. Then asking Dannie, much to his amazement, to excuse her, she flew to her room holding the letter close to her heart.

"It is mine, mine!"

The letter ran:—

"I am sorry that I was so unreasonable last evening. May I come over and tell you how sorry? Send me permission by John when he brings your father's umbrella. I think perhaps I may have to go away for a time on business for the firm.

"Yours faithfully, Bob."

A dozen times Jeanne read and reread it. She was so glad to get it, and yet so sorry. Glad to get and read between the lines how much he must have loved her. Sorry because he had changed his mind after writing. Why did he not come, or why did he not answer her note sent by John, even if it made no mention of having received his?

Suddenly her heart almost seemed to stop beating. If one letter had been lost why not two! Pshaw! Jeanne Prentice, how ridiculous. Still, somehow the idea haunted her, as she went to tell Dannie that the letter had been written to her, and that she would explain the matter to Mr. Marsden herself, which arrangement pleased Dannie mightily. Just how she was going to do it she hardly knew, but Jeanne was not one to rest idle. Now that she had this letter she felt that things had somehow gone wrong and needed at least an explanation. She thought of John, and remembered that he was to move some benches in the Sunday school room preparatory for an afternoon service.

Going over to the church, after a few moments' talk with her father, whom she found still lingering, and who asked if she had sung her headache away, she turned to John and said,—

"I saw this morning, John, that young Mr. Marsden was at service. That note that I gave you to deliver to him—you remember the day before he went away—you gave it to him personally?"

"Yes, miss."

Jeanne's heart sank. She had not realized how strongly the idea had taken possession of her that her letter to Bob had been lost also, until the man spoke. Then it occurred to her that John's glance was shifting; that he did not wish to meet her eye, and her cheeks burned as the thought came to her that he divined the reason of her question.

Well, there was only one way. She must write a formal letter to Mr. Marsden enclosing the one he had written to her and explaining the matter for the sake of Dannie, as she had promised, but she could not bring herself to ask any explanation as to his change of mind after the receipt of her own letter.

But there was no need. While Jeanne with a dull pain at her heart, was trying to write out what she considered a properly worded letter, John was walking slowly down the street in the direction of Mr. Marsden's home. Even after he had touched the button he looked around as if to find some place in which conveniently to hide, then suddenly bracing himself for a disagreeable duty, entered, as the maid answered "yes" to his question if Mr. Robert Marsden was at home.

Jeanne's question had awakened memories in John. That letter? Oh, yes, he remembered it well. Jeanne's question also brought to John's memory an old saying something about "honest confession" and his "soul," but it is doubtful if John's soul would have troubled him but for the fear of a meeting and explanations between Jeanne and Bob.

His old master's son welcomed him warmly. After speaking of an accident that had incapacitated him for much hard work, John with many hesitations reached the story he had come to tell, which was to the effect that Miss Jeanne had given him a letter to deliver the day before Mr. Marsden had gone away. He stopped to see a fire on the way over, and in getting through the crowd had lost it. When Bob met him on his return and asked him if Miss Prentice had sent anything he was afraid to tell the truth and said "No," intending to go back and tell Miss Jeanne all about it. The next day Mr. Marsden having gone away he had let the matter drop, but thought now as Bob had come back he had better tell about the letter and so came around.

John had not calculated the effect of his story. Bob suddenly jumped up and taking him by the hand almost hugged him with delight; he told him it was all right, and as John walked slowly away from the house ten minutes later with the promise of a better position, he wondered if it would always pay as well to make an "honest confession."

Jeanne was still working over her letter, when she heard her father's voice in the hall. But he was not alone. Who had come in with him? Her heart gave a glad bound as she recognized the well remembered voice and heard her father calling—

"Jeanne, Jeanne, Mr. Marsden is here."

"Yes, father, I am coming."

Jeanne sat quite still for a moment. Why had he come? Then suddenly turning to the glass she gave a quick glance, and taking Dannie's letter went slowly down the stairs, a new light in her eyes, a new joy upon her face.—Waverley Magazine.

The Vision of Reptiles.

The best sense that reptiles have is that of sight, according to Viennese naturalist named Werner, who has recently published the results of observations on nearly 200 snakes, lizards, frogs, etc. But even this sense is very dull. A crocodile cannot see a man more than six times its own length away, while fish can see only about half their own length. Snakes are still worse off. Some can see a quarter of their length away, while others are limited to one-fifth or one-eighth. Frogs are much keener sighted. They can tell what is going on at a distance of 15 or 20 times their own length. Most reptiles are nearly or quite deaf, but in compensation, all, according to Werner, seem to have a marvelous sense of the direction in which water lies. They will make a bee line for it, says the Literary Digest, even when so far away that no sense known to us would help them. Werner thinks this due to some sort of attraction akin to chemical action; but he cannot explain how or why it takes place.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

A man has been fined in Vienna for calling a telephone girl a liar over the wire.

Long engagements are rather expensive in Russia. An engaged man is expected to send a present to his intended every day.

Cats in Japan almost universally have short tails, and if a cat does come into the world with a lengthy caudal appendage it is usually chopped off.

The largest pair of shoes ever manufactured for actual wear in America were made by a firm of shoemakers at Rockland, Mass. The size is labelled "17," and they are nearly sixteen inches long.

The Town Council of Hildersheim, Hanover, has decided to preserve the ancient appearance of its streets by ordering that all new private buildings must be in the seventeenth century German style.

The Mikado of Japan has recently issued a decree allowing a Japanese woman to lead, if she chooses, a single life. Hitherto, if unmarried after a certain age, a husband was selected for her by law.

A Russian Dick Turpin.

"Solomon II., by the grace of God, King of the Jews." This was the way in which a very remarkable prisoner recently signed the prison book at Kieff (Russia). His history is curious. He was a handsome, hard-working student of the Kieff Seminary, but on finishing his course, writes a correspondent, he immediately provided himself with a revolver, dagger and a number of forged papers and passes, and began a career of robbery and brigandage, which was marked throughout by consummate skill and forethought. He murdered and stole on the highway, his victims in Kieff including a staff captain and a master of the watch. At his richly furnished apartments in Kieff he dispensed lavish hospitality to a circle of most respectable friends, who never suspected the source of his wealth. His capture was brought about by the accidental protrusion of a revolver from his coat pocket while he was bargaining with a fur merchant. The latter pointed him out to a detective, and "Solomon II." was arrested and bound like a dangerous wild beast. At the preliminary examination he confessed to a long series of robberies, but denied any murders.—London Daily Mail.

The Polite Baboo.

Here is a characteristic bit of baboo English written by one who wanted a holiday:

"Most Exalted Sir—It is with most habitually devout expressions of my most sensitive respect that I approach the clemency of your masterful position with the self-dispraising utterance of my esteem, and the also forgotten-by-myself assurance that in my own mind I shall be freed from the assumption that I am asking unpardonable donations if I assert that I desire a short respite from my exertions—indeed, a fortnight's holiday, as I am suffering from three boils, as per margin. I have the honorable delight of subscribing myself your exalted reverence's servitor. X."

Apparently the young man feared that his touching and humble epistle would not suffice. In the margin he had drawn a rough but graphic picture, showing the location of the three boils upon his own person.—Tit-Bits.

The Future Life of Animals.

Sir William Blunder, a doctor and baronet, has just favored a meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals with some views on the future state of animals. He "Certainly believed," he said, "in the future existence of animals, and though he could not bring forward evidence in support of the proposition, he could not at the same tome bring forward evidence to the contrary. If they took the case of the tinker's ass, which was born and reared in hardship, he found it hard to think that a merciful Creator formed that animal merely to suffer at the hands of man without receiving some compensation in the next life, if not in the present."—London News.

Worthy Old Lady.

Mrs. Mary Lee, who has just died at White Waltham, near Maidenhead, on the Thames, was a remarkable old lady. She was the oldest public-house landlady in England, for she was ninety years of age. Over the fireplace in taproom of her public house, the Bee Hive, stands the notice: "No swearing or foul language permitted in this room or indecent songs allowed to be sung. Any one infringing the above will be expelled." Often the old lady would walk into the taproom on Sunday evenings, bearing her old Bible, and read the Scriptures to an audience that listened with respect to her explanations and comments.—London Tit-Bits.

Short and Long Days.

The day is longer or shorter as you go north or south of the equator. Off Cape Horn, fifty-six degrees south latitude, the days in midwinter are about nine hours long. The longest day at London is about sixteen hours and a half; at Stokholm, eighteen hours and a half; at Hamburg, seventeen hours; at St. Petersburg the longest day has eighteen hours and the shortest five; at Tornea, in Finland, the longest day has twenty-one hours and a half and the shortest two hours and a half; at Spitzbergen the longest day is three months and a half.—London News.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR MARCH 13.

Subject: Death of John the Baptist, Matt. xiv., 1-12—Golden Text, Rev. ii., 10—Memory Verses, 9-11—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. Herod's terrified conscience (vs. 1, 2). 1. "At that time." During the missionary journey of the twelve. "Herod." This was Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great. He was the ruler of Galilee and Perea. Thirty years before he murdered the innocents at Bethlehem. Of all the contemptible wretches of Scripture—not excluding Judas, who is in some ways a great problem—Herod Antipas is the greatest—a little, petty, disgraceful Nero, a King John of England, a bundle of petty vices. "The tetrarch." Literally, the ruler of a fourth part or district into which a province was divided; afterward the name was extended to denote generally a petty king, the ruler of a provincial district. "Heard of the fame." Antipas had one of his capitals at Tiberias, on the Sea of Galilee. He had, no doubt, heard of Jesus before, but the preaching of the twelve apostles had stirred the whole country, and His "fame" was increasing, so that it attracted anew the attention of the king. 2. "Is risen from the dead." Herod had imprisoned John the last of March, A. D. 29. Herod's conscience accused him. "And therefore." In consequence of having risen from the dead He is thought to be possessed of miracle-working powers.

II. John's faithfulness (vs. 3-5). 3. "In prison." The place of John's imprisonment and death was Macherus, in Perea, on the eastern side of the Dead Sea, near the southern frontier of the tetrarchy. Here Antipas had a palace and a prison under one roof, as was common in the East. "For Herodias' Sake." This woman was a grand-daughter of Herod the Great. She first married Herod Philip, her uncle, who was the father of Salome. Herod had put away his legal wife, the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia Petrea, and had taken Herodias, though Philip, Herodias' husband, was still living.

4. "John said unto him." It seems that John faced the king himself with this rebuke. How bold and courageous! It is well when ministers dare rebuke the sins of politicians and those in authority. "Not lawful." Because, 1. He had put away his legal wife. 2. He had induced Herodias to forsake her husband. 3. Herodias was the niece and sister-in-law of Herod and the Mosaic law (Lev. 18: 12-14) had been violated. St. Luke adds (3:19) that Herod was also reproved "for all the evil which he had done." "To have her." To marry her. The force of the original bears out this interpretation.

5. "When he would." Although he was willing. From Mark we learn that Herodias was eager to kill John, while Herod, partly from an interest in his preaching and partly from fear of his prisoner, refused to take away his life. "Feared the multitude." The preaching of John had had a powerful effect on the masses, and Herod was restrained from acts of violence because of public sentiment. Mark also tells us that Herod knew that John was a just and holy man. This makes the king's sin all the more glaring and heinous, and from this we see that holiness and justice command the respect even of sinners. When Herod heard John preach "he did many things and heard him gladly" (Mark 6: 20).

III. Herod's birthday festivities (vs. 6-8). 6. "Birthday was kept." This was done, probably at the Macherus palace with great display. Herod made a great feast for his lords, high captains and the chief persons of Galilee. The nobility of Galilee were obliged to come some distance to attend the festivities. "Daughter—danced." Female dancers in the East are a customary part of great entertainments. On this occasion the dancer was of high birth, being no other than the Princess Salome, daughter of Herodias and Philip. They who glide into the dissolute dance glide over an inclined plane, and the dance is swifter and swifter, wilder and wilder, until, with the speed of lightning, they whirl off the edges of a ruined life into a fiery future. "Pleased Herod." They were probably half intoxicated, reclining at the tables, as their custom was. The infamous saloon system of to-day is only a remnant of the ancient revels that were so vile and corrupting in their effects. And yet the saloon is licensed, and thus permitted and protected by law!

7. "With an oath." It is always wrong to foreswear ourselves by promising to do or to keep secret what has not, as yet, been disclosed to us. "Whatsoever she would ask." Mark adds (6: 23), "Unto the half of my kingdom." Herod was ready to surrender half his kingdom for the pleasure of witnessing the performance of a lust-creating pantomime!

8. "Instructed." The vile Herodias saw that the hour had come for her to accomplish the fiendish deed she had so long meditated upon. "Mother." What a mother! Leading her own daughter into the vilest of crimes. "Give me here." She hastens (Mark 6: 25) to have the deed perpetrated while the revel is on, probably in the night. "In a charger." On a large platter.

IV. A foul deed committed (vs. 9-12). 9. "Sorry." His conscience was not entirely dead, and he was worried and troubled. "For the oath's sake." He cared more for his oath than his conscience, or John, or his God. He could murder, but he must not break a wicked oath that he never should have taken. There are many to-day who, for the sake of an oath which has no legal or moral binding upon them, will violate their consciences and imperil their soul's interests. "Which sat with him." He was afraid of offending the great men of his kingdom. A slave to public opinion. "To be given." Note the steps that had led Herod to this: 1. Rejecting the truth. 2. Continuing to indulge in his sins. 3. A drunken feast; liquor is responsible for untold crime and misery. 4. An immoral dance; dancing can but result in sin. 5. A wicked oath, which never should have been taken, but, once taken, should have been broken immediately. 6. His fear of the people.

10. "Beheaded." But his prisoner was ready. John is not the only one who will be beheaded if the truth is upheld. Let any man to-day take his position against the evils in society, and, socially, his head will roll into the basket; if he takes his position against evils in the church, not infrequently will his head come off ecclesiastically; if he opposes the corruption in politics, he will be beheaded politically. 11. "She brought it." What a present.

12. "His disciples." John's disciples. "Took up the body." It had been thrown out, and they buried it as the last kindness they could show to one they loved. Sorrow then brought them to Jesus. Antipas and Herodias were afterward banished by the Roman Emperor to Lyons, in France, where they passed the remainder of their lives in disgrace.

A man called at a San Francisco hospital and said he had forgotten his identity. He was detained under the name of John Myers, a small Bible in his pocket bearing that name. He thought he was a native of New York and that he lived somewhere up the Hudson river, also that he was a graduate of Yale, and that he at one time was engaged in literary work, either as an illustrator or a writer. This is borne out by his conversation, and he drew a character picture and down in the corner placed a signature, "L. W., '04." His hands are soft and he has an aristocratic face, but who he is and where he came from is a secret, which is that the farm becomes richer every year. Therefore, in computing the actual profits obtained we should calculate and enter to the account the value of the improvements made upon the farm.

A writer who has canvassed friends for their views says in a paper upon the subject "Why We Go to Theaters:" "Some go because they want to see 'life,' others because they want to get away from 'life,' some because they like to be amused, others because they like to have their feelings harrowed. A few apparently think that plays are educative, and a good many more frequent theatres simply because it 'is the correct thing to do.' And then she boils it all down and sums it up in this sentence: 'In my own opinion is that the majority of women in society go simply in order to have something to talk about.'"

An average Russian farmer's family consists of eight persons. His annual gross revenue from all sources is $212.20. Of this, $105.08 is in money and $107.12 is in farm produce at a cash value. Of the cash, $48.80 goes to pay taxes and rent for land, leaving $56.28 for clothing, tea, sugar, implements, furniture and necessaries for eight persons. The average family spends $8.84 annually for clothing, $1.96 for tea and sugar, $1.64 for household furniture, $1.20 for salt, 39 cents for kerosene, 39 cents for matches, 4 cents for articles of personal comfort.

In the year 1902 Germany published of books and pamphlets nearly 25,000, and the United States only about one-third as many. On the other hand, the United States published 21,000 newspapers and periodicals, and Germany only a little more than a third as many. In the creative work of novels, romances and works of the imagination, England leads the world, Germany is ahead in educational and theological works for the young, France runs copiously to history, Italy to religion. AGRICULTURAL.

The Dairy Is Profitable.

There is no pursuit on the farm that affords greater pleasure or gives such large profits as raising stock or operating a dairy. Not only is the produce of the farm more easily marketed when fed to the stock, but the fact of converting it into meat, milk or butter enhances its value and increases the profits in proportion to the labor expended. There is another feature in favor of raising and one of the most important, which is that the farm becomes richer every year. Therefore, in computing the actual profits obtained we should calculate and enter to the account the value of the improvements made upon the farm.

Millet Seed.

Millet seed is relished by the hens and unless given too freely is one of the best egg producers. A good way to feed it is to throw the unthreshed straw in the shed and let the hens scratch for the seed that has not been given. Millet is less fattening as corn, but as the grain is so small, there is less waste in feeding it. If corn is given to hens before being shelled, they will work over it, getting a grain here and there and so far apart that the danger of overfeeding is much less. Cooped fowls are highly relished by hens, but buckwheat and corn, must be fed with care. Clover seed is also rich in fat producing properties, and, with the others, must be fed in small lots. All kinds of sound grain are good for hens—and if we exercise care in feeding we will get good results from them.

Repairing Hollow Trunks.

An old pear or apple tree can sometimes be held together many years and made to bear several good crops by cutting back very severely, and plugging the large hollows with mortar or cement. Government Bulletin 181 describes a good method: All decayed or decaying matter should be removed from the cavity and with a sharp gouge or chisel all diseased wood cut away until sound heartwood is exposed. Then, before moisture or other injurious influences can act upon the newly exposed parts, the whole cavity should be filled with a thin mortar, made by mixing one part of Portland cement with three parts of clean, sharp sand. After the mortar has had time to become stiff, but not hard, a surface coat made of one part of sand and one part of cement should be added and the surface so faced as to exclude all moisture from the opening of the cavity. An additional safeguard would be had in treating the inside of the cavity with a copper-sulphate solution one pound to five or six gallons of water, after the diseased wood has been removed with a gouge or chisel and before the cement mortar is poured into the cavity.

Green Food For Poultry.

All who have raised poultry successfully for winter egg production admit that it is necessary to give them green food, but all do not know how to use it to the best advantage. If fed on the floor much of it is soiled and wasted, although it ought to be given that way occasionally by way of variety. The best way of feeding it, however, is to mix it in the mash. If the green food is clover, it should be cut fine and mixed in the proportion of about one-third to two-thirds of the bran and other grain composing the mash. If small vegetables like carrots, potatoes and turnips are fed, cut up fine and mix raw with the mash one time and next time cook them before mixing. Cabbage should always be fed raw, and may be mixed with the mash after chopping fine or hung up so that the fowls may pick at it when so inclined. While most feeds claim the best results come from feeding the green food in small quantities daily, others prefer to feed it only two or three times a week. The frequency of feeding depends upon the results obtained from the particular flock, the main thing being to feed it often enough and in some form all the time the fowls are in confinement.

Time to Buy Live Stock.

The fall is the time in which to purchase breeding fowls, for then the yards are full, and the number of good birds on hand are more numerous. Although we have repeatedly mentioned this caution, yet there are those who wait till spring to purchase, at which time the prices are higher and the best fowls gone. A breeder will not keep a large stock of fowls over winter if he can avoid it. It entails too much care and labor, for they must be kept in good condition. In order to thin out his flock he will sell better fowls at lower prices in the fall than he will in the spring, and those who always buy in the fall are usually better satisfied. When he keeps his stock till spring he will be lucky if some of the cockerels are not frosted on the comb or have met with some other accident, and when they leave his place the customer who receives them does not for a moment think that if he had bought his trio in the fall he would have avoided many little difficulties that come in the way in the spring. During the fall the breeders have large numbers of young stock on hand. They sell at reasonable rates, and the buyer stands a chance of getting the best, as fowls cannot always be judged until fully grown. Another advantage of fall buying is that the purchaser has the opportunity of pushing the fowls forward by liberal feeding and good care. This is very desirable if they are intended to lay well.—Connecticut Farmer.

Handy Wire Stretchers.

On most farms there is more or less wire to be handled, either in the way of putting up dividing fences or trellises for grape vines. A poorly stretched wire is always making trouble, but there is no need of having this annoyance when the tool illustrated may be easily made with the help of a blacksmith, and at small cost. The handle is two feet long, of one and one-half inch stuff, but hard wood must be used. On the heavy end of the handle, which should be formed as shown, fasten a piece of strap iron with screws to prevent the wire from cutting into the wood.

The short strip shown just above the detail drawing of the handle end in the cut, is a piece of iron seven inches long, one-half inch thick and seven-eighths of an inch wide; one end is bent over seven-eighths of an inch and a hole is bored in the flat side one inch from the bend. This piece of iron is then bolted on to the handle as shown, so that it will swing easily, and the tool is complete. It is readily made and works to perfection.—Indianapolis News.

Planning a Poultry House.

The chief requisite to consider when planning a poultry house are climate, soil, breed and space. In a latitude where snow covers the ground during the greater part of the winter, the fowls must of necessity be kept confined most of the time; even yards are often of no avail then. Accordingly, for the birds to be able to exercise sufficiently to maintain good health, they should have an ample amount of floor space; this, in fact, is so important that if the area is limited to a small proportion to each hen, and the house cannot very well be enlarged, the flock should be reduced in order to give those remaining more room. To admit of space for feeding, scratching, dusting, roosting and laying without crowding, ten square feet are required for each hen. A structure ten by ten feet, therefore, is none too large for ten hens. No heat being as economical nor any agency as conducive to the health and well being of poultry as sunshine, it should also occupy a dry, warm, sunny spot. In connection with dry earth, sunshine affords poultry just the element with which to clean their feathers of vermin, and by having plenty of window glass facing the south and set low down, they can, with dusting boxes properly placed, derive the full benefit of it in winter. In short, their habitation should be well lighted, warm, thoroughly ventilated, and free from cracks through which the wind can steal and chill them. Their perches should certainly be exempt from drafts and impenetrable to extreme cold. They should be so arranged that by pulling a curtain suspended from a wire or by letting down a hinged door in front of the fowls on the roosts at night, they will be virtually boxed up in a small space and still enjoy comfortable quarters. To achieve this, a platform should be built not more than fifteen inches below the perches, of matched lumber, and ventilation provided by two four-inch wooden pipes, one of which enters the box from the outside and being carried up near the ceiling overhead diffuses fresh air, while the other, starting near the dropping floor under the perches extends through the roof out of doors and thus carries off the foul air. By having the latter contain a drum-like arrangement of thin copper just above the roosts, the warmth generated by the poultry there will be communicated to the air inside of it, and a lively draft created.—The Epitomist.

PREPARING A BRIDAL OUTFIT.

Some of the Most Important Points in Selecting a Costume.

For the wedding dress select silk muslin, crepe de chine, or one of the newer weaves, liberty or duchesse satin, taffeta or peau de cygne. If of a thin fabric nothing could be more charming than the new (old) 1830 skirt gathered at the belt and having graduating tucks interspersed with bands of filmly lace and immense tucked sleeves with lingerie undersleeves of lace complete the costume. A modish traveling costume is of mixed tweed, the coat preferably in short three-quarter length and with a jaunty skirt just clearing the ground.

A dressy costume is of fine dark brown broadcloth or zebeline and is indispensable for calling, etc. It should be made on rather elaborate lines, having the skirt with short sweep and a drop shoulder Eton jacket or pleated coat smartly trimmed with touches of silk, panne velvet braid and with buttons. Then a modish storm suit or long waterproof English coat should be a part of the outfit. Have also a dainty tea gown of rose colored crepe elaborately trimmed with cream colored lace and a touch of black velvet to give character. Add several pretty dressing sacques, accordion pleated and plain, trimmed with lace, embroidery and ribbon, and a kimona of warm-hued Oriental silk. If you would have the outfit complete add one all white and one all black evening dress, an evening cloak of white cloth richly trimmed with lace, fur and embroidery, a theatre gown of crepe or soft silk, several fancy waists and an abundance of trig shirt waists. Hats, gloves, shoes, stocks, etc., to match the different costumes are necessary. And last, but not least, the lingerie, which is no small item, as it must be of the daintiest description. In addition to the regular lingerie a generous supply of black silk and a few colored petticoats are essential not forgetting some elaborate white ones for use with tea and evening gowns.—Mirror and Farmer.

Messenger Girls in Boston.

After nearly three months of service, during which they have been obliged to encounter every sort of weather condition, the messenger girls have fairly earned their right to remain in the places of the boys who went on strike last October. It was thought by some people who have been watching the experiment, and officials of the company feared a little that the girls would have to give way when the hard winter storms set in. Such has not been the case, however; in rain, in snow, in slush, and in freezing temperature the girls have been tried, and they have not been found wanting. The A. D. T. management is even more pleased with the girls than it was immediately after it had found relief from the trials and tribulations of dealing with the boys. One of the officials said to-day: "The girls have proved exceptionally satisfactory, and have more than come up to our expectations. They have stayed on in bad weather and have made good time even under the worst conditions possible."

The company now has about 130 girl messengers regularly in its employ, and the force has sifted down somewhat since it was first put to work. When the girls were first hired all ages applied and were taken on. Young girls and old women ran round town with the messages. The younger girls were stopped by the State authorities, and the older women have dropped out of their own accord, so that at the present time the average age of the girl messengers is about twenty-five years. The girls work from eight o'clock in the morning until half past five at night. After half past five the work is done by boys. Some of these boys appear in the old A. D. T. uniform, but in these cases the uniforms were owned previous to the recent trouble and the strike. The boys are also used in the day time for carrying messages to places where it would not be desirable to send girls. Although the girls are now apparently a fixture, it is doubtful if any attempt will be made to have them wear uniforms of any sort. Just at present the company is not considering that question, as it is willing to forego the uniforms for the sake of having messengers with which it is not always in trouble.—Boston Transcript.

The School For Parents.

"A writer in a Kansas City newspaper, recognizing the growing demand for amusement everywhere, ventures to invite attention to the fun there is to be got out of bringing up a baby. He goes on to show that twentieth century science has abolished colic and midnight floorwalking and most of the other annoyances which used to detract from the pleasures of parenthood," says the Saturday Evening Post.

"There is some truth in this, but if it were all true it would be a great human calamity. There are hardships of the sort that try body and soul beyond endurance; and in so far as civilization and the progress of science abolishes these it is all to the good. But if ever progress should make life too easy, progress would soon be retrogression. And of all the means to the development of character—which is the real end and aim of progress—none is comparable, at least none now in existence is comparable, to bringing up a baby—to learning sacrifice, especially self-sacrifice.

"Beyond question it is easier to bring up a baby than it used to be. The laws of mind and of body are better understood. But there still remains the peculiarities of temperament, the blunders and follies and perversities inevitable in such dense ignorance as envelops the mind of a child. These make 'raising' a family as hard as it ever was in the most important respect. And that is well."

A Business Woman's Rules.

The following little list was compiled some years ago says the Buffalo Evening News, by a young girl just starting on a business career. It has proved an invaluable help to her, she says, and so she gladly "passes it on" to any who are interested:

Be honest.
Don't worry.
Be courteous to all.
Keep your own counsel.
Don't complain about trifles.
Be loyal to your employer.
Don't ask for vacations.
Be business-like, not womanish.
Be prompt—a little ahead of time—if possible.
Be neat and attractive, but unobtrusive, in your person.
Take kindly criticism in the spirit in which it was intended.
Do the very best you can each day and every day, so that when there is a chance for promotion, you will not only be "called, but chosen."

For the Piano.

A most effective cover for the back of an upright piano was ingeniously produced by its owner from one of the old fashioned red felt table covers, stamped in black in nearly all-over design, that are still to be seen in sitting rooms of old farm houses. The black lines were carefully outlined in fine gilt cord plain, like flexible wire, and the spaces between were filled in with gay silk embroidery done in long overlapping stitch. The design of the cover was followed with not too close regularity of color, and the result was a beautiful square that was highly Japanese in effect and completely unrecognizable as to its first estate. The red felt margin was cut off and under the edge of the work was slipped a border of black moire cut in large scallops, and measuring, when finished, two inches at its broadest point.

Hats of fine thread lace will be worn.

Rough fabrics lead for spring street wear.

Light brown and purples are promised continued popularity for spring.

It seems that, to be really swell, the shirt waist must be made a size too large.

It is predicted that long and three-quarter coats are to be entirely passe in a little while.

One of the prettiest revived fashions is that of catching up lace flounces with clusters of flowers.

Many of the winter's stoles are cut square at the back, somewhat in the fashion of a sailor collar.

Coats are not so loose and baggy as they were, and even the loosest must fit well over the shoulders.

The fashionable dress skirt is made in five pleats, and measures only about three inches longer in back than in front.

The smart girl wears stiff little bands of embroidery, fastened with jeweled buttons, outside her coat sleeves.

Among the many attractive hats is a white silky zibeline round hat, the folds caught in places with small jet ornaments.

These Chinese, Japanese, Turkish, Bulgarian and Russian embroideries are creating quite an Oriental furore among us.

Flat surplice pieces of real lace in the heavier varieties appear upon many of the new evening bodices, bordering a V-shaped decolletage and crossing surplice fashion in front. The lace is broad upon the shoulders and tapers toward the points, and this shape is newer and more desirable than the cape collar.

The Little Jap Fighting Man

By RALPH D. PAINE

WHEN the allies had to fight hard at Tien-tsin to escape being whipped by despised Chinese troops, the Americans and Europeans believed what they had heard of the quality of the Japanese fighting man. They joined forces with him, rather inclined to class him as an experiment in modern warfare, they took off their hats to his courage, discipline, dash and endurance when they left him. But this campaign was not needed to prove that the "ready-made" army and navy of the Japanese was equal to any tests of actual service.

In the Chinese War one of the national heroes of Japan was in command of a tin pot of a merchant steamer which had been pressed into service as a transport, mounting a couple of rapid-fire popguns. This sailor, now Rear Admiral Kabayama, was not looking for action, but unexpectedly he found himself on the edge of the fight of the Yalu. Before he could get out of the way, his transport was cut off from the Japanese fleet and cornered under the fire of Chinese battleships and cruisers. The feeble craft seemed a hopeless insurance risk, but Captain Kabayama had no idea of surrender or inactivity. He dodged in and out of the fighting line, trying to pick a way to sea, but doing his share of the pounding whenever he got a chance. His rapid-fire guns barked incessantly. He riddled and sunk a torpedo boat that was rash enough to make for him, and banged away at battleships with amazing audacity. When a shell burst on his deck and swept away a gun crew, he ordered two of his officers to fetch their cameras and get some realistic pictures.

Another torpedo boat shot out of the ruck and let go her torpedoes at point-blank range. "Here is where we all go up in the air together," said Captain Kabayama. But the torpedo dived clean under the ship, and to show that this trifling escape did not daunt the Japanese skipper, he sent his ship full speed ahead and tried to ram the biggest Chinese battleship in the line. The quarry dodged, and, feeling that he had done his share with the limited means at his command, Kabayama worked his way through the battle and rejoined the Japanese fleet, his transport badly cut up, and many of his crew killed, but still in commission.

Vice-Admiral Togo, now commanding a squadron almost sure to be engaged in the next great naval fight, was a captain in the Chinese War. He commanded a second-class cruiser, the Naniwa, which was in more hot fighting than any other ship of the Japanese navy, and earned his title as the "Fighting Admiral." He has a high-handed way of doing things, and is not a safe man to take chances with in war. The British ship Kowshing and two others had been loaded up with troops and stores for the Chinese and sent off for Korea. When in sight of the Korean coast, the cruiser Naniwa came in sight of the convoy, and promptly hove a few shells across the bows of the Kowshing as a signal to stop and be captured. The order was obeyed, and Captain Togo signaled: "Remain where you are or take the consequences."

The Kowshing was ordered a little later to follow the cruiser, but the panic-stricken Chinese would not let the British skipper obey the command, and threatened to murder him if he did not turn tail and run for it. Captain Togo was not playing at war, and when he was disobeyed he opened up with the five guns he could bring to bear, signaling for all Europeans to leave the Kowshing. The terrified ship tried to get out of range. Captain Togo chased her, and, feeling annoyed over the situation, let go a torpedo from one of his bow tubes. Herr von Hanneken, a Prussian officer in the Chinese service, was on board the Kowshing. A few seconds after the Naniwa torpedo hissed into the sea, he relates, "the day became night. Pieces of coal, splinters of what had been the ship, columns of water, filled the air. I believe all of us leaped overboard, or were hurled skyward. Many of the crew reached land by swimming. The Japanese captain would give no aid in rescuing the Chinese. He was not at that time educated up to the humanities of warfare."

Songs are sung and stories told to this day of a Japanese sailor in the Yalu battle. While standing on the rail of his ship he was struck by a fragment of shell, fatally torn and knocked off into the sea. He rose for a moment in a whirl of bloody foam and shouted to his comrades, "Japan forever!" then sank. It was the same quality of patriotism that showed in the tale, told in broken English, by a Japanese navy lieutenant, whom an American correspondent met in Nagasaki not long ago. The young officer was in command of one of the torpedo boats which attacked in flotilla the Chinese battleships in the harbor of Wei-Hai-Wei. As all naval experts take for granted, such an attack means the destruction of most of the torpedo boat force, and success is achieved if one of them lives long enough to send its deadly weapon home. This is what happened at Wei-Hai-Wei. Said the lieutenant:

"The fire was very heavy. The two torpedo boats nearest mine were riddled and sank with all on board before they were within striking distance. We were hit many times, and had some killed and wounded. But the engines were working still, and the steering gear was not smashed, and enough of us were left to attend to these things and also to serve the torpedo tubes, so we were very lucky. It was the happiest moment of my life when we were still afloat within 600 yards of the biggest and finest battleship left in the Chinese navy. We fired two torpedoes, just an instant before a shell went through our boilers.

"Mine was the only attacking vessel left in action. My boat blew up and sank before the torpedoes were much more than out of the tubes. I went to the bottom and came up again, and while I was trying to swim out of the storm of shells I saw the battleship sinking like a stone. One torpedo had blown her bottom out. There were only four of my crew of nearly thirty found alive, but they died happy because they had helped Japan."

The immortal deed of the Japanese private who blew open the Tien-tsin gate, when it was certain that he would be blown up with it, had an earlier counterpart in as desperate a feat of valor at the siege of Ping-Yang, in the Chinese War. The Ping-Yang defenders made bloody and hard held resistance. The Japanese troops tried to storm the massive walls and the stout gate again and again, but were driven back with discouraging losses. After one retreat from the walls, a private of infantry, named Harada, remained behind, crouching under the shelter of the overhanging battlements.

The Chinese warriors within were shouting over their triumph, when Harada scaled the wall unseen and dropped into the midst of a hundred of the defenders. Before they realized who Harada was, he had shot three of them, bayoneted another, clubbed his rifle and smashed his way to the gate. It was the work of a moment to throw down the great iron bar which held the gate closed, and he flung it open for his comrades to finish the job. Harada did not rush out to join them, but held the gate with his back to the wall, until the attacking force scampered in and took the fort with bloody success. Strange to say, they found the lone private alive and still fighting, although badly cut and battered. He was decorated by the Emperor, and, in addition to the ballads made about him, he is held up to the schoolboys of Japan as the kind of citizen the country needs in her defense.

The mothers of Japan have played their part in the heroic annals of their soldier sons. When an infantry regiment was marching through an inland village on its way to the front in 1894, a woman insisted on seeing a lieutenant of the company in which her son was a private. The officer consented with reluctance, because he feared that she would plead that her only boy might be allowed to stay at home. But what she had to say and what her heart was full of was this:

"I have come to thank you for your kindness to my son, and to ask you to see that he does his duty well. I am a widow, and he is my only son, but I have told him that when he goes into battle he must be quite willing and ready to die for his Emperor and his country. I have told him, too, that I shall dies of shame if he disgraces himself as a coward."

Another mother, whose son was her sole support, was told that her son must return to the colors when the recent mobilization was ordered, in preparation for war with Russia.

"The duty to the flag," she said, "comes before the lesser duties to the home. Though I should die of starvation, you must not hesitate. You must think of your country, not of me!"—Collier's Weekly.

Humboldt's Emerald Sold at Auction.

"A gigantic emerald" is the title which the auctioneer in his catalogue bestowed upon a precious stone just sold at an art auction in Berlin. It once belonged to Czar Nicholas I. of Russia, who presented it to the famous explorer Humboldt. It is four inches long and two and four-tenths inches in diameter, and is cut on four sides, the remaining sides being rough. The setting is curious and artistic. The precious stone is embedded in a silver rock, around which seven little gnomes are grouped, cutting the rock with their axes. This work of art rests on a pedestal of ebony, decorated with silver. The price it brought at the auction—$500—was considered very moderate.

Voices Made to Order.

Voices made to order are the latest things in surgery. Actual operations have demonstrated that the larynx, or vocal box, can be successfully removed and the patient may recover. In order to restore speech to the patient an artificial larynx and vocal chords are provided. The voice artificially produced is incapable of inflection, but, although it is a monotone, the patient is perfectly able to carry on a conversation.

SPECIAL OFFER.

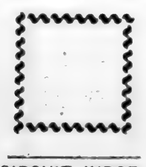
The Yellow Jacket, published biweekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?



CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Hon. T. Scott Sayre, who is a candidate for judge of this circuit, formerly lived in Chilton county at Verbena. About ten years of his life were spent there and he has many fond recollections of Chilton county and his old friends. Those of our readers who participate in the democratic primary on April 11th will make no mistake when they vote for T. Scott Sayre.

The coldest winter on record is coming to an end in New York.

King Edward held the first levee this year in the throne room of St. James palace Monday. The function was unusually largely attended.

A Virginia kitchen, in which the food values of the sweet potato will be demonstrated, will be a restaurant feature at the world's fair.

The Southern Normal university, of Huntington, Tenn., will send seventy-five cadets to the world's fair to camp from June 27th to July 6th, inclusive.

A certified copy of the articles of incorporation of the Florida Lumber company were filed for record in the office of the secretary of state. The object of the corporation, which is organized under the laws of Illinois, is to manufacture and deal in lumber. The company is capitalized at $50,000. Its principal place of business is to be in Montgomery.

A terrific combat between a bull and a horse occurred on the farm of Edward Hoopes, near Westchester, Pa., and the former proved the victor. It was a battle to the death, and waged furiously for a time. Finally the bull caught the breast of the horse with its horns and administered a terrible rip, resulting in the death of the latter. The combat occurred in the barn yard, and those who witnessed it say that the sight was a terrifying one.

There seems to be a popular misapprehension regarding the sales of popular novels. It is stated on good authority that "David Harum" still leads the list with 727,000 copies sold. Five books are credited with sales of 400,000 copies, six with 200,000, and thirteen others with more than 100,000. Within the past five years it is estimated that 7,500 novels have been issued in the United States and yet the percentage of books which command a sale of more than 10,000 copies is painfully small.

COOPER.

A few words in regard to the political situation in this county as seen from a conservative standpoint. First, the demmies are going all over the county asking the populists to vote for them, knowing that they can't be elected without their votes, and I want to show you right here that they have the same political disregard for populists that they had ten years ago. Listen to A. C. Smith's utterances at Cooper on February 29th. He said: "I am the only one of the candidates that has always voted the democratic ticket." Thereby conveying the impression that he should be preferred in the primary over Deason and Adams because he had always been with the democrats in all their fraudulent practices. But, no; we will all stay away from their primary. I notice a piece in the Banner signed M. A. Kilgore, in which he poses as the great political adviser and republican buster of this county. Who is Kilgore? Why he is the one that quit the democratic party on account of their rascality, and he used the negro as a base for his contention: then the populists reluctantly elected him sheriff, for which they have been harshly criticised in public and private since. But, oh, where is he now? Sitting in the councils of a faction that quit the regular organization because the regulars would not let the negro dominate, and he calls them black and tan. If it takes two whites and one black to constitute black and tan, he has the right name. I've talked with some of this B. and T. committee, and all except one says they are in favor of putting out a black and tan ticket. I don't see any use for but two tickets in this county, as four-fifths of the qualified voters are populists and lily white republicans. My recollection is that the democrats cast about 700 votes, so we can give them Kilgore and the rest of the black and tans and then elect our ticket by a good majority. Populists, stick to your principles; they are the same today they were ten years ago, and we will elect our ticket in spite of the democrats and their allies. These are my sentiments as a conservative populist. VOTER.

JEMISON.

Editor Union: Just a few words to your readers. To commence with, I hope we will have a good crowd out next Tuesday at Clanton. I am sure we will have some good speaker from outside the county; if Captain Goodwyn can't come. I've invited some others. I hope we will have some representative men from each beat to advise with the committee in arranging for the coming campaign. I believe the thing to do is to find out what a majority of our people want to do, and then all go together. I am, for one, willing to abide by a majority of our voters or their wish. Some few who have deserted us are howling for us to go into the democratic primary. Just stop for one moment and think where we would have been if we had followed the advice of these fellows; one time advised not to vote the democratic ticket under any conditions, and said such men as Mr. Honeycutt, who had been elected on our ticket and turned while in office, was not worthy of the respect of the people who had elected him, much less their support. And while I do not approve of Mr. Honeycutt's action, who has acted the most honorable of the two? Mr. Honeycutt never went into a convention and helped to nominate a ticket and then ran away and joined the other crowd and try to defeat it. But suppose we had followed the advice of these selfish individuals? We would have been in the fix of the fellow who would not if he could, who could not if he would, and damned if he did, and cursed if he don't. Why, we would have been out once and never back again. It is asking a good deal for 1,000 white men to be asked to sacrifice their manhood to suit one man, give up their political opinions for a few to get office. The sacrifice is too great. Let us all meet and confer together and do what is best for our county, and all stand together as we have done in the past, and there is no doubt about the election of our ticket. The people of Chilton are hard to fool. Very respectfully,

L. H. REYNOLDS.

CLANTON, ALA.

March 3, 1904

Editor Union—Brother W. H. Conway, lecturer of Chilton County Farmers' Alliance, has out some appointments in the county for the purpose of lecturing and reorganizing the Alliance, and it is greatly to be hoped there will be good assemblages to meet him at each appointment, being satisfied they will be pleased and well entertained. Any one who has ever read the constitution, by-laws and principles of the Alliance can not object to one single proposition therein. It seeks to build up a better spirit among neighbors, to elevate humanity and not to tear down or destroy; it seeks to bring about a betterment of the agricultural class without antagonizing any other calling, and to allay prejudice and to make us more honorable and worthy citizens. The alliance in its day did more to suppress the use of intoxicating beverages than every prohibition movement that has been made, and to suppress vulgar and profane language. There is no line in the constitution and by-laws that says "You shall not swear," or "You shall not drink intoxicating liquor," but the alliance seeks by precept to lead the brother to higher and nobler moral plane. Compare the times now with that of years ago and I am convinced you will admit there is more work for our sheriff and courts, more illicit liquor, blind tigers, profanity and other vices than it was in those days. Co-operation is dead; it is every man for himself. 'Twas not so in bygone days. Now every producer works off his produce for himself without regard to counsel with his fellow man. "In unity is strength" is ignored. In no place does the alliance say you shall be a Baptist or Methodist or any other denomination; but many is the time the heart of the writer has been full to overflowing when assembled around the alliance altar while our worthy chaplain would invoke the blessings of our Heavenly Father. The alliance in no place says you must vote a populist or a democratic ticket, but you are assured before you take upon yourself the alliance obligation that it will in no way interfere with your religious or political views. All parties and creeds meet in the alliance as brothers, and it seeks to eliminate from its discussions any and all matter that would mar the feeling of any class or party. He is a poor and selfish creature who would try to prostitute the alliance and its noble principles to his own selfish interest, and the writer wishes to say to his democratic friends that these appointments are not desired or intended to have any bearing or effect on any political primaries or election, though some of its members may possibly become candidates for official positions, they must not expect the alliance indorsement, but go before the voters strictly on their own merits as to their usefulness and capacity for the discharge of their several duties. The competent and useful citizen will be recognized by his fellow men and should not need the indorsement of the alliance to elect him. "Merit seldom fails of recognition." In conclusion, I earnestly ask all without regard to party or creed, and especially the ladies, to come out at Brother Conway's appointments and hear him. He is now giving his time to this work and does not know whether he will ever receive any pecuniary compensation for his services, but is doing this for pure love of the order and his earnest desire to help his fellow men. Brethren, my heart is full of love for the alliance and its teachings, and the happiest days were when I filled the humble position of secretary for six years to the county alliance. I would that all could come into the order and feel as I do about it.

Yours fraternally.

ALEX G. DAKE.

MARS HILL.

A little space in our valuable paper for a few words to let you all know that we are not dead up this way. We are busy preparing for another crop and are looking forward to our campaign. Politics is quiet here at present, for the reason that the people up here all vote one way, anyway. I see in your last week's issue a list of names suggested for office, and we were glad to see that our good and worthy brother, Rev. J. H. Thomas' name, was mentioned for tax collector, and if we could prevail on him to run we would be more than glad to support him, as we know him and he would fill the office with credit, for we have had him for our beloved pastor for two years and tried to get him this year, but his time being filled up we failed. We have no fight to make against Brother Hubbard, but we are not in favor of putting a man in office and keeping him there. We think the old officers ought to step down and out and give some other good man a chance, but I would like to hear from some others on this subject. We failed to get Brother Thomas to preach for us. We know he can't preach for everybody, but he could collect tax from everybody. So let us have him. The health of our community is very good at present. Brother F. M. Langstone is improving slowly. Best wishes to all and success to the UNION.

YELLOW JACKET.

PLEASANT GROVE.

To the Populists of Chilton County:

What do you think of the propositions the democrats are making to some of the members of our executive committee? Do you think that we can afford to accept such offers? And if we were to join in with them and divide the ticket and have but the one ticket, what is the use of having a primary, or general election, either? It would be the populist and democratic committees electing our county officers and not the people. Therefore I bitterly object to any such measure, and I shall not vote any ticket headed with a Judas; or in other words, one who has tried to betray the populist party into the hands of the sinful democrats. I do not know whether they promised him 30 pieces of silver or an office, but there is one thing I do know: he is not so generous hearted as old Dives was when he lifted up his eyes in hell and saw Lazarus afar off in Abraham's bosom. Dives then wanted Abraham to send Lazarus back to the world and warn his brothers against coming to this awful hell; but this man I speak of as Judas, he is now in the democratic party, and realizing his awful condition, he does not do like unto Dives and try to warn the rest of the populists, but says "Come on, boys, into our primary April 11th; it is the best thing to do." But I say, populists, stay out of the democratic primary; it is no place for us. VOX.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Editor Union—Please publish this for me. I am not a politician in the general sense of the word, but I am a citizen and as such I feel bound to use my influence just as any other Christian man, for the good of my country. In becoming a minister I did not forget my citizenship. According to Webster, "A politician is one versed or experienced in the science of government." In this sense it would be well for every minister to be a politician. Our word, politics, comes from the Greek word "polites," which means citizen. Paul said to the assembled Sanhedrim, "In all good conscience have I been a citizen before God unto this day."—Acts xxiii, 1. A minister is a Christian man who has been called of God to preach the gospel. He should not shun to declare the whole counsel of God; he should reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. We should teach our people as did Paul to act citizens according to the gospel of Jesus Christ. But you say that would ruin the professional politician, whose chief concern is to reach some office, it does not matter how they get it. We have men in Chilton who can fill the offices in the gift of the people in a better way than to be bound to any political party. The officer is the servant of the people and should seek to do his whole duty to all alike, and we ought to preach this to them and pray for good men to be elected, and then vote according to the way we pray. Some of our people seem to think that our preachers ought not to say anything about politics, nor be in the campaign, and that we ought to play "shut mouth" on all these lines. But, brother preachers, let us condemn fraud in all of its ways. In my judgment the preacher should hold his citizenship in a clean conscience and use his influence to the interest of all his people. If we are ministers of the gospel we must know the law or we can't condemn evil as we should, and this can best be done in politics, for politics is the foundation of the moral law and civilization. If I know what preaching is for, it is to civilize and Christianize our country, and if this is it then let us vote for Christian men and talk against the profaner and whisky dealer or drinker. This we can do if we will. So I say, work, boys and let us have the best set of officers next term that we have ever had. I believe the populists will do the right thing on the 15th and put out our best men. Yours truly,

J. H. THOMAS.

Thorsby, Ala., March 7, 1904.

Editor Union: By way of comment on Faithful Observer's letter from Coopers last week on the Kolb-Adams-Smith compound, well, I suppose Smith was just put in for ballast; but Kolb and Adams! I do think that any one to take that dose would have to hold his nose and shut his eyes, either populist or democrat, and then it would seem a willful attempt at suicide.

I used to wonder why the good Lord permitted Kolb and Adams to be so ruthlessly swindled out of the offices to which they were elected, but time, the great interpreter, has shown us that the Lord knew best and allowed the devil to beat himself at his own game, for the Lord did not want two such pieces of timber in the ship of state.

Well, let us see if we can't throw some light on the seeming puzzle of Adams' assertion that he was right in 1898, and that he is right now. Now, reader, if you try to harmonize the assertions with consistency of principal and political rectitude, you are left, but when you consider that he was "right" then (in 1898) after office you see that Adams is telling no lie, so let us be careful and not accuse the man of something of which he is not guilty (for the Lord knows Adams will have enough to answer for yet), and again, Observer rather curtly criticised him for bragging on himself as making the best judge, etc. Now to accept that literally would be enough to puke a horse, but is not every one sufficiently aware of the flighty, loosy condition of the judge's mind to account for such ribald statements? For only a short while ago he came out in print declaring himself done with the "tricks of politics," and intended to devote the rest of his life in serving the Lord. So let's use the mantle of charity and cover a multitude of sins. But after all why should we waste ammunition on dead ducks and imbeciles? I suppose the best excuse is "that the best of men, like a little fun now and then."

Now to all populists, especially those who do not keep up with the times, we wish to assure you that there will be a state and national populist ticket out this year, and all who believe in populist doctrine will have a chance to vote as they like. So all this slush about there being no course for a man but to go either to the democratic or republican parties is—well, it's just a political lie, and every man can vote as he thinks best when it comes to the state and national ticket; but here in the country the whole question is focused between the rule of the people on one hand and the rule of political tricksters on the other, and the people will rule.

PLEASANT GROVE.

It makes our heart glad to see so many in our county fighting for prosperity. "A burnt child dreads the fire." Several years ago we got burnt very bad by Grover Cleveland and other democrats and we dread the fire ever since. Now, friends, if you want soup houses, go ahead and vote the democratic ticket, and you will have mills shut down and lots of men out of work. The county dems have been out in the race for some time. Now let all us pops come together on the second round and catch the fox they have been running so long until their tongues hang out. Success to the UNION. NEMO.

MAPLE SPRINGS.

There was preaching in our church Sunday by the pastor. Mr. Dupree joined by letter, and the hand of fellowship was withdrawn from a member for going to a party. Shirley Davis has got the measles and any one that has not had them can go over there and get them well. There were a lot of our boys kept from going to see their best girls on account of the rain. Farmers are working and hoping for a good crop and 20c. Tom Wilson is having bad luck with his geese; he lost one the other day.

LIBERTY HILL.

I am glad to say that all the sick people in this community are improving, for which we are thankful. W M. Wood has planted corn already. R. L. Marcus and wife, of Clanton, visited her parents here Sunday.

OLD MAID.

MACEDONIA.

Everything lovely and quiet. Log rollings are going on and that means good dinners. Some complaints of whooping cough among the children. Professor Martin has a flourishing school here. Will Merchant was examining his seed potatoes and put his hand in the bank, and thought they were rotten, so gave his children permission to tear down the bank, supposing the potatoes were all rotten; when, lo, instead of rotten potatoes, he had placed his hand on, it was a rattlesnake. What a change in the weather. It seemed last week as if winter had kissed summer goodby, but we are shivering again. As the familiar saying is, "I'll ring off."

"GUESS WHO."

RANDOLPH.

The sad intelligence has just reached us of the death of Mr. Harrison Driver. The writer had known Mr. Driver for a long time. He was an honest man, liberal hearted, a friend to the poor. During all our long acquaintance with Mr. Driver we never heard him speak an unkind word; his conversation was always calm and chaste. He was a true man. We have been impressed in hearing him allude to his mother in a most touching manner. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist church, but had a kind regard for members of other religious denominations, though true to his convictions. He was highly respected in his community near Pleasant Grove, where his remains were laid to rest on the 4th inst. A FRIEND.

HUBBARD.

People believe that the success of certain political parties have a bearing on business prosperity, and admitting that this is true, then to what party is due the praise for the phenomenal business prosperity now enjoyed by people of Chilton county, and all the United States as well? We unhesitatingly say it is due to the republican party. Surely no farmer, merchant, teacher, physician, preacher or even the democratic candidates in Chilton would like to exchange the present for the squally times of a few years past. Why, go to any gathering now and you find the people well dressed, far better than they were a few years ago, when Captain Kolb was going over Alabama denouncing organized democracy in thunder tones. We have noticed that business has been improving ever since the lamented McKinley was first elected, and some of us can remember the administration of Garfield, when the people were prosperous and happy. Now, people again are happy, building new houses, buying buggies and wagons, have better schools, improve their farms, able to pay the doctor and read more papers and magazines. Then, has any party except the republican party ever given us such abundant business prosperity? We answer, No, indeed no. Then on what grounds can any one plead for democracy? Where are any SUBSTANTIAL hopes held out by the democrats to improve the present prosperous business conditions? No wonder some people are anxious for the national republican administration to remain in power. While these same people will vote for a democratic administration in Alabama, yet it seems to us that if republicanism is good for the people in New York, it would be good for the people in Alabama. The populists have abundant cause for encouragement; they can elect their candidates in Chilton county, and if there were no populists outside of this county they would still be in as good condition as in the past, because they have never been PERMITTED to place any candidate in state office when elected, so the populists are not losing anything. In conclusion, if political parties have an influence on business, we should be grateful to the republican party for our present prosperity. "FAIR PLAY."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for judge of the 15th judicial circuit, subject to the action of the democratic primaries to be held on April 11th, 1904.

CAMEL CARAVANS IN ASIATIC RUSSIA

Still an Important Factor in Transportation.

RUSSIA'S railroads in Asia have naturally taken the place of the camel, ox and mule as carriers of freight, and the horse for post and passenger service. This, however, applies only to the immediate line of railway communication. Apart from that the railroads have no more displaced their predecessors than those of America and Europe have eliminated the horse. At station after station on the Siberian Railway, especially at prominent centres like Omsk, in the Lake Baikal region, and in Manchuria, the camels still line up to contribute their loads of freight. In fact, under any unusual pressure at the present time on the single track Siberian road it would rather be the railroad that would break down; and it is realized that some years must elapse before this main artery of communication between St. Petersburg and the Pacific is in anything like efficient condition for extraordinary requirements such as a war would involve. And the greater the number of Russian troops messed in Eastern Asia the more serious would be any breakdown of the railroad through the carrying away of bridges by floods, such as has already occurred, or by interruption from other causes.

Away from the railroads the horse-drawn tarantass and telega are employed for fast traveling, and the ox, camel or mule as draught animals and beasts of burden. On miry roads the camel, with its broad, padded foot, instead of hoof, flounders about and makes too slow progress to be practicable. But in the dry and open desert and on the more or less barren steppe it is supreme both as a pack animal and for drawing loads. Whether alone or harnessed to the tarantass or other vehicle neither ox nor horse can then compete with it. And this region where it is alone or primarily available extends throughout a large portion of Central Asia and over extensive tracts of country from the Pacific to the Mediterranean.

The camel caravans of Eastern Asia have been noted by writers from the time when the Venetian traveler, Marco Polo, about the year 1280, spent over twenty years in China. In the entertaining narrative of his travels, this predecessor of Columbus in discovering new worlds gives us the result of personal observations made in his long journey from Venice to Kambalu (Pekin) by way of Armenia, Persia and Central Asian camel caravans. For present day information, the many records given by travelers and missionaries to those regions, the data respecting the number of camels and other animals that are furnished by the Russian industrial census, and the official reports of that government on the Siberian Railway, throw many side lights on the subject of transportation and camel service in Central Asia and the far East. In case of war, the question of the supply of camels may rise into sudden importance; and if, in the unprovoked aggressions and encroachments of Russia, China should join Japan, this question would assume still greater importance.

The camel is enabled to stand protracted marches through such regions by having, in addition to the four stomachs of cattle and other ruminating animals, a storage, or reserve supply of solid nutriment in its hump or humps, and a reserve of liquid in a series of internal water pouches. These reserve sources of supply, somewhat like storage battery systems of transportation, render the camel, within certain limits, independent until recharged. The humps, or reservoirs of solid nutriment, are mere masses of fat. They do not affect the vertebra, which is straight as in the horse or ox. The humps fatten out while at pasture, and diminish steadily in size during privation on the desert. Camel drivers are careful to see that the humps are well distended before undertaking any long journey.

For the purpose of liquid sustenance, the camel is equipped with a series of little pouches, like small flasks, about three inches wide and deep, on the walls of the paunch, or first stomach. These pouches admit water when the animal drinks, retain it by powerful sphincter muscles at their orifices until nature calls for it. The camel is said to drink "fifty, sixty, or even a hundred pounds weight" of water at one time. It will then go from three to five days without a fresh supply. Instances are cited of even fifteen days' abstinence.

Winter is the great carrying season, and spring to a less extent. The animals often march night after night crunching the frozen snow under their broad feet. At camping time they are turned loose to pick up any stalks of grass or twigs of bushes that rise above the snow. They will thrive on the leaves and branches of the willow and birch, and get along on sticks and twigs that look about as nourishing as an umbrella. After browsing on this scanty sustenance they huddle together on a patch cleared of snow, and munch the cud as solemnly as if they had had a full meal.

The camel, however, has its disadvantages as a means of transportation. With the heat of summer, the animals in China and Central Asia are driven to the grassy plains, where they do nothing but eat grass, chew the cud, fatten, and distend their humps for the following season's work. In spring all camels look ragged, but with the warm weather the wool begins to drop off, until by midsummer the animal is bare. By October, however, the new wool has grown, and the animals come from the pastures with massive humps, distended sides, and a fine new covering of hair.

Although apparently robust, they are delicate animals. On this account the Mongols and Chinese do not comb or shear their animals, as they do their sheep. Most of the wool is in consequence lost. Only the long fleece under the neck is cut when spring becomes warm. A shorn camel shivers in the wind, his vitality sinks, and he becomes useless. The hair has therefore to be collected day by day with painstaking labor, as it drops off or is about to drop off. The value of this wool has risen of late years, owing to its purchase in large quantities for exportation. The Chinese use it in the manufacture of clothing, carpets and rugs. In Europe and America it is employed for making shawls, carpets, underclothing, cloths for straining oils, and also for machine belting, being found to be equal, if not superior, for these purposes to the vegetable fibres previously used. In Newark is located the only factory in America making belting of this material, though in Great Britain and Germany its utilization for this purpose has been very largely developed.

The camel of Asiatic Russia and China is markedly different to that found in Turkey and Egypt. It is the two-humped species, Camelus bactrianus—the Persian breed known to the Arabs as "Bakhtec" or "Bactrian," after the ancient province or kingdom of Bactria, whose capital is now represented by the town of Balka, in Afghanistan; whereas the patriarchal beast of Syria, Arabia, Egypt and Africa is the single-humped species, the Arabian camel, Camelus dromedarius. The Arabian camel is the swifter; the Mongolian, or Bactrian, camel the larger.

Must Keep Her Father's Promise.

Tatyana Yussopow, an unusually handsome Kirghiz girl of seventeen, presented herself, a few days ago, before the Presiding Judge at the District Court in Astrakhan with the following prayer:

As an infant of five years she had been betrothed by her father to the ten-year-old son of a neighbor, the father acting according to Kirghiz custom. The young man now claims his bride, and although the latter loves another young tribesman she is held by both parent and bridegroom to her infantile betrothal. The weeping girl prayed the Judge to extend to her the right of Russian law to choose her own husband.

After a careful reference to the code the Judge ruled that as the Russian law gave the fullest freedom of religious and moral rites and customs to the non-orthodox subjects of the Czar the father's power was paramount, and the disconsolate girl's appeal was refused. —London Daily Mail.

"Kill More Pigs."

A characteristic incident in which George Francis Train figured occurred in Omaha once when he was lecturing in the Farnam Street Theatre, showing the alertness of his mind and his power to condense a great problem in a phrase of three words. The occasion referred to was at a time when the South Omaha packing houses had been operating for a period of several years. Omaha had high ambitions, and hoped to succeed Kansas City as the second pork packing centre in the United States and the world, but didn't know just how to go at it. While Mr. Train was speaking some one in the audience interrupted him with the question, "What shall we do to make Omaha the second pork packing point?" or words of similar effect. Quick as a flash, and without a moment's hesitation, Mr. Train replied, "Kill more pigs." Here was a great truth in a nutshell.—Omaha World-Herald.

Decadence of Quarantine.

Perhaps the very latest triumph of preventive medicine is the coming disappearance of quarantine. By the provisions of the International Sanitary Conference, signed by twenty powers, quarantine has been reduced to at most five days—so that its etymology is now of only historical interest. It is quite certain that these five days will soon also disappear. Modern science can dispense with the old blind method, since it knows the whereabouts of the bacteria that are to be feared. Hence it is required by this convention that every rat on a plague-infested ship must be destroyed within forty-eight hours of its arrival at a port. Readers know the part that rats play—victims themselves—in the dissemination of a disease which it is safe to say, remembering recent instances, will never again be able to survive in Europe.—London Mail.

Three in Chinese.

Religious superstition asserts itself in Chinese architecture, and the universal sacredness of the numerals three and nine is shown in the arrangement of temple doors. There is a triple gateway to each of the halls of the imperial palace, and the same order prevails at the Ming tombs, and the sacred person of the emperor when he was in his Pekin home could only be approached, even by the highest officials, after three times three prostrations. The Temple of Heaven has a triple roof, a triple marble staircase, and all its mystic symbolism points either to three or its multiples.

Potato and Pepper Salad—Boil four potatoes until tender; cut a green pepper in half, take out the seeds and chop the pepper fine; mix thoroughly; pour over one-fourth cupful of vinegar, to which is added half a teaspoonful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of water, then pour over all two tablespoonfuls of oil or melted butter.

Hominy Cakes—Mix one cupful of cold boiled hominy with the yolks of two eggs, one-fourth cup of milk, half a cup of flour; beat the whites of the eggs, then add them to the hominy with one level teaspoonful of baking powder; beat thoroughly and bake on a hot griddle; serve with sugar and butter or with maple syrup.

Stewed Mushrooms—Clean the mushrooms; put them in the chafing dish with a little boiling water; let simmer five minutes; rub a little flour in a little cold water and stir until smooth; then add it to the mushrooms and stir carefully until thickened; season with salt and pepper and add one-third cupful of cream; serve on buttered toast.

Rice Gems—Beat two eggs until very light; add to them one pint of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of Indian meal, one tablespoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of butter, melted; one cup of boiled rice and three level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; pour into greased gem pans and bake in a quick oven twenty-five minutes; serve very hot.

Cheese Drops—Put three-fourths of a cupful of water in a small pan; when it is boiling add one tablespoonful of butter and three heaping tablespoonfuls of flour; stir this very rapidly; when a thick paste remove it from the fire and add two eggs unbeaten, one by one, beating well after adding each; drop the dough in lumps from the teaspoon on a buttered pan; brush them over with beaten egg and sprinkle thickly with grated cheese and dust with cayenne pepper; put in a rather quick oven and bake fifteen minutes; serve hot.

Cream of Green Peas—To a can of green peas, less half a cupful, add three cupfuls of chicken broth, or a rich stock of any kind, and simmer together about fifteen minutes. Melt a fourth cupful of butter; when bubbling, add a fourth of a cup of flour; stir over the fire until well blended, then add the peas and let boil a few minutes. Rub the mixture through a sieve, return to the original kettle, and, when boiling well, add the half a cupful of peas which had been reserved, three cupfuls of hot milk and salt and pepper to season. When the boiling point is again reached, stir in lightly a cupful of whipped cream, and serve at once with croutons or wafers. This is a delicious soup, appropriate equally for either ordinary or formal occasions.—What To Eat.

The greatest care should be taken to thoroughly air a sleeping room in which gas has been burning during the evening before the room is slept in, as it is well known that a gas burner is a great consumer of oxygen.

A formula for stopping one's hair from falling that can be made at home by simply buying the ingredients and then blending them is made by taking an ounce of Jamaica bay rum, one and one-half ounces of cocoanut oil, two and one-fourth drams of nux vomica and twenty drops of oil of bergamot. Use this to massage the scalp with in a rotary motion, with the tips of the fingers.

Does every one who lives in steam-heated rooms know the benefit of bowls of water kept standing on the radiator? Every radiator in the house should have its bowl, a low, wide one for preference, and the water should be renewed every morning. The atmosphere is made moist and fresh, plants flourish, and the family temper is generally improved. The bowls may be of coarse but artistic pottery, or of brass. Neither need be expensive.

Walnut cookies are old-time favorites with children. Allow one cup of butter, one and a half cupfuls of sugar, three eggs and one cupful of flour mixed with two cupfuls of chopped walnut meats. Cream the butter and sugar, and add the eggs and floured nuts. Lastly, stir in one and a half cupfuls of flour into which has been sifted a teaspoonful of baking powder. Drop on a buttered sheet, allowing room for spreading, decorating the top of each cookie with half a nut meat and a sprinkle of granulated sugar.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

A DISCOURSE ENTITLED "CHRISTIANS OUTSIDE THE CHURCH".

The Rev. Robert MacDonald Expresses the View That to Be a Believer in Christ Is Not Different From Being a Believer in Man.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—"Christians outside the Church" was the subject of the sermon Sunday morning by the Rev. Robert MacDonald, pastor of the Washington Avenue Baptist Church. It was the first of a series of five sermons. The text was from John x: 16: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." Mr. MacDonald said:

So important and many sided a subject as this must be looked at from more than one view point. Numberless are the questions to be considered. Numberless the opinions favorable and unfavorable, true and false, to be confirmed in these sermons or repudiated. Numberless the people interested in so practical and personal a question, some of whom love the church better than life; others of whom hate the church more than any other institution in existence; some who trace their loftiest aspirations, their deepest motives, their holiest desires back to her as a fond mother who lives to nourish her children with her own rich life; others who have never received the least benefit therefrom, of which they are conscious and boldly assert that little benefit to humanity ever emerged from her portals. Some go so far as to make the church synonymous with Christ's kingdom, and maintain that to be a member of the one is to be a member of the other, and consequently yield to her a fanatical reverence. Others swing clear to the other extreme and consider the church nothing better than the product of a jealous rivalry for pre-eminence over other institutions of earth, else the expression in wood and stone of overwrought sensibilities. Therefore, the monument of a most irrational superstition. While an innumerable many identify themselves with the church because they believe it to be a beneficent institution ordained of God, without which the world would be morally and spiritually impoverished, and through which the spirit is working for the redemption of humanity, in which divine strength can be had for the ills of life.

I desire that our starting point in these discussions should be in favor of religious toleration. As love is the centre of the Christian system, so must it be the motive in every church claiming to be a Christian church. As Christ our Master was tolerant of and charitable toward those who were not numbered among the twelve disciples and forty apostles, so must we as His followers be tolerant in thought, word, act, to those not of our number, and outside our communion. There is greater need of toleration to-day than at any previous period of the world's history. The church of to-day is more advanced than the church of yesterday. Its intelligence is greater; its light clearer; its affinity with the Holy Spirit more personal; its hold upon the cross of Christ, that power of redemptive love, sacrificing itself even unto death, stronger. The church of the twentieth century ought to be, and shame upon us if it is not, more spiritual than the church of the thirteenth century, or even than the church of the nineteenth century.

But not only in view of our superior spiritual enlightenment, also in view of our peculiarly complex state of living should we be tolerant. It is the age of differentiation and of classification. Every significant fact of life has been forced to submit to division and subdivision to an amazing extent. Look, for instance, at education. Trace it through the modern university curriculum. Contrast it with the most comprehensive collegiate institution of a century ago. You are overwhelmed with the multitudinous departments, and subdepartments and branches of instruction, and professional chairs. All these necessary, you say, to educate the youth. To adequately impart knowledge, to meet the ever increasing intellectual demand? Yes. The renaissance that called Europe from its dark ages of intellectual slumber has not yet spent its force. Measure the term medicine, or surgery with the imposing stature of the general practitioner of twenty years ago. The stature is no longer imposing. The specialist of a single bodily function is more imposing now. And for the human body the work of the one has been divided into the skill of the hundreds and each unit in the vast aggregate is more authoritative than the one. The term philosophy no longer recognizes the old vague divisions of moral and intellectual. Each division has been differentiated, and each differentiation suggests to the mind content and comprehensiveness, richer and more compact than the original classification from which it sprang. Metaphysics, theism, idealism, empiricism, economics, sociology, psychology, biology, and many more are the terms now familiar to our thought. And how vast the field of consciousness covered by any one of these significant terms. Economics, a very modern term for instance postulates for us; the land question; the tenement house problem, the theory of wealth, industrial organization, all socialistic and communistic relation.

The same in jurisprudence, in commerce and trade, in everything of worth. The difference between the big department store and the little trader illustrates the idea. Yet how surprised we are that we should have wandered religiously far afield from the primitive apostolic church, with our highly differentiated credal and ritual expressions, our numerous ecclesiastical orders, our multiplicity of organization. Bless you, it only shows we are alive and growing and anxious to apply the gospel of Jesus to all sorts and conditions of men. The worldly minded claim that denominationalism is distracting and sigh for a Christian unity that will swallow up all religious divisions. But, believe me, denominationalism makes more for the glory of Christianity than for its shame. The only shame about it all is that denominationalism at times nurtures a spirit of Phariseeism that sees no God in any other division of the Christian fold than its own. It has been only a few years since the medical students of Harvard fellowshipped the aspirant for veterinary honors. The term "horse doctor" was the term of salutation. The veterinary student, as the student of dentistry, was occupied with such inferior subject matter. Yes, but necessary subject matter. So of the Angelican churches and the non-conformists of England. The one is poor stuff to the other, tolerated only at the point of taxation to support their schools. Similar intolerance was felt toward the great Booth movement in America by all the churches, because that movement ignored their cut and dried ecclesiastical methods and brought into requisition the public square and the secular hall if by any means they might save some the churches could not reach. The same intolerance is now characterizing us toward that growing, so called, Christian Science movement. When will we see the "powers for good" that are ordained of God? When will we believe that any movement, however erroneous in nineteen points of test, if adapted in its twentieth point unto the blessing of men, is worthy of our tolerance, even our sympathetic regard.

Even religious bodies quarrel among themselves in defining orthodoxy, and denominational respectability, instead of praying together for the salvation of the world. No wonder Christians outside the church pass by on the other side of the road when Christians inside the church forget the purpose of their existence. The thumbscrew, rack, fagot and stake are looked back upon as relics of a barbaric age, but their spirit still lives. Every one of the leading denominations have within ten years either persecuted, else made it very unpleasant for some intrepid thinker who saw more clearly and spoke more fearlessly than the rank and file. The Methodist Church in our leading New England city is to-day exalting the spirit of the Pharisees instead of the spirit of the Wesleys in trying to excommunicate its leading scholar, just as Presbyterianism a few years ago in persecuting its chief scholar went back dangerously near the standard of 350 years ago, raised by its illustrious ancestor, John Calvin, who in 1553 burned Servetus at the stake in Geneva for doubting the equality of the persons of "the Trinity" and the validity of infant baptism. Christ dealt more lovingly with heretics. To Thomas He unveiled His side and loved him into the necessary belief. Phariseeism, on the other hand, crucified Christ and stoned Stephen to death. Loving as brethren those within the church; tolerant as Christians toward those without is the ideal that should rule.

How refreshing to reflect upon such a passage of Scripture as that which stands at the head of this sermon. It is a plea for religious toleration and sets before us a standard of religious liberty it would be well to live up to. We are so inclined to become narrowed in our views of truth; we are so prone to live under the shelter of some creed that the vistas of truth stretching ahead of us everywhere become narrowed and hidden, and before we are aware of it the peculiar dogma we cherish or the certain fact we advocate is magnified into identification with the truth itself. There is at least danger here. Thus, how needful to be often carried out into the broad field the Gospel opens up. Look at the scene revealed here. Jesus is having another of His oft-recurring talks with the Pharisees; but, as of old, they do not understand Him. He is a fanatic, or at best, a stubborn partisan, who, while professing to lead them into larger freedom, seems only to break up their honored institutions. So this peculiar saying falls from His lips. As He speaks how precious the outlook. There He leads His followers through the old loved fields, out under the blue sky, their life and His identified, bound together by a common fidelity of truth. But even this freedom seems narrow in view of what is yet to come. These are My sheep, He says, and for them I lay down My life; but also other sheep I have which are not of this fold, and as we contemplate the words, the range of our vision is extended, the fields through which they pass widen, the visible horizon that hemmed us in lifts, the blue dome of the heavens expands until we see all truth loving souls everywhere, known by many a different name, coming in as the sheep fold opens to receive them. And we turn our steps homeward, resolving in future to be more tolerant for the Master's sake.

A few weeks ago an attendant upon our church, a lover of truth, a believer in Christ, but who had never made an open profession of religion, asked me what I thought constituted a Christian, and if I did not think it meant to be a church member, and a Baptist Church member. It was that earnest question that called forth these sermons. What constitutes a Christian? No progress can be made in our discussion until we settle that question. Is it to be a communicant of any church? Is it to subscribe to any creed? A hundred times no! All trustworthy sources make it to be a believer in Christ. What do you mean by belief in Christ? Well, what do you mean when you tell a person you believe in him, that you believe he is a good citizen, a faithful husband, a loving father? You may believe in him as all that, yet not be willing to trust him with a dollar out of your sight, or open your home to him as a friend. You honor him not most unless willing to trust him with money uncounted, your good name, the very secrets of your heart. A belief that does not express itself in confidence does not count for much. All else is cold, impersonal opinion. You must not offer Christ less than you would your friend. A belief in the historic Christ only never saved a soul, any more than a belief in Caesar or Luther or Washington, even though you believe Him as more than a teacher sent from God, more than a prophet, even the very Saviour of the world. Just as friendship is more than an intellectual opinion, even a possession of the life. Just as love, the divine essential in all true living, without much society, is a self-centred, self-circumferenced conglomeration, and the home a den, denying its own existence, is virtue of the heart instead of a secretion of the brain; so religion has its abiding place in the heart, else nowhere in the life at all.

To be a believer in Christ then is no different than to be a believer in man. Tell him whom you profess to call your friend you believe in him. When you will not confide in him, when in perplexity you seek another's counsel, and in sorrow another's sympathy, and you have insulted faith, and friendship has become in your hand an empty name. If you believe in a man trust him as all men demand you should. You say you love? Show it by loving and manifesting the self-denial love demands, else your profession is a sounding brass, an empty name, a dastardly affair.

Do you believe in Christ? Show it by a loving trust. Otherwise, you believe only intellectually, and that means you do not want to have much to do with Him. It means self first and always. And if perchance you start to follow Him from so superficial a motive be not surprised if the first time His demands conflict with your plans you turn traitor and swear you never knew the man. The test is, My sheep hear My voice and I know them and they follow Me. That is the test—to hear His voice and follow Him.

Now, what is the purpose of a church, and in how far does church membership constitute a Christian? Church membership constitutes a Christian just so far as a Christian constitutes a church member. No church, whatever its name and influence, has of itself power to make a man a Christian, unless the Roman Church, and that is only in its own estimation. We fall into one or the other of two errors: Either of thinking of Christianity as an abstraction, or as a fact identical with an organization of earth, when it is grander than both. There is no Christianity apart from the life of its founder. It is not to be born in a Christian community. It is not to be swayed by religious excitement. It is not, under the uplift of fine music, nor the tender sentiment of a keen sorrow to catch some celestial glimpse of truth, and conclude you are henceforth a religious man. To be a Christian is nothing other than Christ within you the hope of glory.

Then there is the other mistake of making the visible church identical with the reality. Indeed, symbols are important. We can never tell how much satisfaction the religious devotee receives from the picture of the Virgin or the image of the Christ. The line between the symbol and the spirit may be less attenuated than we think. More symbols may lead to more realities than we dream of. An object of sense may, however, oftener hinder access to the spirit than be a viaduct thereto. Many a person joins a church for the sake of being a church member rather than to be a better Christian. Many a person worships their church and minister rather than the Christ the church represents and the minister preaches. Being a good denominationalist is not necessarily being a good Christian, although if we are good Christians we ought to be denominationalists, and better denominationalists than we are.—Denominations give form and content to Christianity which some souls would never otherwise perceive. But on the other hand, denominationalism should have no content to boast of except what the Gospel imparts. Don't think that to be a Methodist, Presbyterian or [illegible] is equal to being a Christian. It [illegible] so. It may not be so. It depends [illegible] your denomination intensifies or [illegible] izes Christianity. You may have the [illegible] of godliness, but your very devotion [illegible] form is a denial of the power there [illegible] have in mind a member of a [illegible] church who would sooner [illegible] Christ than his immersion and [illegible] munion. There [illegible] many flocks in one fold.

By and by boundary lines w[illegible] away. We think then they will [illegible] Baptists. The Congregationalis[illegible] they will all be Congregationalists [illegible] the Methodist is sure they will [illegible] Methodists. Ah, brother, better st[illegible] will all be Christians. Development of Character.

We are left in this world, not [illegible] for what we may do here, for th[illegible] we may make, as that we ourselves [illegible] grow into the beauty of God's th[illegible] us. In the midst of all our [illegible] and struggles, all our doing of [illegible] our longings and desires, all our [illegible] riences of every kind, there is a [illegible] going on in us which is quite as im[illegible] as anything we are doing with our [illegible] or with our hands.

In the school the boy has his t[illegible] lessons. According as he is diligent [illegible] dolent is his progress in his stu[illegible] ten years, if he is faithful, he masters [illegible] things and stands high in his clas[illegible] he is indifferent and careless, he get[illegible] a smattering of knowledge, with so [illegible] links missing that his education is of [illegible] practical use to him. But meanwhile [illegible] has been going on in him another [illegible] tion—a growth or development of ch[illegible] ter. The mind grows by exercise, ju[illegible] the body does.

Then there is also a subjective mor[illegible] pression, produced by the way the t[illegible] performed. If one is faithful and [illegible] scientious, truly doing his best, th[illegible] deavor leaves a mark of beauty in th[illegible] But if one is unfaithful, indolent, [illegible] one's self, there is left a wound, a t[illegible] marring and blemish, a weakening [illegible] life.—C. A Happy Home.

Six things are requisite to create a [illegible] home: Integrity must be the architec[illegible] tidiness the upholsterer. It must [illegible] warmed by affection, lighted up [illegible] cheerfulness, and industry must be [illegible] ventilator, renewing the atmosphere [illegible] bring in fresh salubrity day by day; [illegible] over all as a protecting canopy and [illegible] nothing will suffice except the bless[illegible] God.—Hamilton.

Progress.

To have earnest [illegible] of Christ and to be intensely interes[illegible] them and controlled by them cannot [illegible] fortunately, be taken as a certain s[illegible] the continuance of that interest. W TWO BEAUTIFUL WOMEN ESCAPED DREAD CATARRH BY USE OF PE-RU-NA.

Miss Amanda Johnson.

Miss Amanda Johnson, Fairchild, Wis., writes:

"I write to tell you how much Peruna benefited me. For a number of years I had pain in my head around my eyes, and I thought it was because my eyes needed treatment, so I went to an oculist and had glasses fitted to my eyes and wore them for some time, but felt no relief whatever. In fact, I felt worse than before, and came to the conclusion that the trouble was not with my eyes, but with my head and that it must be catarrh. As so many of my friends had used Peruna with benefit for this trouble, I thought I would try it. I was not sorry that I did so, for in a short time I began to improve, and in four weeks my eyes were in splendid condition, my general health was much improved and all the catarrh of the head was gone. I was glad to get rid of this trouble, and am glad to endorse such a good medicine as Peruna."—Miss Amanda Johnson.

multitude of people that have been of chronic catarrh by using Peruna ever be known.

Many a girl has regained her faded beauty, many a matron has lengthened the days of her comely appearance by using Peruna.

Peruna produces clean mucous membranes, the basis of facial symmetry and a perfect complexion.

The women have not been slow to discover that a course of Peruna will do more toward restoring youthful beauty than all the devices known to science.

While it is true that Peruna cures catarrh wherever located, yet it is advisable for everyone to use Peruna as a preventive and not wait until catarrh has fastened itself in some part of the system.

Peruna acts quickly and beneficially on the inflamed mucous membranes lining the different organs of the body. Thus it will cure catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

When the Jap became civilized in the accepted western sense he lost his faith in the divinity of his ancient religion, which, it is true, had become sadly perverted by the priesthood. He did not hesitate to discard the supernatural elements of the national faith while retaining its moral code as an admirable philosophical rule of life. In a word he became as a skeptic who accepts the philosophy of Jesus without accepting the divinity or inspired mission. Thus civilization made the Jap an agnostic without being able to proselyte him to Christianity. The superior Japanese place the teachings of Christ alongside those of Buddha, Confucius, Mencius and the other spiritual philosophers of the Orient, and, while trying to live moral lives, shrug their shoulders at the "superstitions" of religionists, whether western or Oriental.—Atlanta Constitution.

Billion Dollar Grass and Alfalfa.

When we introduced Billion Dollar Grass three years ago, little did we dream it would be the most talked of grass in America, the biggest, quick, hay producer on earth, but this has come to pass.

Agr. Editors wrote about it, Agr. College Professors lectured about it, Agr. Institute Orators talked about it, while in the farm home by the quiet fireside, in the corner grocery, in the village postoffice, at the creamery, at the depot, in fact wherever farmers gathered, Salzer's Billion Dollar Grass, that wonderful grass, good for 5 to 14 tons per acre, and lots of pasture besides, is always a theme worthy of the farmer's voice.

A. Walford, Westlore Farms, Pa., writes: "I have 60 acres in Salzer's Alfalfa Clover. It is immense. I cut three crops this season and have lots of pasture besides."

Epitome of Progress of Momentous Struggle Now On in the Far East

VLADIVOSTOCK BOMBARDED

Japs Tackle Second Stronghold of Russian Bear But Lydite Shells Fail to Do Any Great Damage.

An Associated Press dispatch from Vladivostock says: A fleet of five Japanese battle ships and two cruisers appeared off this place at 1:25 o'clock this (Sunday) afternoon and bombarded the town and shore batteries for fifty-five minutes.

The fleet approached from the direction of Askold island at the east entrance of Ussuri bay, and about 33 miles southeast of Vladivostock. Entering Ussuri bay the enemy formed in line of battle, but did not approach a closer range than 5 1-3 miles. They directed their fire against the shore batteries and the town, but no damage resulted, as most of their 200 lyddite shells failed to burst.

The Russian battery, commanded by Generals Veronetz and Artamoff, did not reply, awaiting a closer approach of the enemy.

The Japanese fire ceased at 2:20 p. m., and the enemy retired in the direction of Askold island. Simultaneously the torpedo boat destroyers appeared near Askold island, and two more near Cape Miadel.

The Japanese ships were covered with ice.

The attack resulted in no loss to the Russians, but cost the enemy 200,000 roubles ($100,000) in ammunition. Most of the projectiles were six and twelve-inch shells.

The population of Vladivostock was warned in the early morning of the presence on the horizon of a hostile fleet and the prospect of an attack during the day, but it remained tranquil.

Interest now centers on the probable encounter between the Russian Vladivostock fleet, comprised of the czar's four finest cruisers and several torpedo boats and destroyers, and the Japanese squadron which has just bombarded Vladivostock. A cable received Saturday night states that the report that the Russian squadron was not in Vladivostock March 1 is correct. When last seen it was off Usulie bay.

VICEROY WIRES REPORT.

A communication from Viceroy Alexieff to the czar from Ukden, bearing Sunday's date, says:

"I most humbly inform your majesty that the commandant at the fortress at Vladivostock reports at 8:50 this morning seven vessels were sighted south of Askold island. At 9:45 they were seen to be warships making for Askold island. About noon the enemy's squadron was midway between the coast and Askold island, making for Ussuri bay. They were out of reach of the shore batteries. At 1:30 the enemy opened fire. Two vessels in the squadron were probably the first-class cruisers Idzum and Yakumo, but the names of the other vessels are unknown."

RUSSIAN FLANK MENACED.

News has reached St. Petersburg that the 2,500 Japanese troops who landed at Plaksin bay are advancing towards Musan with the intention of reaching Hunchun, and threatening the Russian flank. To checkmate this move a Russian outpost, 1,500 strong, is advancing to occupy Koryoung, on the Tumen river.

ANSWER RUSSIAN CHARGES

Japan Addresses Note to the Powers Setting Forth Her Grievances and Explaining Her Actions.

Japan addressed a note to the powers Friday in response to the recent communication from Russia. The note has not been published in Tokio and its contents are unknown.

Russia's various communications to the powers attacking Japan for its conduct of diplomatic negotiations before their rupture, for its attack upon Russia without declaration of war and for its alleged violation of the neutrality of Korea have been received in Japan largely in the spirit of amusement.

The Japanese resent what is alleged to be a deliberate attempt to place them in a false position regarding certain incidents, but in the main do not take the correspondence seriously. Responding to the charge of violating the neutrality of Korea they point to the action of Russia in Manchuria, where thousands of troops were assembled long before a diplomatic rupture occurred. They say that they are fully prepared to accept the judgment of the powers on a comparison of their course in Korea, where they landed troops only after a state of war existed, and upon the written permission of the emperor of Korea.

They deny that Chemulpo was a neutral port after the Japanese landed on February 8, but whether it was neutral or belligerent, Russia began hostilities there. When the Russian gunboat Korietz steamed out of the harbor of Chemulpo on the afternoon of February 8, she opened fire on the Japanese squadron, making the opening shot of the war. The Japanese guns did not respond, but the Japanese torpedo boat destroyers answered the fire and discharged two torpedoes before the Korietz retired.

The Japanese are confident of the justice and strength of their original position in the integrity of China, and the fairness of their proposal during the negotiations. They feel fully justified in commencing hostilities after breaking off diplomatic relations and serving notice of their intention to take independent action. They are sure their recent assurances that they had no intention of taking possession of Chinese territory and would guarantee the integrity and independence of Korea will be accepted by the powers.

FIVE KILLED IN BOMBARDMENT.

Official dispatches received at St. Petersburg concerning the bombardment of Vladivostock by a Japanese fleet Sunday afternoon do not mention any Russian losses, but private advices say that five were killed—four sailors and the wife of an engineer. It is apparent the Japanese were afraid to risk exposing their ships to the plunging fire of the land batteries, and it is considered probable that the attack was really for the purpose of drawing the fire of the Russian forts, compelling the Russians to discose the position and calibre of their guns and also for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Russian squadron was in port.

The greatest consternation was caused in St. Petersburg Saturday night by the publication of a proclamation issued by the admiral in command at Vladivostok, the terms of which made it clear that Vladivostok, like Port Arthur, is to be left to its own defenses.

Five negroes were killed and two mortally wounded in the Doddsville neighborhood, in Sunflower county, Miss., Saturday night, as the result of quarrels growing out of crap games.

The killings occurred in two different localities and the county authorities are unable to find clews to the parties responsible for the carnival of crime, as over fifty negroes participated in the fights and fully one hundred shots were fired.

BIG HOTEL COLLAPSES

Many Men Crushed to Death Under Wreckage.

ROAR HEARD FOR BLOCKS AWAY

The Unfinished Darlington Building Falls Under Its Own Weight—Huge Mass of Steel Smashes Into Dining Room of Adjoining House and Kills Mrs. Storrs, a Guest, at Luncheon.

New York City.—The giant steel skeleton of the Darlington Apartment Hotel, which for several months has been in process of erection on the north side of Forty-six street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, collapsed suddenly without warning, carrying with it nearly every one of the workmen engaged on the ten stories that had been raised.

Emergency Contractor Dunn said his men had discovered seven bodies in the sub-cellar on the west side of the building, and that two more were known to be pinned under the wreckage on the east side.

The crash came with the suddenness of an explosion, but the mighty roar of the hundreds of tons of falling metal lasted for several seconds. Shrieks and groans rose through the swirling dust that enveloped the wreckage. As the cloud slowly settled it was seen that the buildings on all sides had been greatly damage, most of all the Patterson, a ten-story apartment hotel at 58 and 60 West Forty-seventh street, immediately in the rear, where the dining room had been wrecked by the crashing steel, and Mrs. Frank L. Storrs, of Rye, N. Y., a transient guest, had been killed as she sat at luncheon in an alcove.

For many blocks in all directions the appalling roar of the building's fall drowned the noises of the city streets, and people rushed headlong from their homes, thinking their own walls were tumbling about their ears.

There were no explosions to jar the structure. The steel skeleton, 149 feet in height, fell of its own weight and telescoped into a heap of broken and twisted steel girders and fragments of crumbled masonry in the cellar. It went down so straight that hardly a brick fell into the street, and there was very little of the debris on the sidewalk. But from the bottom of the cellar the rubbish was piled up to the level of the second-story windows of the adjoining houses.

FEDERAL BANK LOANS.

Favorable Report on the Measure to Take Real Estate as Security.

C.—The House Committee on Banking and Currency authorized a favorable report upon the bill introduced by Representative Lewis (Dem., Ga.) to empower national banks to make loans upon real estate to the amount of twenty-five per cent. of their capital stock and fifty per cent. of a fair assessed valuation of property, exclusive of improvements.

The vote of the committee to report the bill favorably was unanimous. The measure is a marked departure from the powers now conferred upon banking corporations, and is one which Mr. Lewis, who is a member of the committee, has been advocating for many years.

INSURANCE FIGURES

Submitted for 1903 by the State Commissioner

Deputy Insurance Commissioner Ned McDavid has just completed a statement on the fire insurance for the last year. The receipts by the state show an increase of $10,500 over the previous year, while there has been a decrease in the losses paid by insurance companies. The average rate charged for fire insurance in Alabama last year was $1.67 per $100, which is a decrease of 11 cents per $100, or about 7 per cent decrease over the previous year's rate. This reduction in rate represents a saving to the Alabama policy holders last year of about $40,000.

The fire insurance premiums paid by the Alabama policy holders has almost doubled in the past seven years, though the rate charged is only 4 cents per hundred more. In 1897 fire companies collected in Alabama $1,-[illegible]64, and in 1903 $2,115,355. The fire companies fared well in Alabama during 1903, paying for losses in this state only 48.4 per cent of the amount received for premiums. Allowing 9 1-3 per cent for expense of doing business, leaves a profit of about 18 per cent for the companies. The average loss in Alabama during the last seven years is 55 per cent.

DIDN'T LIKE IT,

And Tried to Stop It With a Shotgun.

Near Florence, a marriage under difficulties was solemnized Sunday morning. Great preparations had been made and a large crowd of guests had assembled to witness the wedding of Miss Lily Young and Alexander Haddock, when a former suitor of the young lady appeared upon the scene and demanded that the proceedings be stopped. Seeing that remonstrances were of no avail, he left and returned later with a shotgun. His appearance caused consternation among the guests, but the irate suitor was finally persuaded to retire and leave the field in possession of his rival.

Burned to Death.

A horrible accident occurred at the home of a farmer in Hokes Bluff, resulting in the death of the thirteen-year-old daughter of William Shields, a prominent farmer. New Car Lines.

Bessemer's board of mayor and al dermen granted a franchise to the Bessemer, Brookwood and Blocton Railway and Light company, provided work is commenced in twelve months after the granting of the franchise, and that the line be in operation two years after being granted the fran chise. The board also appropriated $200 to the entertainment committee of the Alabama Press association that meets at Bessemer in May. The granting of a franchise to Chambers McAdory and others to run a rail way on certain streets in the city to Jonesboro was brought up, but the council was asked for more time.

Ensley Rails Superior.

The Frisco system has made a four months' test with both the open hearth steel rail, as manufactured at Ensley, and the Bessemer steel rail, manu factured elsewhere. Some of the Ens ley product was placed on some very sharp and hard curves. In four months the inspection shows that there has been but little wear. The rail in that time on straight track showed up excellently. The Bessemer steel rail, laid at the same time and on sharp and hard curves, showed some wear, though slight. However, there was a difference in favor of the Ensley product.

Attempt to Wreck Train.

An unsuccessful attempt to wreck a train on the Louisville and Nash ville road was made near Florence Saturday, which might have resulted in serious damage, if not loss of life. At a point three miles north of Flor ence, just around a curve and down a steep grade, a long railroad spike was driven between the rails and some old iron was piled on the track. The spike bent to one side when struck by the engine or the train would have been derailed.

Shot By His Dogs.

Elias Nail was accidentally shot while hunting near Dolomite. The ac cident was a peculiar one. His dogs had treed a rabbit, and Nail laid his gun on the ground and attempted to get the rabbit. The dogs, in jumping about the tree, set the gun off, and being pointed toward young Nail, the charged entered his leg just below the knee and shattered the bone. Am putation was necessary.

Governor Upheld.

Mississippi's lower house indulged in a spirited debate on the veto of Governor Vardaman of the bill for an appropriation for the benefit of negro education. The vote to pass the bill over the governor's veto was lost by a vote of 64 to 48, 72 votes being re quired to carry over the veto. The bill, therefore, is dead. The debate was the most spirited that has taken place in the present session.

Burned to Death.

The 8-year-old daughter of Ike Janes, a farmer living near Florence, was burned, receiving injuries from which she died. The child, in com pany with others, was burning sage grass when the accident occurred. Crazed with fright, she ran in the op posite direction from those who would have saved her.

The extremely low tax valuation of lands in Tuscaloosa county are com plained of in a report filed by W. F. Wilkinson, assistant examiner of pub lic accounts. Tuscaloosa county lands are assessed at an average figure of $1.89 an acre. The examiner calls at tention to the fact that this low assess ment is made in the face of the fact that in mineral lands Tuscaloosa is the third richest in the state, Jeffer son being first and Walker second. No errors were found in the county accounts.

Work has already commenced on the electric light and water works plant in Heflin. Not a single house in the town for rent.

PAN-AMERICAN LINE

Requires but 4,500 Miles to be Completed

Charles M. Pepper, appointed by President Roosevelt as commissioner to carry out the recommendations of the second international American con ference, held in Mexico two years ago, with regards to the Pan-American rail way, has submitted his report to the state department, by which it will be transmitted to congress.

The report says that the general prospect of an international line, which ultimately will place New York and Buenos Ayres in through railway com munication, is receiving much encour agement. At the present time about 4,800 miles are lacking, and the esti mated cost of construction is based at $150,000,000. This is based on an av erage of 50 cents gold, as a daily wage for labor, with an efficiency of 75 cents as compared with similar labor in the United States.

The boll weevil is an insignificant creature, a little gray snout beetle, about one-fourth of an inch long, but it breeds very rapidly, multiplies enor mously in the course of a summer, and works during the critical period of its life absolutely protected from any application which could be made to the cotton plant. Stowed away in old corn stalks, in clumps of grass, under the bark of trees and logs, and in all sorts of sheltered places, the weevil passes the winter. Promptly as the cotton plant comes up in the spring and early summer the weevils come forth, fly to the plants, and as soon as the first "squares"—unblown buds—are found they lay their eggs in them. The young grub hatches, and destroys the forming flower, caus ing the square to drop. The grub changes to a pupa within the bud, and the full grown weevil emerges soon after.

Mine Trouble.

Trouble has again broken out in Vir ginia mines, there being a pitched bat tle fought Friday afternoon between Superintendent Gafford, Sid Hurst and two negroes with them on one side, and several parties hidden in the woods on the other. About forty shots were fired on both sides. Sid Hurst, of the party with Mr. Gafford, being shot in the side, shoulder and arm with buckshot. None of the others was struck, although one man had his hat shot off his head

It is not known whether any of the attacking party were struck or not. As soon as the mines were reached bloodhounds were brought out and an attempt to trail the would-be murder ers was made, but without result

It is understood that Atlanta is about to place an order for five hun dred cars of chert, and after the in spection of chert beds in various sec tions, they have concluded that Bes semer offers the best chert to be found.

In the bombardment of Port Arthur the Japanese used three or four hun dred Russian shells which they found on the captured transport Manchuria.

It is learned that the reason the Vladivostock forts did not reply to the shelling by the Japanese vessels on March 6th was that officials at St. Petersburg supplied them with shells whose diameter was too large for the guns of the fort.

The reported occupation of Port Arthur by the Japanese and the report stating that a Japanese torpedo boat destroyer was sunk and the cruiser Takasago heavily damaged by the shell fire of the Russians during the fourth attack on Port Arthur are officially pronounced untrue.

The Cane Crop.

Favorable reports continue to come from the country concerning the young cane crop, which is everywhere de clared to be in a most promising con dition and to be considerably advanced over its ordinary condition at this time of the year. Encouraging infor mation is received concerning spring plant, fall plant and stubbles, and there seems to be every indication of one of the finest stands of cane.

Against Education.

At its session Friday afternoon the Mississippi house defeated the bill providing for the establishment of a state normal school for white teach ers, the prevailing sentiment among members being that the state can not afford an expenditure for this purpose at present, owing to the large increase in the common school appropriation. The vote was 57 to 41

With drawing the weapon she handed it to her son, who immediately volunteered for active service.

My Little Gray Kitty and I.

When the north wind whistles 'round the house,
Piling the snowdrifts high,
We nestle down on the warm hearth rug—
My little gray kitty and I.
I tell her about my work and play,
And all I mean to do,
And she purrs so loud I surely think
That she understands—don't you?

She looks about with her big, round eyes,
And softly licks my face,
As I tell her 'bout the word I missed,
And how I have lost my place.
Then let the wind whistle, for what to us
Matters a stormy sky?
Oh, none have such jolly times as we,
My little gray kitty and I.

Cats Fond of Olives.

"I have often wondered if all cats like olives," remarked a woman who is very fond of the feline tribe. "All mine do, and I have six. Olives are usually an acquired taste with the human race, but cats seem to take to them naturally—at least mine do. An olive will set any one of them into paroxysms of joy. They will leave milk or fish or any other article of food for it, purring and rolling over it much as though it might have the intoxicating effect of catnip, before they finally eat it. I have often tried olives on other cats in the houses of friends and have found them equally appreciative, only they prefer their olives cut up into pieces."

A Fairy Tale Game.

Men and women who have forgotten the charming impossibilities called fairy tales, which fascinated them as children, must recall these in all their picturesque details before attending a fairy tale party, one of the prettiest of the new evening affairs for home entertainment.

The good game from which the affair takes its title is founded upon a series of puzzle cards, each card representing a well-known fairy tale. The stories are expressed in charade, either by ambiguous sentences, pictures drawn or pasted, or wee objects sewed to the cardboard, which when rightly guessed suggest the romance.

Thus, the card intended to hint at the story of Golden Hair and the three bears has a sketch of a hare gilded with gold paint (Golden Hair). The three bears are represented by the words "Bear, Bare, Bhner," written one below the other and numbered, 1, 2, 3.

Red Riding Hood is represented by the words "Author of the Song of the Shirt" (Hood). A picture of a horseman in full gallop (Riding). A scrap of scarlet cloth (Red). An English general killed at Quebec (Wolf).

Sleeping Beauty will require a picture of some beautiful and famous woman, a sketch of a kitten asleep and a picture of a spinning wheel.

Blue Beard takes a bit of blue ribbon or a blue flower. The lower portion of a man's photograph showing the beard, and a headline from a newspaper or something purporting to be such, giving the dreadful news that "He murdered his wife!"

For Cinderella a lady's slipper, the flower or the foot covering, some pumpkin seeds, a picture of a fireplace and a coronet are grouped together.

For "Beauty and the Beast" combine a sketch of a pretty girl consulting her mirror, a toy gorilla or other monster from the children's playroom, and an imitation wedding ring.

The set should consist of as many cards as there are to be guests present, but those given here will serve as models for the remaining number, which the hostess can readily concoct. The cards are numbered. Each guest, on arriving is given a pencil and paper. When the game is about to begin the players draw their chairs together in the form of a circle and each endeavors to discover what fairy tale is meant by the objects on his card. When the name has been discovered and written down, in connection with the number of the card, the player effects an exchange of cards with some one else. This exchange of cards is continued until all competitors have had a turn at every card.

The prize—a pretty piece of bronze representing a scene from some old-time story—is then presented to the man or woman whose list of correct answers is most complete.—Indianapolis News.

Golden Locks and Sunbeam.

There were once two little girls called Golden Locks and Sunbeam. One could readily tell why Golden Locks was so named by the golden ringlets which lay in a shining mass on her little head.

If you only saw Sunbeam's hair you wondered why she was called Sunbeam. The curls clustering thickly on her head were so flaxen that one thought of the dolls in the toy shops rather than of sunbeams. She flitted here and there as careless and as gay as a butterfly, while her voice caroled songs as happy as a bird's.

Golden Locks had big blue eyes, but just between them on her little white brow there was often a deep scowl. If at play she could not have her own way, or if anything displeased her, quickly came the scowl, until at last there appeared two deep lines straight up and down just between Golden Locks' big blue eyes. Even while asleep the lines were there.

One day these two little sisters started out to gather flowers. They lingered here and there picking many pretty blossoms and not realizing how far they were from home.

They came to a deep wood, where the trees were so close and the shade so dense, with each cool breeze blowing through, that the children stopped to rest. They were tired out, and it was only a little while before each little child had thrown herself down on the grasses, laid her little face on her arm and had fallen fast asleep.

"Aha! Aha! What is this?" said the Queen of the Fairies, as she and her train of fairies stopped in their ramble and looked at the two sleeping children. Their faces could not be seen, but Golden Locks' mass of golden curls lay in wild disorder, their brilliancy almost defying the sunlight.

"She must be one of us. Such a head must belong to a fairy," they all chorused, and the Queen of Fairies smiled and was much pleased that her little band should be so glad to add to their number one over more beautiful than they. So the Queen decided that they must have Golden Locks. She did not stop to think what the other little girl would do when she awoke to find Golden Locks gone, nor how distressed she would be.

The Queen waved her magic wand, and at her bidding appeared a beautiful chariot almost like the one in which she herself rode. There were flowers here and there and everywhere on the body of the golden chariot, and around the little gold rimmed wheels and closely set in gold spikes of the wheels were most brilliant precious stones.

When Golden Locks awoke at the touch of the fairy her eyes fell upon the chariot, and she thought she had never before seen anything half so beautiful. Then the Queen said:

"Little girl, would you like to be a fairy?"

Golden Locks clapped her hands in glee. "How lovely to be a fairy."

But the Queen noticed that even her happiness did not take away the two deep line, so she called all the fairies together and consulted with them as to what was best to do. They had all seen the scowl on Golden Locks' face, and all felt that no one should be a fairy who had two deep, ugly lines on her forehead, because such a fairy would look cross, and fairies are always happy, you know.

Just then Sunbeam raised her head and looked around. She jumped up and danced with glee. Never before had her eyes shone so brightly, never before had the dimple in each little cheek come and gone so quickly. The smiles seemed to flit all over her face like little dancing sunbeams.

"This one!" "This one!" chorused the fairies, and they all decided that Sunbeam must be a fairy. Sunbeam was only too willing, and as she stepped into the beautiful chariot it seemed as if the sunlight must have found its way through the close-loaved trees, for the chariot and Sunbeam's face were so brilliant.

Then they prepared to make their departure, but such a wail rent the air and Golden Locks' scowl grew deeper and her cries were so loud that Sunbeam felt troubled. She told the fairies she could not leave her little sister, and as she stepped out of the chariot the fairies almost looked sad.

But they were quickly made happy again for the Queen had a new idea. She would try to get little Golden Locks to take the lines out of her face, and some day she would come again for both the little children.

The Queen told her it took a long time for little girls to get such deep lines out of their faces, but she would come again in just one year, and if Golden Locks' scowl was gone she would take both little girls to Fairyland. Then the fairies all tripped away, and the children saw them no more.

Just then they heard a voice calling them, and very glad indeed was their father to find his little truant girls safe and sound. He took them home, and now the family wonder why it is that Golden Locks so often runs to the mirror and rubs her little fingers up and down between her big blue eyes. It is the children's secret, and they never tell it, but one who watches closely can see that Golden Locks always does this when things do not go to suit her and she feels cross.

They are still waiting for the fairies to come again.

"Don't you hope Golden Locks will get the lines out of her forehead before the fairies come?—J. Villette Finley, in Birmingham Age Herald.

Took Care of Her Watch.

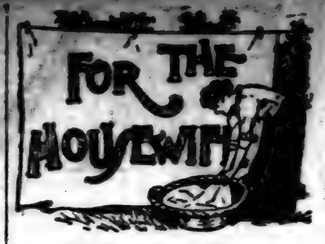
The woman's watch, when she brought it home from the mountains, where she had been staying, didn't keep perfect time, so she took it to a jeweler's to be regulated.

"What have you been doing to it?" asked the jeweler, when he had stared it out of countenance with his little glass and had listened to its ticking and otherwise acted as a modern doctor does when he is called in to determine what is the matter with a patient.

The woman grew thoughtful.

"Well, I dropped it in the grate fire one night," she said. "But I took it out with the tongs before it had had time to be very much hurt and then it fell into a basin of water when I was bathing my hands one day. But that certainly couldn't have injured it, for I jerked it out instantly and wiped it with the towel That is really all its adventures, except that it fell down some stone steps. I have wound it up almost every night, and when I haven't wound it up at night I have in the morning. I really believe the works couldn't have been good in the beginning, and if I have to bring it back to you again I think I shall have to ask you to substitute a movement which will keep more accurate time than this one."

And then she swept out of the shop and left the man who knows about watches saying unprintable words about her sex.



The Question of Servants.

It behooves all house mothers to meet the question of how to do without servants. And in order to keep up the standard of mental, spiritual and physical excellence in women, they must be willing to consider that it would be better to live on plainer food, to have fewer ornaments to dust in their homes, to wear less elaborate gowns, and to have more time to read with their children, to walk out under the beneficent skies of this fair land and to reflect on those things that are so abundantly set before the citizens of the twentieth century; that will make for an elevation of class, an entire leveling of conditions that depend on the grade of mind that meets them. —Florence Jackson Stoddard, in Sunset Magazine.

Useful Hints.

To have a freshly made cake come out without any trouble. When you take it from the oven stand tin on a cloth that has been wrung out of hot water. You will find it will come out easily.

If shoe laces have a trick of coming untied wax them before putting in your shoe.

To take ink stains out of mahogany. Mix a little oxalic acid with water, dip a cork in it and rub the stains. Then wash with pure water and polish.

To make Devonshire cream. Set pans of milk that have stood over night on a part of the stove where the milk will not burn, but will get scalding hot. Do not let it boil. Then set it away to cool. When cold skim off the top.

How to make bread sticks.—Take one quart of water, half an ounce of compressed yeast, two ounces of lard two ounces of sugar and half an ounce of salt, use flour enough to make dough as for bread, and raise it the same. Roll with hands like sticks the length desired. Bake on flat sheets in moderate oven.—New York American.

Paper Bed Quilts.

Although it has long been known that paper is a bad conductor of heat, little use has been made of this fact until recently. A few years ago one heard of newspapers being laid over a bed in winter to supply extra warmth in emergencies, but the idea seemed so absurd that it never was extensively tried. Besides at best, it was only a temporary expedient. The improvised cover was sure to be displaced or torn in a short time.

Of late two methods of employing the principle have been found. One is to work up a thick, soft material that can be used for lining women's jackets. For that commodity a considerable sale has been found. Being introduced, like wadding, between the inner and outer layers of cloth it is protected from friction, and thus may last for a long time.

The other plan is to manufacture a durable bed quilt. For this business a company has been organized in North Carolina. No doubt thickness and flexibility are insured by the choice of material and mode of preparation. Some parts of the process are novel enough, it is said, to lead the inventors to seek a patent. According to a dispatch from Lexington, N. C., the quilts are made of two sheets of crimped paper with cloth outside.

The quilts are absolutely air tight, and are said to be as warm as or warmer than woolen blankets. The paper used will be disinfected, and many prominent physicians say the quilts will be more healthy than the quilts now in use. The rustling noise noticeable about paper is absolutely done away with by the use of the crimped paper, and when finished the quilts are very pliant, and almost as soft as woolen blankets. They are to be quilted on a sewing machine.—New York Tribune.

Recipes.

Creamed Ham on Toast.—Chop the remnants of cold boiled ham very fine; make a thin white sauce with one tablespoonful of butter, one tableshoop of flour, one cup of milk; add salt and pepper to season; add the ham and pour it over buttered toast.

Cheese Canapes.—Cut bread in slices one-third of an inch thick; cut into rounds with a biscuit cutter; season some grated cheese with cayenne pepper and mustard; fry the bread in butter; then brown it; sprinkle with the grated cheese and place in a hot oven until the cheese melts; serve hot.

Tomato Jelly.—Soak half a box of gelatine in half a cup of cold water; stew one can of tomatoes; add to it one teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of sugar, a dash of cayenne or poprika; at the end of twenty minutes; rub through a strainer; add the gelatine and bring to the boil, stirring all the time; strain this through a piece of cheese cloth, that has been wrung out of hot water; fill small moulds and stand in a cool place until firm.

Cabbage Salad.—Chop half a medium sized cabbage quite fine; let it stand in ice water one hour, adding one tablespoon of salt; beat two eggs; add to them one cup of vinegar, three tablespoonfuls of butter, a little pepper and one tablespoon of mustard; place the bowl in a pan of boiling water and stir constantly until it begins to thicken; remove from the fire and add two teaspoonfuls of sugar; drain the cabbage and pour the hot dressing over it.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

AN ELOQUENT DISCOURSE BY THE REV. ROBERT MacDONALD.

Subject: "Christians Outside the Church" —Many a Man is Losing His Soul Because He Cannot Believe in Jonah and the Whale—Harmful Prejudices.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—In the Washington Avenue Baptist Church Sunday morning, the pastor, the Rev. Robert MacDonald, delivered the last of the series of sermons on "Christians Outside the Church," the special subject being, "Reasons Why Those Outside the Church Stay Outside." The text was from I Corinthians, xi:22: "What? despise ye the Church of Christ?" Mr. MacDonald said:

No church has power to take a man to Heaven beyond the power he has himself to gain entrance there. And whether or not he has the necessary ability depends upon whether or not he is taking up his cross and following in the steps of Jesus Christ. Heaven is a state of blessedness rather than a locality beyond the stars, and must come to us before we can go to it. Whatever else is implied in following Jesus church membership is included. Jesus commanded baptism. To illustrate His meaning He Himself was baptized in the Jordan. His reason was "for so it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." If He, the perfect man, thought it necessary to fulfill all righteousness, think not for a moment that any one of His imperfect followers can be excused. Paul in Romans shows baptism to be the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection. If we have been united with Him in the likeness of His death, we shall stand in the likeness of His resurrection. All denominations make baptism the door of entrance to the church. At Pentecost 3000 were added through baptism in a single day. Then there is "the Lord's Supper." "This is My body which was broken for you," is the Redeemer's word. The apostle to the Church of Corinth commends its perpetuation as a memorial to their Lord. Baptism and "the Lord's Supper" are then very significant and belong to the Christian Church. Not to join the church is to despise these helps to the cultivation of the spiritual life so full of sacred meaning. All Christians should embrace both as precious memorials of the Saviour's death. To embrace these is to join the church. To neglect them is to despise the church. Worse than that. To neglect them is to disobey your Lord, whom you profess to serve. Even further, it is to show disregard for your Lord's dying request, "This do in remembrance of Me." You would submit to much inconvenience to comply with the dying wish of an earthly friend. But your Lord's dying request is ignored. How can you expect to grow spiritually? How can you ever hope to hear God say, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Instead of pleasing your Lord, you offend Him. You never thought it was so serious a matter before, did you? Sleep not this night until you possess as well as profess the Lord Jesus: Be an out and out Christian. Sympathize with and come into that organization that is perpetuating these sacred rites. Keep not isolated from the one organization that God has set up for the redemption of the world.

Now for these reasons you stay out and feel justified in so doing.

You object to the creed of the church. Creeds are forms, and you detest the formal. Yet I know of no one who needs forms more than you who raise this protest; your religious life is so slack. That which you need above all else is to conform to worthy ecclesiastical order, for you are amazingly disorderly, religiously speaking. For others that may be a good excuse, but hardly for you. We all admit that no creed is as important as the life it contains, just as no cradle is as important as the babe rocked there, and as no suit of clothes is as important as the man who wears them. Nevertheless a Christian or a church without a creed is like an engine without a track—little progress can be made. There is neither ideal nor practical existence without belief, and what a man believes is his creed. And his creed is the channel through which the very water of life flows into his thirsty soul. Block up the channel and the water becomes stagnant. But that is not the fault of the creed. Thou only art to blame. A growing man, it is true, needs an expanding creed, and woe unto him whose creed is not expressive of the word of God and the revelation in Jesus! We must admit that as many a Christian is kept outside the church because of its creed, so many a man is in the church for the creed's sake. Such a man is as devoid of vital hold on Christ as is an Egyptian mummy dead 10,000 years. Creeds are a curse when they take the place of the life, and more than one church in Christendom has lost its life and is clutching only its creed. Better stay out of a church like that and retain your life than, entering in, lose it. Such a church is, however, an exception to the rule that does not strengthen the life of every member within its fold, if they give it the opportunity so to do. It is our false thought about the church that is to be deplored. Our question is, "What benefit will we derive?" Our question ought to be, "What opportunity will it provide to render benefit to my fellows less favored than myself?" Our Christian profession is a sham that does not interpose God and humanity in place of self. Conversion introduces us to God and estranges us from self. Not for self's sake, then, but for Christ's sake do we join the church. When we become new men in Christ Jesus we take as instinctively to the church as does the duck to the water or the bird to the air.

A second reason I have heard you give for remaining outside the church is because its members are not good enough. You look for perfection. You find imperfection. You are at fault; not the church. You expect too much. Come into the church and it will not be many months before you wonder how Satan ever so got possession of your mind as to beguile you into expecting perfection of church members. But you will also find them much more Christ-like than you expected—not in absolute holiness, but in desire for more righteousness in their lives and in the world. Hear the apostle exclaim that life is a battlefield: "Fight the good fight of faith." Life is a race course, so run that you may attain. Read his letters to the churches—disputings, contentions among you. These priceless letters to the Corinthians would never have been written had it not been so. Had the church at Ephesus been perfect no letter to the Ephesians would have been penned. Put away lying is his command. Let him who stole steal no more. Let all clamor and wrath and envy be put away from you as becometh saints.

Were the church of to-day perfect it would be very insipid. No struggles to be good. No fighting temptation. I, for one, would prefer to be out of it. I would sooner be imperfect, with a desire for holiness, than be perfect, and know it all and be it all, and never have desire for anything worth while. I would go so far as to thank God for an imperfect church, just as I have many a time thanked Him I was a member of a sinful race, with Jesus as Redeemer, than of a sinless race and know Him not. The church holds to its members that relation which the school does to the little boy. As it trains him for a rich intellectual existence by and by, so the church trains for rich spiritual existence by and by. The most important condition of both is unwillingness to be taught. The church, in its relation to the world is as a regiment, with Jesus, the great victorious Commander, leading the way. In relation to its membership it is as a training school, where we are trained for service and fitted for living in time and eternity. You'll not stay out of the church then longer because of this very erroneous idea, that its members ought to be perfect, for you get the idea not from the Word of God, but from your own evil imagining. Even when the Master said to His disciples, "Be perfect, as your Father in Heaven is perfect," He really said, be complete as He is, and when He asked the rich young man if he would be perfect, to follow Him, He really said, if you will be full grown, if you would cease to lack the one thing you now lack, come and follow Me. The reason, then, we want you in the church is that you may help train us and let us help train you in truth and righteousness. Nobody needs the help of the church more than you, who will not come in. If you still resist our invitation to enter where you belong, be more charitable toward us, anyway. And if you will not be one of us, pray do not obstruct our work by talking against us, thus prejudicing the world before whom we should stand in a good light that we may do it good.

Your reason for remaining out of the church may be that of Biblical or doctrinal difficulty. Many a man is losing his soul, not because he cannot believe in Christ, but because he cannot believe in Jonah and the whale. More than one man has said were it not for the "Garden of Eden" and the "Deluge" he would accept Jesus as Saviour. I know a man who has lost his religious fervor because he could not reconcile the doctrine of election with the freedom of the human will and the universality of God's grace. And another whose religious activities have been paralyzed because he could not reconcile the possibility of punishment of sin with the all mercy, all love of God. Many such assinine questions are killing men's enthusiasm for the work of the Lord. If those inside of the church are influenced thus, we need not wonder that Christians outside of the church question so foolishly. Those same men never think of questioning what the president and officers of the club, or Masonic order, or Odd Fellows organization to which they belong believe about the world, whether it is round or flat, or whether Jesus created in six days or in 6000 years, or whether the earth revolves around the sun or the sun around the earth, or whether heaven and hell are states of existence or fixed bodies. The reason you give for not demanding information about these questions of the secular association, yet asking it of the church, is that these are not builded on these questions, while the church is. That is where you are wrong. The church is not builded on the integrity of the story of Jonah and the whale, nor belief in the Garden of Eden, nor even in the infallibility of the Scriptures, but on Jesus Christ and Him crucified. But you ask, "Do not your members believe in these questions?" I do not know, I am sure. I would not be surprised to find many who do not. Will we not expel them? Yes, if we find them as indolent and good for nothing religiously as you are who remain out of the church because of these questions. But if they love Jesus Christ with all their hearts, mind and strength, and if that love inspires them towards righteousness in private life and make them eager for the salvation of men, we would as soon think of relinquishing our charter as a Christian church as to expel such choice souls as are they.

But a fourth reason you ignore the church of Christ is because of dislike of certain members of the church. Else of its minister. This last reason is more prevalent than you have any idea of, and until human nature is more sanctified than at present people will separate themselves from the church for this reason. But if one church fails you here is there no other church, no other minister where you can worship at peace with God and man? Your duty is to find such and go there; if not of your own denominational order, then of some other, rather than despise the church universal and refuse it your support. There is a large difference between being at odds with some especial church and holding aloof from all churches because not in harmony with that one. If you cannot walk in sympathy with some one you are at fault if you do not walk in sympathy with some other. In Brooklyn no one is forced to keep isolated from all churches because he cannot live in harmony with some one church. If you cannot conscientiously enter one, I repeat it, you are at fault for not entering some other. As for this church, if you will permit me to say it, it has been during these last six years a veritable haven of refuge for those kinds of people. We have rented more pews to and baptized more people from other denominations than those of our own denominational faith and training. Here are two pictures. You will instantly detect the more pleasing to gaze upon. Here is a person absenting himself from all public worship, all Christian activity, because troubled over some Biblical and doctrinal question, or because he does not like the church of his early choice, and he is leading a bitter, self-centered, indolent existence in consequence. Here is another who has a similar grievance, but overcomes it for the Master's sake. He believes the Gospel to be the power of God unto salvation. He is convinced men are lost without Christ. He believes he is responsible if the light within him becomes darkness. Therefore he continues to be identified with that organization that represents the kingdom of Heaven in the earth.

A woman told me a while ago she joined the church because it was her duty and for no other reason. She did not especially like the minister. She could not digest all the creed. She disliked some of its members and preferred the width of the avenue between herself and them, but she professed to be a Christian and believed her place was in the church rather than out. For fifteen years she remained outside and criticised. A barren, unsatisfactory spiritual life was the consequence. She entered finally for Christ's and her children's sake, and the last year had been the happiest and most profitable of her existence.

Do you believe in Christ? Would you honor Him? Your place is inside the church of Christ as truly as the soldier's place is inside the regiment, or the sailor's on board ship. But, you exclaim, the creed, the doctrines, the membership, the minister. Well, then, seek the church you can fellowship, even though outside your denomination, and if no such church can be found take yourself speedily to Jesus Christ. Go into your closet and shut to the door with your prejudices on the outside. Then fall upon your knees and pray to be converted all over again. Some of us, you know, need to be converted more than once. Even the seventy times seven recommended by the Master in the olden times. Let God overrule your prejudices and flood your heart with His grace. Then go in the spirit of a little child and ask admittance of the nearest Christian church. Let nothing stand between you and that important obligation, that divine privilege, that necessary discipline, that priceless joy.

On the Plain.

Henry Clay Trumbull, speaking of the mission of the lowly road in the Christian's life and its relative importance in comparison to the mountain road, says: "There are times in every life when the soul stands on the clear heights, and no task seems to be too difficult to the boundless enthusiasm of the moment. But what is to be done when the soul has descended into the plains, and the enthusiasm is gone and the task remains? Only to go on bravely, trusting to the clearer vision on the mountain top, and making faithful performance fill the place of enthusiasm. The mountain and the plain has each its place in Christian life—the mountain for the clear vision ahead, the lowly road along the plain for the actual performance of the journey."

n Thomas Kennard, to whom the countess is about to be married, is a distinguished Englishman. In appearance he is dark and of very athletic appearance, being rather thick-set than tall. Exploring expeditions in all parts of Africa, and big game hunting in China, India, Canada, Africa, and other parts of the world have been one of his greatest interests. With such tastes Mr. Kennard has not spent much time in England.

His London flat is remembered as the scene of many interesting dinners, whilst his little tea parties have often been among the events of a smart London season. At this flat, which for London is quite large, just off Park Lane, Mr. Kennard has some of the wonderful trophies of his antiques, among them being a collection of Queen Anne furniture of which Mr. Kennard is very proud. His collecting hobby is also known to include curious bric-a-brac.

It was a pleasure trip rather than a hunting excursion that took the bridegroom-elect to India where as one of the distinguished guests at the Durbar he first met Cora, countess of Stafford. —Detroit Free Press.

Beautiful Arms.

Every woman desires beautiful arms. On some nature has bestowed them, but others less fortunate must cultivate them. This can be done, provided she will spend time, patience and a little money. Once in a while an artist comes across a beautiful pair of arms, every line exactly modeled every move indicating expression, but this is an exception. The arms with round and flowing outlines that taper down to the wrist are few and far between.

If the arm is not sufficiently developed to be graceful it may be improved by proper care and exercise. To begin with a thin scrawny arm must have plenty of skin food. Almond oil is good, so is the cold oils. The oil should be rubbed over the arm thoroughly with a downward motion, stroking the arm from the shoulder to the wrist. The average woman will be surprised at the dark substance that comes off during the operation, but this is dirt that collects in the pores with which the skin is dotted. This dirt cannot be removed with water alone, and nothing but skin food will at once cleanse the pores and fill them so that blackheads will not appear.

Women who devote much attention to beauty steam their arms by wrapping them in hot towels, using care not to burn them. This is a laborious process and where the skin is tender is often painful. Often the upper arm needs a massage which is not necessary for the lower arm, as that is more often used. In this case the upper arm should be gone over thoroughly with melted mutton fat, which can be perfumed to suit the taste. The fat is healing and strengthening and is readily absorbed by the skin pores. If ugly hair is on the arm it can be removed by rubbing the skin with powdered pumice stone daily until it disappears.

The use of exercise to obtain a beautiful arm is to be recommended from the hygienic viewpoint. Indian clubs and dumb bells are excellent for this purpose. With a dumb bell of light weight (many persons injure themselves by using too heavy dumb bells) the arms should be held upward and gently revolved around the head. Then with one hand upraised the other arm should be slowly extended until it reaches the shoulders, letting it fall gradually until it reaches the waist line at the back.—Housekeeper.

Fashion Notes.

New vests are shaped like loose coats or sailors' "pea jackets."

Narrow bands of Persian velvet set on small tucks make a stylish skirt trimming.

Braid and cloth will be employed for the ornamentation of velvet gowns for day wear.

To lend a touch of brightness to gray costumes, dark orange velvet is employed for garniture.

Fichu effects are a boon to the woman who has to "do over" old gowns on a small allowance.

Kid girdles for dressy suits are elaborated with gold tracery and clasped with flat, gold buckles.

Many charming house dresses are made of white poplinette, which is as pretty as it is inexpensive.

Flat surplice pieces of real lace in the heavier varieties appear upon many of the new evening blouses.

The prettiest taffeta petticoats have closely pleated ruffles finished at top and bottom with quaint, old-fashioned ruching.

Among the newest ribbons are broad, soft fine weaves in taffeta, liberty satin and the most exquisite brocades. Some are in "solid" colors, and others printed in the loveliest of floral designs; while the brocades and metallic weaves are perfection in textiles.

There are a dozen new weaves of silk, some of the richest showing disks and figures of velvet ombre of the color of the ground or in contrasting shade. Many of the light-colored silks are woven with velvet figures, flowers and leaves of the natural colors. Martele velvets resemble embossed velvets, but have gone through a slightly different process, giving the pattern a vague, shadowy effect.

AGRICULTURAL.

Profit in Poultry.

Is there anything on the farm that pays better than poultry or the hen? asks The Epitomist. Some say that there is no profit in poultry, but this depends upon who is in the business. In many homes the poultry money clothes the children and gives the farmer's wife many a necessity that otherwise she would be compelled to go without. Often the hen on the farm is greatly neglected and has to pick up her food wherever she can find it, yet she attends strictly to business and gives one an idea of her value when carefully attended to. In many of the poorer homes eggs are all the money the families ever see, and these are exchanged at the small stores for necessaries. A few years ago it was almost impossible to get cash for eggs in the country, but now there are regular poultry agents who pass over all the leading highways paying the highest market prices for poultry and eggs. When one gives time and study to poultry it pays wonderfully, and some go so far as to say that the hen is the greatest wealth producer in America. However this may be, it is certain that more attention is being given to poultry than ever before. There are many who use eggs as a substitute for meat, and there will always be a demand for them, no matter how much the price varies with the season, and as the highest prices are realized during the holidays one ought to manage so as to have the pullets come into laying at that time. Neither the old fowls nor the pullets will lay during severely cold weather, however, unless given the warmth they require and the proper food.

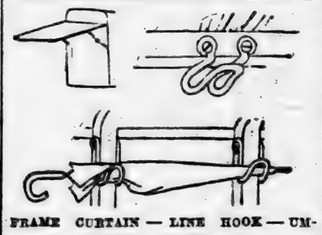
Low Average Product.

An increase in the production of butter and milk, by resorting to the breeds adapted for such work, opens a market for the grain on the farms. Every farmer who can contrive to utilize his crops on the farm saves the several costs of commission, transportation and other incidentals, and this amounts to a large sum when estimated for the whole country. There are thousands of farmers who keep cows which do not produce over three pounds of butter per week, and it is safe to claim that there are also thousands of cows that do not average 100 pounds of butter in a year, and they are not difficult to find, even in this section. The cow of an improved breed assists the farmer to have a home market because she demands more food, which she converts into a large quantity of milk and butter, thus not only enabling him to dispose of his crops to better advantage, but to derive larger profits because of the decreased expenses for labor, shelter and food in proportion to product derived. The $200,000,000 produced in the form of butter could easily be increased to $400,000,000 if better cows were used. Cheap grain can be converted into an article of higher price. It is claimed that there are three pounds of butter that can be gotten from a bushel of corn by feeding to good butter cows, but it does not pay for the labor when the cows are not capable of fully utilizing the corn for the purposes intended. The foundation, therefore, is in the kind of stock used. The cow is the real factory for producing butter, and the greater her capacity the more thoroughly the raw material is manufactured into the product.—Philadelphia Record.

The Farmer's Market Wagon.

Farmers who regularly take produce to market or deliver direct to customers should have a wagon fitted with conveniences for that purpose. Such an outfit adds much to comfort and in the long run saves expense, says a New England Homestead writer in describing the following devices:

Instead of wrapping the lines about the whip or leaving them where they often get beneath the horse's feet, why not have a wire hook fastened to the wagon overhead, as shown in the cut? It can be easily made of stiff fencing wire and secured on the wagon.



FRAME CURTAIN — LINE HOOK — UMBRELLA HOLDER.

At one side near the top two other hooks, similarly fastened to the bows, hold an umbrella, as seen in the figure. This is kept there rain or shine, is never forgotten and left at home when most needed.

Instead of a rear curtain, why not stretch the oilcloth or canvas on a frame hinged at the top? It should be furnished with stays, jointed like those of a buggy top, as represented in the drawing. It serves as an awning and protects from sun or rain when the driver is standing in market or taking articles from the wagon.—Connecticut Farmer.

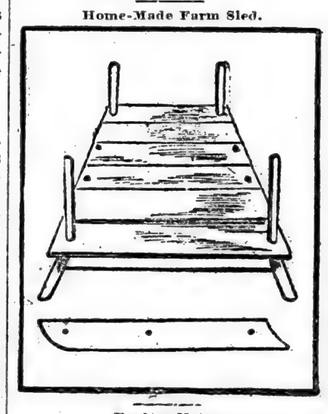
Feeding For Profit.

We may be feeding the correct foods to our poultry, but how are we feeding them? If one is not very careful the fowls will become indolent, especially in winter, when they are confined. If they can be induced to work for their food it will be better for them. Of course, all soft foods must be fed in troughs, for if thrown upon the ground a large portion of it would be wasted, and besides the fowls would be liable to eat dirt, snow, etc., which is unfit for them. The grain that is given them should be scattered here and there among litter, and thus they are afforded the exercise that they are so much in need of. Feeding corn on the cob is another good way to make them exercise.

The feed trough must be cleaned often, so that no disease germs may accumulate. It will require cleaning oftener in the summer, for if any food is left in the trough it will soon become sour. Take hot water and an old broom to it in winter and it will not be a difficult task.

Do not allow the geese, ducks and chickens to live in the same quarters, for if they do the chickens will not do well. Ducks, especially, have very untidy habits, create filth rapidly, and unless they are frequently changed to new quarters will cause very disagreeable odors. Although they have their drawbacks they are very valuable fowls to have, any way. Every year they are becoming more popular as table fowls; by many the meat is pronounced superior to turkey. It is not necessary to keep them until they have reached maturity before selling. When they are eight or ten weeks old they are usually ready for the market. During the first few weeks of a duckling's life they require considerable care, but after they get started to growing they can stand considerable roughing and do not seem to thank any one for their care. Yards, fenced with wire netting, two feet high, are very good to keep the ducks in. They can be moved and changed to new locations when necessary.—M. D. H., in Indiana Farmer.

Home-Made Farm Sled.



Poultry Notes.

Coarse bones in fowls indicate coarse meat.

Regularity and carefulness are the keynotes of success in poultry culture.

Both the poultry and the keeper need grit. See that both are well supplied.

February is a good time to plan, if not to make, the yards for spring breeding.

Don't keep more fowls than you can attend to well. Neglected poultry are money losers.

Never carry a fowl by the legs with its head down. It is an old and cruel fashion. Just as much so as carrying a duck by its neck, or a rabbit by its ears.

A grange in New York, at a public meeting, figured it out that a hundred hens will, in a single season, beat four cows by $40 as producers of revenue. In this case figures did not lie.

A good game hen will whip a cat, a rat, or a hawk, and fight anything that molests her brood. A few on a place are good to have about, as they never have bad luck in raising a family.

P. Tumbledown's fowls perch on his farm wagons and implements under the trees. They are too weak from starvation to fly up into the branches. The beautiful snow is their only covering.

In raising winter chicks for broilers, do not make the mistake of removing them from a heated brooder to a cold house before they are full feathered. This will stunt their growth every time. They need artificial warmth at this season, from start to finish, to keep them growing and thrifty.

Sam Jones' Dog.

Sam Jones has spoken again, and of course he couldn't get through a paragraph without reference to "a yaller dog." Sam and his rhetorical dog are inseparable. The dog always points an epigram and illustrates a fable. Wherever Samuel goes this dog is sure to go; if it is a sermon or lecture, or only an interview, the dog is called up and exhibited.

Sometimes Sam's figure is varied. He may say to his audience, "Some of you old yaller dogs out there don't believe that, do you?" This always fetches a great roaring, reverberating laugh. Wit is said to consist in the unexpected. But if you have ever heard of Sam Jones that dog isn't unexpected. You know, or ought to know, that it will be trotted in presently in one form or another. It may be introduced to you as a "cabbage eared coon dog," or only a "bull pup," but it is the same old dog. It accompanies Sam Jones everywhere, as the faithful Snyder followed Rip. We have taken a great fancy to this canine and should be greatly disappointed if Preacher Jones didn't put him through his tricks at any lecture or "speakin'" in which he took part. We should feel like calling out: "What's the matter, Sam; have you lost your dog?" This dog is unquestionably popular. His appearance is always greeted with a broad and laughing countenance, and we hope that the dog and the inimitable Sam will continue on to a green old age together.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"BLACK HAND" SOCIETY.

A BRANCH OF THE MAFIA, CREATES REIGN OF TERROR.

Strikes Fear Into Many Italian Residents—Death Is Threatened If Blackmail Be Refused—More Than Forty Letters Demanding Large Sums.

There are now more than 40 letters in the hands of the police department written by agents of the "Black Hand" society, demanding blackmail from as many Italian residents in the city. For weeks the detective department has been at work trying to uproot this newest band of criminals, who are supposed to be closely allied with the Mafia.

Emboldened by the success which met their earlier efforts the members of the "Black Hand" have become more daring of late and have created a reign of terror among those Italians who are known to have money. It is owing to the similarity of its methods that the police believe that "La Mana Negra" or "Black Hand" is an adjunct of the Mafia, and it is upon this theory that they are working. They are encountering the same difficulty in discovering evidence against this new organization that they have always found in connection with the older one.

The first case the police were called upon to handle was that of Gaetano Riggio, a grocer, who was threatened with death unless he complied with the demands of the society. They asked for $500. The best laid plans of the department went for naught, for the blackmailers were too adroit to be caught in the nets prepared for them.

While the Mafia is said to owe its origin to a political cause and is now an instrument of vengeance, the "Black Hand" makes no such claims and is plainly and simply a blackmailing organization, using threats as the lever to work its victims.

The complaint of the police is that the victims of the band refuse to cooperate with them in their efforts to hunt down the persecutors. This reluctance is ascribed to fear. Several instances are known where the recipients of these letters have submitted to the demand rather than invoke the displeasure of the dreaded society and place their lives in peril.

Although death is always threatened as a consequence of a refusal to pay the levy, the police are skeptical as to the readiness of the "Black Hand" to go so far.

They admit the possibility of error, however, for in several cases it has been shown that supposed Mafia victims have previous to their death, received blackmailing letters. This, it is thought, would lend color to the theory that the "Black Hand" would under certain circumstances, make good its threat.

So long have these secret societies been dominant factors in the affairs of the Italians, that it is only with the greatest difficulty, it is declared, that one can be persuaded to talk about them. And this condition has been intensified of late by the daringness of the "Black Hand's" operations.

Within the last month the society substantiated one of its threats when it kidnapped Father Cirringione, the Bronx priest, who declares that his abduction followed immediately upon his refusal to pay a large sum of money which he was supposed to have collected to build his new church to the blackmailers.

A letter of the same import was received recently by Lawyer Gulatta, who was Father Cirringione's attorney, and only last week John Ortolando, a wealthy Hoboken fish dealer, got one demanding $2000 under penalty of death. Italian bankers and doctors, whose business necessitate their remaining out late at night, have been threatened, and it is known that many rather than have trouble with the band, have sent them money.

Among the other recent cases which have been occupying the attention of the police is that of Nicola Capiello, a wealthy dock builder, of No. 107 Second place, Brooklyn. Capello received a letter the latter part of September demanding $1000 under a similar threat to that contained in the Ortolando letter. This letter was signed "La Mana Negra."

The signature thoroughly terrified Capiello, who was conversant with the history of the organization, and without seeking police aid he immediately acceded to the demand for the money. Encouraged by their success the blackmailers soon after made another demand upon Capiello, this time for $4000, and followed this with another note in which the demand was raised to no less than $10,000. This time he summoned up enough courage to communicate with the police, who have the matter now in hand.

The recent murder of Banker Tilli in Philadelphia is ascribed in some quarters to the "Black Hand," for it is known that he had on several occasions refused to pay blackmail.

The elaborate system of mulcting fruit vendors and street peddlers which led to a murder last year in Brooklyn, and which was widely discussed at the time, was also laid at the door of these organized blackmailers.

The greater part of the investigation of these cases has been in charge of Detective-Sergeant Petrosino. In an interview he advanced the theory that the "Black Hand" was composed of brigands who had long infested certain portions of Italy and who had been compelled to flee.

"The members of this society may be desperate men by instinct," said Petrosino; "but they have no thought of murder when they send out the threatening letters. Their plan is simply to intimidate, and before sending out their letters they learn the character of the man they are writing to. First, they find out whether he has money, and then they learn whether he is timid. If he should be they immediately send him a letter threatening instant death if he refuse to comply with the demands made.

"As soon as the timid man receives such a letter he is filled with an exaggerated fear, and if able he supplies the money demanded without thought of applying to the police for protection. He is in abject terror of the 'Black Hand,' and believes implicitly that if he told his story to the police death would come to him swiftly.

"That they will not carry out their threats has been proven time and time again, for often these brigands make mistakes and single out a man for whom their threats have no terrors. These men immediately come to us and tell us of the threats made. Thereafter they are not annoyed by any more threatening letters.

"What makes it hard for us is that even the boldest sometimes fear to turn over to us the letters they receive. They have no fear of the threats, but they do fear to turn over the letters.

"These Italian societies never select an American for a victim. For the average American the dread Mafia has no terrors, but the mysterious secrecy of these organizations is a terror in itself to the timid Italian. If I could only induce them to turn over to the police department all the information they have I have no doubt that the 'Black Hand' would be stamped out in short order."—New York World.

PNEUMONIA AND OVERHEATING.

Ventilation and Moderate Warmth Diminish Danger of Disease.

While science is trying to determine the most probable cause or causes of that dread disease pneumonia, it is not for the layman dogmatically to assert that this or that condition of thing may be held responsible for making the malady epidemic. Yet as science generally attributes a marked increase in pneumonia to sudden and extreme variations in temperature, perhaps the layman may say that overheated houses, offices, factories, stores, theatres, etc., produce a condition favorable to the spread of this exceedingly dangerous affection.

Nothing but a constitution of iron could stand without injury the changes in temperature to which the average city dweller is subjected in this day of steam heat, foul air and poor ventilation. To step from a house or office heated to 80 degrees, or higher, into an outside temperature of from 20 degrees all the way down to zero, and sometimes below, must subject the entire body, and especially the respiratory organs, to a most severe and menacing strain.

The same danger may come from heating with stoves when a single room is kept at a much higher temperature than other parts of the house, so that even moving about inside is favorable to temperature changes which may pave the way for pneumonia.

Thus it is that the disease carries off the poor as well as the rich, but does not number among its victims many who either are careful not to get overheated or who cannot afford very high temperatures in winter.

Last week the deaths from pneumonia in this city were 139, and for the same period in New York, the record breaking number of 272 was recorded. No wonder we are coming to fear this disease more than consumption. But if a fruitful cause of pneumonia is overheating, which means bad air and sudden changes in temperature, how easily we can find a remedy.

Simply keep our houses and other buildings moderately and comfortably warm, avoid crowded street cars as much as possible, keep much in the open air, and see that living, working and sleeping rooms are well ventilated. This would save fuel, give health and doubtless do much to ward off the most dangerous of cold weather maladies.—Chicago Evening Post.

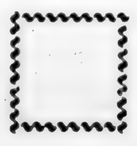
DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?



THE PEOPLES MEETING.

The populist executive committee of Chilton county met in Clanton, March 15th, and a large number of the party were in attendance also. The assemblage was called to order by Chairman W. H. Shaw, who suggested that as the committee had a lot of business to attend to, and would have to be by themselves, that the meeting should elect a chairman, and he nominated Moses Robinson for this position, who was unanimously elected. S. W. Collins was elected secretary by a like vote. The first thing was music furnished by a couple of boys who were supposed to represent a populist and a democrat but as they could not play in unison, they gave way to a second couple who were a populist and republican who played very harmoniously. There were a number of speeches made from different beats in the county, and the speakers effectively disposed of the canards set afloat by the democrats as to defections from the ranks of the peoples party. As the democrats in trying to get a decent crowd to hear them had announced on Monday that a big democratic rally would be held on the same date and that they would absorb the populists boots and all. L. H. Reynolds asked the audience of several hundred that all who would not join in with the democrats to rise, and the entire assemblage (with the exception of a baker's dozen of "dyed in the wool" democrats on the rear seats) rose to their feet when the question was put as to who favored joining the democracy, even the "old case hardened" democratic sinners in the rear would not rise. We suppose that they thought as they were already where there was no help for them they would have to "grin and bear it," but the beauty of the proposition was that it effectually disposed of any claims the banner organ will make about "the grand democratic rally."

The house was pretty well filled with the salt of the earth in the shape of tried and true populists and republicans, among whom we noticed Anderson Baker, Sr., Henry Benson, G. W. Shaw, T. G. Milling, J. W. G. Kicker, T. J. Collins, W. H. Shaw, J. D. Collins, T. J. Dorminy, J. J. Grant, S. W. Collins, R. J. Williams, J. D. Grant, H. T. Littlejohn, A. T. Hathcock, John Edwards, W. Y. Nix, G. W. Edwards, A. F. Childress, A. C. Mims, J. M. Mims, G. W. Wilson, J. M. Grant, W. T. Mahan, W. A. Reynolds, Y. O. Freeman, C. H. Reynolds, T. J. Hubbard, L. H. Reynolds, Alex Glasscock, R. C. Riggins, John Bice, Moses Robinson. Well, we'll have to give it up, our space is too limited, but it was a great day for the opponents of the ringster democracy and the county will stay in the proper hands, and "don't you forget it."

POPULIST MEETING.

The populist executive committee of Chilton county met in Clanton on March 15th. The house was called to order by Chairman W. H. Shaw. As the committee had other business to attend to, they were called to a separate room. Then Moses Robinson was elected chairman of the meeting in general, and S. W. Collins, secretary. The first thing was music from small boys who were full fledged populists. Then was had short speeches from Chairman Robinson, T. J. Collins, A. C. Mims, Alex Glasscock, Rev. J. H. Thomas, L. B. Pounds, Professor Jennings, J. W. Moore, E. G. Rollins, Anderson Baker, Sr., G. W. Shaw, G. W. Edwards and Hon. L. H. Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds asked all present who wanted to unite with the democrats to stand up, and not a single one stood, but all said that they were still independent populists.

Moses Robinson, Chairman.
S. W. Collins, Secretary.

Action of the Committee.

At the official meeting of the populist executive committee of Chilton county at the court house in Clanton Alabama, the following resolutions were passed:

Be it resolved: That a primary election be held by the voters of Chilton county, on Tuesday, the 26th day of July, 1904, for the purpose of selecting candidates for the offices to be filled in November next.

2d. That all voters in said county who will abide by the results of such primary election and who are opposed to ring rule, caucus domination and political trickery are entitled to be candidates and to vote in said primary.

3d. That a committee of three consisting of W. H. Shaw, T. J. Dorminy and J. D. Collins are hereby authorized to make all the detailed arrangements as to the management and conduct of said primary election, and give public notice thereof to the people at the proper time.

4th. That the candidate receiving the greatest number of votes for any office, shall be declared the nominee of the primary election for such office, except in case of tie, when the executive committee shall decide same by ballot.

Be it Resolved: That we the peoples party executive committee of Chilton county do hereby endorse the Union (a paper published in Clanton, Ala.,) as our official organ.

Resolved: That this committee hereby recommend that the candidates before our primary refrain from any mud-slinging or abuse, during their canvass for office.

In calling a primary election to select candidates for the various offices to be filled by election in Chilton county, we desire to invite all honest men in the county to join with us in selecting men for the different offices that are worthy of election, competent to fill the office and true to their expressed convictions. We believe that every man has the right to think for himself, form his own conclusions of what is best for himself and his country and then vote with us in a primary election where every man will have the right to vote his preference without dictation by self-appointed party bosses. We realize that good government rests alone with the people governed and we therefore abhor the idea of a few men selecting all the candidates, as is now done by the so called democratic party in this county. We have named the date of our primary late enough for the people to have all the time necessary to select and name good men, and we recommend to the voters of the county that they adopt that good though old rule of letting the office seek the man. We suggest that you talk together and when you find the right man for the place, bring him forward even though he does not seek the office. Lay aside all prejudice and select a ticket of good true men who will work not alone for self but also for the good of the county and the people they serve. It is very needful at this time that we act with great caution and prudence, in the naming of our ticket and we greatly desire that every voter cast his ballot for the man he honestly believes ought to have the office without regard to whatever political name he may be called.

W. H. Shaw, Chairman.
J. D. Collins, Secretary.

To the Voters of Chilton County.

We are almost in another campaign and there are stronger reasons today why we populists should stand together than ever before. In the first place two parties are necessary for good government, without two parties where would our nation drift to, if we had only one party? We would see coruption in every branch of office. Where did our own beloved county drift to only a few years ago, when the democrats had control of every office? Voters, have you forgotten the condition of affairs then? Do you want to return to the same condition? Don't you see the same court house ring, trying to get charge of the offices? Now, you are asked to return or go into the democratic primary. What for? Peace, as they put it. Peace with whom? With men that want office. Don't you know that the democrats are not sincere in asking you to go into their primary? If they want you as a party, why when their committee was in session, did they not ask your committee to meet with them and fix up some kind of an agreement? But they go on and get their primary started, and now suggest a compromise, only to confuse enough populists to help elect their ticket. If the populist party were to go into their primary the democrats would at once set about to devise some means to get them out, just as they did in 1892. And what act of yours as a party is there that does not deserve the confidence of the people? It is true that a few men that we have elected to office have deserted to our enemies, but when one of the disciples betrayed Christ, it was no evidence that Christ was not right, or that religion was not true. What act of the democratic party is there that deserves our disbanding and going into their ranks, should we break away from our party and join the democrats because they have disfranchised 100,000 white men in Alabama, and did they not promise not to disfranchise a single white man, and have they not disfranchised over 500 in Chilton? Why this is enough to condemn them for ever. There might have been some excuse a few years ago for the populist going into the democratic party, for they did adopt some of our principles, but t'was only done to deceive and destroy the populist party. Can you find a democrat today that still advocates the populist principles? Not one, but to the contrary all their leading papers are cursing Bryan for ever advocating populist ideas. Yes, the democratic party has returned to Cleveland, and his ideas, and in the name of all that is holy, who wants to return to Cleveland days? Have you voters forgotten the army of tramps that was roaming over this country, and the soup houses that were established to keep men from starvation? And have you farmers forgotten your own struggles to make a living during his administration?

Can you trust the democrats? Did they not tell you two years ago, that if they (the democrats) were defeated, that you would see negroes on every jury in every county in the state? And now it is a fact that Dallas county right in the heart of the black belt has put negroes on every jury panel, the very thing they charged the opposition with doing. In conclusion we will say, there are no grounds on which the populists and democrats can join forces. The populist party stands for progress and prosperity, and believes that the humblest citizen in his rags and poverty is as good as the millionaire in his mansion and fine linen, and that the poor man has as much right to vote as the rich. No we can never join forces with any party that would deprive any man of the privilege of voting because he happened to be unfortunate and poor.

Again, if the democratic party does not represent the great and oppressive corporations in Alabama, pray tell us who does? Who have made the laws that give the corporations so much power and special privileges over the poor man? Look at the law made by the last legislature in the interest of corporations! Made it a criminal offense for two or more to agree together to quit work, or to stop trading with a merchant. Now, populists, let us stand foot to foot, shoulder to shoulder, and breast to breast and victory is ours. We have the best united party today that we have had in years and we invite all who are in favor of good government, equal rights to all and the people's rule, to join us. Stay out of the machine primary April 11th, and let us have a peoples primary, free from machine rule, nominate a good ticket and we will elect it without any trouble.

Yours truly,
The Populist Executive Committee.

Debate.

The LaFayette Debating society is progressing nicely. We had a debate Thursday night and invited all the school girls and their mothers. Quite a number were present and all seemed to be highly entertained. The subject was: Resolved: that Robert E. Lee, was a greater man than Stonewall Jackson. After an interesting debate of about an hour and a half the president rendered his decision in favor of the negative. Among the visitors was Mr. Martin Sorrell, of Thorsby, a former member of the society.

We are going to have a public debate soon and a large attendance is expected. Though we are young in the cause, yet we are striving to reach a higher plane, on which we can stand and defend ourselves through life.

Success to your many readers.

"NOBODY'S DARLING."

Thorsby, Ala., March 12, 1904.

Editor Union: You should have been at Collins chapel the other day there was a grand gathering of people, a house full to overflowing, wagons, buggies and horses crowded all around, a generous dinner for all, the tables fairly groaned under the weight of good things to eat of which everybody partook bountifully, both populists and democrats. Oh! it was a time to be long remembered, but perhaps the greatest feature of the occasion was the speech of S. M. Adams, who is a candidate for probate judge on the populist ticket, and the way in which he showed up the course of brother Honeycutt, was enough to make the hair rise on your head, showing how ungrateful Honeycutt was to the people who had done so much for him, and disrupting the peoples party, which would give the democrats a chance to come in, and then arraigned that party for all its hypocricies and damnable methods of fraud and the people cheered him to the echo and Wily Gore hunched the fellow that sat by him, saying, "I tell you, he's a good 'un, don't he pour it to them hot tho'," as Adams waxed louder and hotter and when the speaking was over brother W. A. Mims, was almost beside himself and walked around among the crowd saying that he did not see how any man could ever vote a democratic ticket after hearing such a speech. All with one accord said the same. But hold, I am not dreaming but am telling you the truth. I have simply let my mind drop back a notch, back to 1898, while I started out to tell you of things as they are now transpiring around the chapel.

Everybody is busy, hard at work, preparing their fields for another crop when lo! this same Adams, comes around at night and with his utmost efforts assisted by Aakins and little Dock, gather in all nine men, one woman and some kids, to which he endeavors to unburden his griefs and sorrors, he tells them in pathetic strains how he came to wreck his majestic craft, on the democratic strand, the place where he used to warn the people never to go, but now in his misery and bereft condition of mind he is trying to persuade his one time friends to follow him to where the woodbine twineth and the whangdoodle mourneth, and in his impotent rage, he arraigns Pounds and Reynolds, as in some way responsible for his downfall, one he says has too much money and the other not enough, one wants everything and the other wants nothing, so like all fallen and demented creatures he seeks to place the blame of his own undoing and downfall on some one else. Well it is exceedingly sad, to see what was once a strong man, come to such grief, but let this sad picture point a moral which is as true as gospel, that when any man allows himself led by ambition to rise in the world to places of high renown and to accomplish his desires, resorts to schemes and tricks, deserts his friends, crucifies his better principles and like Benedict Arnold, goes over to the enemy and turns his guns upon those who have stood with him in the vangard against the enemy, his downfall is certain, his doom is sure and even those with whom he casts his lot inwardly despise him, and many openly curse him and only tolerate him for the possible uuse they make of him but today he is the heaviest burden the democrats have to carry in this county and many of them realize it.

Jemison.

I noticed a piece signed X-ray a couple of weeks since suggesting some prospective candidates. Of course we all know that we have many good men, more than we have places for but I suggest the following list: For Probate Judge, we can't beat Hon. L. H. Roynolds. He is fully competent, and I think he deserves it, for he has always been the people's friend and has made the best representative this county has ever had and though he has held office for a long time, he has never had anything that paid much. For Clerk, E. G. Rollins is the best one in sight, he served us well as assessor and is a thorough gentleman. For Assessor, Prof. J. H. Anderson; is as fine a self made man as there is in the county, and when I say self-made I mean it in the fullest sense of the word, he is fully competent and worthy of anything that the people can give him. For Collector, there is Rev. J. H. Thomas, well known and one of the best Baptist preachers that we have, a worthy man and fully competent. I know some of our people object to preachers being in politics but he is not a Honeycutt or Adams, and we can't get a better man than him for this place. Then for commissioners, Moses Robinson, W. H. Conway, Y. O. Nix and Alex Glasscock, these are all competent men and while some of them have been in office before, this is a place that ought always to have some hold-overs. For Superintendent of Education Prof. John Martin is an experienced teacher and is worthy of the place. You see I've left out almost all the old officers, and the reason is that if there is any pay or honor in serving the people, then pass it around among all the good men, and I think that the old officers ought to just gently step down and out and let some other good men have the offices, sot that the old officers are not good men, but there are plenty of men just as good. Now let every populist and republican pull together as they have always done before.

A JOLLY POP.

Beat Ten.

Mr. Editor: Our farmers are making good use of the fine weather.

Roberts and McSwain are turning out fine lumber at their mill on the Popwell old place.

Mr. Editor, there seems to have been a little political explosion among the populists and republicans lately, the democrats have kindly invited everybody to line up with them in their primary on April 11th, they not only let the bars down but have torn the fence away. But as L. H. Reynolds said in the Union last week "the people of Chilton are hard to fool." I saw an article in last weeks Banner over the signature "Old confederate soldier," in which the old fellow defines republicanism (in a horn) and says "north of Mason and Dixon's line they have mixed schools, eat beside negroes in restaurants, sit beside them in passenger coaches etc." Admitting this to be true (for the sake of argument) it would be just the same if all those states up there were under democratic rule, the democrats like the negro better than do the republicans. If those people up north wish to practice social equality with negroes that is their business it will never be so in Alabama. There is not a southern white man that don't know that all that "negroism" and "negro equality" talk is bosh, if he has half sense. "Old soldier" failed to tell us what democracy means, I guess he left that for me to do, I will give part of it as I haven't time to give it all. Democracy means, free soup, low tariff, low prices, no money, closed mills, bank failures, tramps all over the country and a general panic, etc.

The democrats will learn next November that populism and republicanism means all the offices in Chilton county filled with republicans and populist, and a totally defeated democracy. Notwithstanding the broad invitation by the democrats for everybody to participate in their primary, I feel safe in saying that not a single genuine republican or populist will join them.

Hoping that the subscriptions to the Union will double within 90 days I am, Yours truly,

J. W. G. Kicker.

Mars Hill.

We are having some good weather and our farmers are busy.

The health of our community is tolerably good, though we had a death to occur near Jemison, Mr. Jack Watson died from congestion of the brain, he was a good citizen and every one is sorry and tender their sympathy to his bereaved family and hope they will look for help above.

Now a few words about politics in this neighborhood, we are all one way and that is populist, so we are not worried. This "John in the backwoods" seems to be lacking in principal. I guess he has always been a democrat, but here are some facts for him. The only principle the democrat has is "rule or ruin," so as the majority of the people of Chilton have good principles they won't have anything to do with the democrats. Look at that case of Jacoby, he was tried and convicted for his mean conduct to a girl, got 20 years sentence but has been pardoned by Governor Jelks and is loose again to do more devilry, If he had been a poor man, he would have had to serve his time out. No, Johnny I don't believe you ever were a populist, or you would not write like you do, you may have pretended you were to get some pie.

The pops will land the election in November sure and don't you forget it.

I am glad to say that F. M. Langston is getting along slowly, and hopes to be out before long.

Success to the Union.

RUSSIA'S UNDERGROUND PRESS

A PRINTING SHOP THE POLICE SPIES CAN'T DISCOVER.

For Five Years It Has Published the "Worker's Voice" Monthly --- Methods by Which the Magazine Used to Be Got Out --- Seizure of the First Press.

A REVOLUTIONARY Jewish magazine of from twenty-four to thirty pages is published in Russia every month, and for the last five years the spies and detectives of the police have been searching in vain for the place of its publication. From the same press come many proclamations, handbills and booklets of a revolutionary character, which are spread broadcast throughout the Czar's dominions.

The members of the General Jewish Workingmen's League of Russia and Poland, who engage in the publication and the distribution of revolutionary matter, are constantly smuggling revolutionary pamphlets across the frontier. The adventures which this business in contraband literature leads to and the many escapes the smugglers have would furnish a great fund of material for romantic novelists, but for the greater part these stories will remain untold. A few striking incidents of this underground journalism may be related here.

To begin with there is the secret press of the Bund, the Jewish Workingmen's League referred to. As has been said, the printing of the twenty-four page monthly journal of the league, which is called the Worker's Voice, has been kept up for five years.

This is the second press of the Bund, the first one having been discovered by the police and destroyed five years ago. The bundists who were working on the paper at that time were all arrested, but ten days later the Worker's Voice, better printed than before and full of new life, came out again.

The men who were arrested were all sent for varying terms to Siberia, but the Bund soon filled their places. To show the enterprise of the Bund, it may be said that the press on which the new issue of the magazine was printed was a new one, the printing material was all new, and all had been obtained within ten days after the confiscation of the first press.

The Voice as produced by the first press was a very crude affair, the copies being proof slips taken from the galleys, but the copies of the new issue that found their way into the hands of the Government officials were neatly printed. Since then the Bund has set up other presses.

Where are these presses located? How is the bulky material handled? How is it that no sounds are heard by people living near the printing shops? Where does the paper come from? How is it brought into the country? Such are the questions which for the past five years have puzzled the Government officials.

Light will be thrown upon these matters by an account of how the Voice was got out by the men in charge of the first press. The printing place was in the city of Babroisk. In the Jewish quarter there was a married carpenter. In the same house was another Jewish family.

The carpenter had little outside custom, and the neighbors had the impression that he worked at home for a furniture factory. Often they saw packages carried out, and believing them to be articles of furniture the matter caused no comment. The real business carried on in the house was described to the writer by a member of the Bund.

"Once when I visited the house I brought a package of lead type. The package was quite large and heavy, but no embarrassing attention was caused.

"I entered the shop with the carpenter, whom I met at the station. The first room was to outward appearance an ordinary carpenter's shop.

"The second room was well furnished. In the centre was a fine tea table covered with a big cloth, on which stood a lamp.

"In a corner of the room was a closet. Of a printing shop there was not the least indication, yet the most important part of the plant was in this room.

"The carpenter took the lamp and the cloth off the table, took hold of one edge of the table, and the pretty painted board moved. Underneath there was disclosed a large, shallow box, and in this box were a number of smaller boxes filled with type. Here the type was set up.

"When any sound caused suspicion the board was slid into place, the cover put on, the lamp placed back on the table and all was as before.

"The great difficulty to me was where the printer kept the mass of paper necessary. He took me to the closet, and touched springs here, setting in motion hidden machinery. Various compartments were disclosed, in which there was ample room to store paper and other things needed in the printing of the Voice.

"The third room was dark. In this room there was a flat stone, upon which the type was laid and the forms locked and printed, proofs being all that the Voice consisted of at that time. All was very crude, but effective.

"Five hundred papers in an hour have been printed by hand, as the printers were very expert and had devised an arrangement of rollers to run the papers more rapidly over the face of the type. When a number of the papers had been printed members of the Bund would come and carry them away.

"There was never a printed paper allowed to stay in the house. If the police should happen to raid the house, the bundists figured out, it would not do to lose the current issue of the paper.

"The carpenter was a natural mechanic and was constantly improving the plant. Even in those days, before the discovery of the hand press, the Bund was engaged with the problem of making a press that should work without noise. It was at last made, but was not installed in Babroisk, but in another city, the secret of which remains with the Bund."

Where the new issue of the Voice is published cannot be told. The last number was a handsomely printed magazine of twenty-six pages. Among the articles was one dealing with the late Luba Isantad, a woman leader of the Bund, who lived in New York. The paper is of good quality, and there are many articles of general interest besides those devoted to the work of the revolutionary propaganda.—Sun.

Tell-Tale Envelopes.

An envelope has been designed that mail thieves cannot tamper with undetected. There are two ways in which ordinary envelopes may be opened—one by forcing the flap open with a thin metal blade and the other by steaming the envelope until the mucilage no longer holds the flap. In either case it is difficult for even the person to whom the letter is addressed to ascertain whether the envelope has been opened unless something has been extracted. The improved envelope differs from the ordinary kind only in having a sheet of tissue paper attached to the flap and extending down inside the pocket. This sheet attaches itself to the surface of the envelope with the sealing of the letter, and it is obvious that any attempt to force the flap would tear the letter, and; in spite of the utmost caution, the torn tissue would be plainly seen when the envelope was opened in the proper way. To detect any subjection to the steaming process the tissue is secured to the flap by a colored mucilage, which liquifies instantly when brought into the presence of hot steam, daubing the inner and outer surface of the letter until it plainly indicates the use of improper methods to ascertain the contents.

A Long Time.

Budd Doble, the veteran reinsman, used to attend frequently a queer little church on the outskirts of Philadelphia. His friends would hear from him a great many facts about this church. One Monday he said:

"At last the meaning of eternity has been made clear to me. The parson explained eternity yesterday in such a way that everybody could understand.

"'Eternity,' said the parson, 'is forever, and five or six everlastings on top of that. Why, brothers and sisters, after millions and billions of centuries had rolled away in eternity it would still be a hundred thousand years to breakfast time.'"—New York Tribune.

When Tea Was New.

Tea in the seventeenth century was offered as a curious foreign drink; it was prepared with care and drunk with some trepidation. A learned physician, Dr. Lister, wrote that "tea and coffee were permitted by God's providence for lessening the number of mankind by shortening life, as a kind of silent plague."—Besant's Survey of London.

RAISING FROGS FOR MARKET

An Industry Which Pays a San Francisco Man $5000 a Year—How He Came to Take Up the Industry—Manner in Which the Frogs Are Raised and Prepared For the Table.

RAISING frogs for the market is a curious industry in which a man in South San Francisco is realizing an income of $5000 a year. One would scarcely believe it possible unless he glanced through the ranch order book, but it is nevertheless a fact. This prosperous frog ranch is owned and conducted by L. C. Combs, who for many years has cultivated the animals for the table. Many attempts, especially in the West, have been made to breed and perfect the common frog, but in most instances they have failed. The little creatures are stubborn to a degree, they demand liberty and plenty of room. They also require a certain kind of mud containing a peculiar mineral deposit in which to hibernate. The food, too, is an important item; delicacies which they can procure for themselves when in a wild state must be forthcoming or they will die. With these obstacles in the path of success, the average experimenter in frog raising soon becomes discouraged, and turns his attention to something else upon which he can count with greater certainty.

How this pioneer frog-raiser in the West came to choose his peculiar calling is interesting. Always when a boy he, like many boys of the present day, delighted to visit the old pond in the meadow and to scoop his felt hat full of wriggly, squirming little tadpoles. To watch their curious antics in swimming and the sleek fat little bodies darting through the water was a never-tiring pastime. Later a pet frog was a special delight, but when maturity came with its responsibilities his interest in the animals lapsed for a time. Later, however, the old fascination returned. Once more a half-dozen or so pet frogs sunned themselves in his back yard and hopped among the flowers, catching stray bugs and flies. Finally, it was rumored that "a feller out in Baden was raising frogs." The neighbors whispered, and the curiosity of the country-side was aroused. At that time people who ate frogs were considered in this country little short of barbarians. They were eyed askance in most places, as many of us would look upon an eater of grass-hoppers or snakes.

As time went on, a caterer in one of the French hotels heard of the ranch, and one day, wanting a dozen or so frogs in a hurry, sent there for them. The owner of the froggery scurried the fields and streams to fill that order, and then it came to him that he might raise them for market. Soon the neighbors were surprised to see a high board fence going up around an acre or so belonging to "the feller who raised frogs." A screen of stout wire was stretched over the entire top; a crew of workmen were busy with cement, a wholesale froggery was in preparation. The first animals were wild rain frogs, many of which, unaccustomed to the food provided and the confinement, died. Mr. Combs gave up his down-town business, and devoted his time to scientific experiments, making a systematic study of the creatures. He made experiments with different soils and various methods of raising or lowering the water temperature. A food, which is the frog medicine, had to be discovered, and then, too, something had to be done to protect the frog eggs and the tadpoles from their many enemies. Also the question of how to improve upon the flavor and quality of the flesh came in for a share of study. Books upon the subject of frog raising were sent for even to London, but no one had ever thought to make this humble creature the subject of a book, so, of course, no such work could be found. A year or more passed before much profit could be realized, then little by little the froggery began to thrive. Mr. Combs' study was rewarded by having no more dead frogs, almost every egg turned into a tadpole, and thence into a table delicacy. That was years ago; each year since that time has seen some improvement and some new discovery; now, however, the industry, having ceased to be an experiment, is running on a smooth basis with little or no trouble to the owner, who once more has time to devote part of his attention to other enterprises.

It is surprising to note the curiosity shown by San Franciscans, in the enterprise, which is increased by the extreme eccentricity of the frog raiser. Never to any one's knowledge during all the many years of its existence has any stranger passed the bulldog at the gate of the froggery. The place is hedged in by barriers on all sides, high fences, with screens, bolts, locks and many quaint devices to frighten away all curious would-be discoverers of its secret.

For the accommodation of the frogs, Mr. Combs has three ponds about forty feet in length, twenty feet in width, and from three to five feet in depth. There is also an acre of sandy soil, a portion of made marsh, and a tangled growth of mixed wild shrubbery provided for them. In this way they have many of the conditions they would enjoy in a wild state, yet they have also the advantage of ready food. On sunny days the banks of the ponds are filled with hundreds of the shiny creatures. At night the mingled chorus, or "frog concert," as the neighbors call it, can be heard blocks away. The frog, like almost every living creature, grows to recognise a familiar voice, and to hop across the yard when his particular name is called. They like the touch of the human hand, and several which have attained unusual size, and are therefore kept for pets, report regularly to be fed by Mr. Combs.

Although not credited with having much grey brain matter, they are still interesting studies, each one evidencing a different disposition, much as a similar number of babies would do. Some are good-natured and refuse to quarrel; others are naturally timid, and will plunge into the water at the first commanding croak of a savage adult. Some are gluttons, grabbing all the food and shoving the weaker ones aside in order to get the finest morsel. Several out of a hundred show decidedly humorous qualities, and are inclined to play practical jokes, or tease a particular sleepy or comfortable looking cousin.

At the first suggestion of cold weather the frogs dive to the soft black mud at the bottom of the pond or marsh, and there they remain until the rays of the sun penetrate through. Aside from the several wild insects and shrubs which Mr. Combs keeps a profound secret, the frogs are daily given a portion of chopped raw liver, bread crumbs, water cress, and the chopped leaves of other green domestic vegetables. To catch a large order of frogs in a few minutes, the stoppers in the tank are pulled, the water drained off, and there lies the game within easy reach of the net. Large shipments are made in cases especially provided for the purpose.

The idea has been entertained, but as yet no steps have been made toward its fulfilment, of canning the legs to fill the demand in countries where fresh shipments are impossible. Several prominent physicians in the West are now recommending the broth, and also the flesh of the frog, for invalids in place of the time honored chicken. It is maintained that the muscular, yet tender white flesh contains more nutriment than any other flesh in equal amount. The flavor of the domestic frog varies in like degree with any domestic and wild game. In domesticity the frog attains a great size, some reaching the weight of between three and four pounds.

Now during the last few years orders come in plentifully. With the invasion of foreign influence has come the demand for foreign foods, and this influence has also been the cause of the metamorphosis of the American palate. Those who thirty years ago would have considered the frog unfit for human food now demand that edible, as well as snails. Very few banquets or large dinners are given in the West without either or both delicacies. In San Francisco particularly frogs are in demand.

As Mr. Combs has the only froggery in the West, it devolves upon him to fill the numerous orders that come in, especially during the holidays. Denver, Salt Lake City and all portions of the Middle West are upon his order book. An ordinary banquet of fifty plates requires at least eight dozen frogs. The order book of the froggery shows that in one famous restaurant in San Francisco $1500 worth of frogs legs were consumed during the year 1902.—Harriet Quimby, in New York Post.

An Orange Pest in France.

The French Minister of Agriculture has received from the Riviera a report which shows that the orange growers are threatened with the worst of calamities. A microscopic insect, scientifically known as chrysumphalus minor, is the cause of an orange disease as potentially destructive as the potato disease which spread famine and devastation over Ireland fifty-seven years ago. M. Belle, an expert in Nice, has been investigating the origin and propagation of this malady among the oranges. The Council of the Department of Nice has taken the matter in hand. Orange growers are combining for the extirpation of chrysumphalus minor. It is said that the insect was imported from America some years ago, and that the first signs of its depredations were detected in Florence. The creature attacks all parts of the orange plant—stem, leaf, flower, fruit, everything. In his mature state his coat of mail makes him as impervious to ordinary "insecticides" as the hide of a rhinoceros to a popgun's pellet. He must be caught young, early in March. That is the time when, because of his minuteness, he most easily escapes detection.

Lawyer Got Lion's Share.

Daniel Godwyn, who died in England in 1769, left an estate to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the remnants of this bequest have just reached that society in the shape of a sum of $244. It seems that the testator bequeathed leasehold property to the society in violation of the Mortain act. After a delay of fourteen years the estate went "into Chancery," where it remained from 1783 until the other day, when the balance was paid out to the society, only $244 being left after payment of the expenses of such amazingly protracted litigation.

Why They "Turn."

Bright colors assumed by maples, sumacs and ampelopsis during the autumn months are the result of the oxidizing of the color compounds, or color generators, of the leaf cells. Long protracted cool weather is most favorable to the production of autumn tints, and slight frosts that are not severe enough to kill the cells hasten the display of beauty by producing an enzyme that brings forth the bright purples, oranges and reds. Leaves containing much tannic acid never give bright autumn tints, while those containing sugar give the very prettiest.

LITTLE THINGS Worth Knowing

In Valparaiso all the conductors on the trolley cars are women.

Sleepers of earthenware are used on some of the railroads of Japan.

The mother of Governor Beckham, of Kentucky, has a remarkable record. She has the unprecedented distinction of having been the mother of a Governor, the daughter of a Governor, the sister of a Governor, and the cousin of a Governor.

Women in Austria are never put in prison. A female criminal, no matter how terrible her record, instead of being sent to jail, is conveyed to one of the convents devoted to that purpose, and there she is kept until the expiration of the term for which she was sentenced.

A Chicago paper contained an advertisement reading thus: "Any thin person will learn how to get fat by sending fifty cents to the undersigned." A gullible fellow, who is as thin as a rail, forwarded the sum asked, by mail, and received this reply: "Buy it at the butcher's."

Girls in Norway must know how to sew, knit and bake before their guardians will permit them to have beaux. Some of them are so eager to acquire these useful accomplishments that they are learned before they can read and write. In this country, in some families, household duties are shunned by girls; they are taught to pound the piano, to sing, and chatter French. In many instances they marry fellows too poor to even hire a piano, and too ignorant to speak good English.

"Best on Earth!"

"You can say what you please about Schuylkill water," said Capt. Tucker, the well-known pilot, the other day, "but say nothing against the Delaware. It is the best water in the world."

As Capt. Tucker practically lives on the river (one way) he ought to know. But the reporter wanted reasons.

"I would rather have my ship's tanks filled with Delaware water than any other on earth, and so would every commander I know. It tastes good and, best of all, it keeps. Not even spring water has the keeping qualities that this river water has."

"Does water spoil?" inquired the sceptic.

"Certainly," replied the captain. "Fill a ship's tank with the purest and best, and in a few weeks it looses its taste; get flat, as it were, and that is where the Delaware is ahead. Its water has been known to taste fresh after a voyage to China. This is due to the nature of the soil that is drained by the river. The mountains and the slate regions of the Delaware and Lehigh rivers supply certain chemicals which act as a preservative and make the water different from any other. Why, I have actually known captains to put in from sea during a voyage solely to fill their tanks with Delaware water in preference to any other."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Poisons in the Body.

The body is a factory of poisons. If these poisons, which are constantly being produced in large quantities in the body, are imperfectly removed, or are produced in too great quantity, as the result of overfeeding, the fluids which surround the brain cells and all the living tissues are contaminated with poisonous substances which asphyxiate and paralyze the cells, and so interfere with their activity. This fact explains, in part, at least, the stupidity which is a common after-dinner experience with many persons.

When food is retained in the stomach beyond the normal time, either because of its indigestibility, the taking of too large a quantity of it, or a crippled state of the stomach, these changes are certain to take place. This fact explains a very large share of the myriad symptoms which afflict the chronic dyspeptic. The giddiness, the tangling sensations, the confusion of thought, and even partial insensibility, which are not infrequently observed a few hours after meals in chronic dyspeptics, are due to this cause. Here is the explanation of the irascibility, the despondency, the pessimism, the indecision and various other forms of mental perversity, and even moral depravity, which are not infrequently associated with certain forms of gastro-intestinal disturbances.—Family Doctor, London.

In Old Times.

Once kings did all the work of government. Thus, we hear of King Solomon acting as judge and jury. Kings went to war and led their armies on to victory or defeat. Later certain nobles thought they should have something to do with the government, and finally their claims were granted. Still later certain landed gentlemen deemed it only right that they should have a voice in government, since they had large interests that were affected, and this claim was granted. Later on all men claimed the right to have some voice in government and this was granted. During all this time women were entirely overlooked. Now the women think they should have a voice in government, a vote, since they have as large interests at stake as men, and this seems to be a reasonable conclusion.

For the cream, grate the peel of one orange, whip the white of three eggs; stir in one full cup of powdered sugar and the juice of two oranges; more sugar may be added if necessary. Bake the cake in layers and put the cream on while the cake is warm.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Hot tartaric acid will take ink stains out of white cloth.

The best foundation for mince meat is a fresh beef's tongue. It should not be corned.

A drop of castor oil in the eye will remove a foreign body as quickly and with less trouble than the oft recommended flaxseed.

Vaseline, as most housekeepers know by experience, leaves ugly spots that are not removed by ordinary laundering. A professional cleaner says soaking the stains in kerosene will usually remove them.

The "cellar smell" is extremely disagreeable. It is apt to permeate the whole house. Place a dish of unslaked lime in the vegetable cellar and it will absorb the moisture in the air and also the unpleasant odor.

A French chef says a little salt in apple pies improves the quality of apple pies and lessens the quantity of sugar that is necessary. He never uses spices in apple pies, claiming they spoil the flavor and make the pies indigestible.

Somebody has discovered that if boiling water is poured over potatoes and they are left in it fifteen minutes they will bake in about half the usual time. But wouldn't they cook as fast in the oven as in the hot water? What is gained?

It is difficult to bake the shells for tarts and pies that are baked before filling from puffing up, or blistering in spots. A French chef covers the bottom of the shell with a piece of oiled paper on which he places bits of bread that need to be browned.

Did you ever try baking potatoes on the top of the stove? Turn an iron pan or basin over them and they will bake nicely. If the fire is very hot place them on an asbestos mat. They should be turned occasionally. It is convenient to know this, in case one wants baked potatoes, but does not wish to keep up the kitchen fire. Of course rather more time is required than when baked in the oven.

California Pearl Fisheries.

So far as the American continent is concerned, the true pearl oyster is found chiefly in the Gulf of California. It occurs here both on the east and the west coast and as far south on the Pacific coast as the northern boundary of Guatemala. It is also found on the Brazilian coast and the western shores of South America.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Oil of tartaric acid will take ink stains out of white cloth.

Beef is the best foundation for mince meat when fresh beef's tongue. It should be corned.

A few drop of castor oil in the eye will remove a foreign body as quickly and with less trouble than the oft recommended method.

Kerosene, as most housekeepers know perfectly, leaves ugly spots that cannot be removed by ordinary laundering. A professional cleaner says soaking the stains in kerosene will usually remove them.

"Mildew smell" is extremely disagreeable. It is apt to permeate the whole house. Place a dish of unslaked lime in the vegetable cellar and it will absorb the moisture in the air and the unpleasant odor.

A famous chef says a little salt in mince pies improves the quality of apples and lessens the quantity of sugar that is necessary. He never uses spices in apple pies, claiming they spoil the flavor and make the pies indigestible.

Nearly everybody has discovered that if too much water is poured over potatoes after they are left in it fifteen minutes they will bake in about half the usual time. But wouldn't they cook as fast in the oven as in the hot water? What is gained?

It is difficult to bake the shells for custard pies that are baked before filling from puffing up, or blistering in spots. A French chef covers the bottom of the shell with a piece of paper on which he places bits of suet need to be browned.

Did you ever try baking potatoes on the back of the stove? Turn an iron bake pan over them and they will bake nicely. If the fire is very hot put them on an asbestos mat. They should be turned occasionally. It is well to know this, in case one has baked potatoes, but does not wish to keep up the kitchen fire. Of course more time is required than if baked in the oven.

USES OF REINDEER WOOL.

Blankets and Clothes Made of It Are Excellent Protection Against Moisture.

Thousands of years ago the reindeer roamed far into the temperate zone of the European and American continents. To-day they are found only in the Far North. Whoever visits the more remote regions of Norway soon learns of the great importance of the reindeer to the nomadic Laplanders.

America has a specially strongly built species, not yet domesticated, called caribou. It is found in all parts of Canada, and also in Greenland, where it is made use of. In Northern Europe and Northern Asia, besides the Laplanders, the Samojedes and Tungese keep large herds of these animals; in fact, they are their most valuable and almost their only property. The meat serves as food, the hide furnishes good leather for tents and clothing, and the female reindeer yields nourishing milk.

From time immemorial the Laplanders have known how to manufacture coarse but warm blankets from the woolly hair of the reindeer. These are an excellent protection against moisture and frost. The inhabitants of Sweden and Norway were the first to observe how well the reindeer swims across large bodies of water. This led to the thought that there must be something in the animal's hair suitable to the making of useful textiles. This, in turn, then led to the manufacture of fabrics which are used mainly for protecting the body when the wearer goes out on the sea in winter.

A close examination of the hair of the reindeer furnishes an explanation of its peculiar value. The hair does not have a hollow inside space for its whole length, but is divided or partitioned off into exceedingly numerous cells like water-tight compartments. These are filled with condensed air and their walls are so elastic and at the same time of such strong resistance that they are not broken up either during the process of manufacture of by swelling when wet. The cells expand in water, and thus it happens that a man clad completely in garments made of reindeer wool does not sink when in water, because he is buoyed up by means of the air contained in the hundreds of thousands of hair cells.

In the markets and stores of Norway, Sweden and Russia garments and blankets of reindeer wool are to be had at lower prices than other fabrics.

In Vienna there is a factory which manufactures garments of reindeer wool, especially bathing costumes. For persons unable to swim the possession of such garments is of great value. It is possible that they may be utilized in learning how to swim. Recently successful trials have been made in Paris in this line.

In England attention has been directed to this peculiar property of reindeer wool, and it is proposed to take up its manufacture and possibly to improve it.

History in Tattoo.

There exists in Paris a famous professor, Pere Tible, who, to describe him in his own words, is an "engraver upon human skin." He lives in the Grevelle quarter. As a kind of permanent advertisement he exhibits his left arm, on which are "engraved," in order, all the Presidents of the Republic, from Thiers to Loubet. On the professor's body, it is stated, is to be found the whole history of France—portraits of Charlemagne, Henry IV., Joan of Arc, Louis XIV., Robespierre, Napoleon, Gambetta, and others, with escutcheons, fasces, flag trophies, and similar ornaments galore.—London Tit-Bits.

Can't be restored to health until the kidneys are cured. Read how one woman was restored by using Doan's Kidney Pills:

Mrs. H. A. Van Sickle, 311 6th Ave., S. W., Roanoke, Va., says: "Kidney trouble was hereditary in our family, and I had been so continually afflicted with the disease that I began to despair of even temporary relief. Sometimes I suffered so severely that I was confined to my bed. The aching in my back was intense, and the kidney disorder caused an excess of uric acid in my blood which impaired my digestion. I was compelled to deny myself of many of the little delicacies of diet. The doctors diagnosed my case as congestion of the kidneys. I had about given up hope when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, but I took only a few doses when their curative powers were proven to my satisfaction. I have never been without them in the house since."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers; price, 50 cents, or mailed on receipt of price by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for free trial.

Miss Rose Hennessy, well known as a poetess and elocutionist, of Lexington, Ky., tells how she was cured of uterine inflammation and ovaritis by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For years I enjoyed the best of health and thought that I would always do so. I attended parties and receptions thinly clad, and would be suddenly chilled, but I did not think of the results. I caught a bad cold eighteen months ago while menstruating, and this caused inflammation of the womb and congested ovaries. I suffered excruciating pains and kept getting worse. My attention was called to your Vegetable Compound and the wonderful cures it had performed, and I made up my mind to try it for two months and see what it would do for me. Within one month I felt much better, and at the close of the second I was entirely well.

"I have advised a number of my lady friends to use it, and all express themselves as well satisfied with the results as I was."—MISS ROSE NORA HENNESSY, 410 S. Broadway, Lexington, Ky. — $5000 forfeit if original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

JAPS SHELL PORT ARTHUR

Furious Bombardment of Russian City Carried on Night and Day.

BOTH SIDES SUFFER HEAVILY

Details of the Great Fight—Admiral Togo Now the Popular Hero of Japan—Russian Forts Damaged—Work of Japanese Gunners Was Very Effective—A Long Range Duel.

London.—A news agency dispatch from Tokio gives interesting details of the last fighting at Port Arthur.

Admiral Togo's torpedo flotilla opened the action by steaming in boldly under the batteries and successfully placing a number of mechanical mines in the mouth of the harbor. Then a desperate encounter took place between the destroyers on each side.

A long range duel between cruisers ensued, ending with the retirement of the Russian cruisers Novik and Bayan. The concluding phase of the operations was the bombardment of the inner harbor by the Japanese battleships. They took up their position southwest of Port Arthur, using only their twelve-inch guns. There are twenty-four such in the six battleships composing the squadron. Each gun fired five rounds, a total of 120 of the huge projectiles hurled into the city.

Captain Asai was the hero of the attack. He commanded the three Japanese destroyers and attacked the six Russian destroyers, ordering his craft to close in with the enemy. The order was carried out to the letter.

The boats steamed so close up to the enemy's vessels that they almost touched one another, fighting desperately, until the Russians retired, badly disabled.

Engineer Minamisawa, of the destroyer Kasumi, was mortally wounded. He took part in the first attack on Port Arthur, and also in the attempt to close up the mouth of the harbor. On both occasions he was mentioned for gallantry.

Admiral Togo's purpose in sending cruisers to Talienwan Bay was to destroy a signal station and mine depot. This was duly accomplished. The details of the operations evoked intense enthusiasm. Togo is now permanently numbered among the heroes of the empire.

The latest reports state that the Japanese lost nine killed and five seriously and seventeen slightly wounded. The fleet was undamaged.

A decoration equivalent to the Victoria Cross has been bestowed by the Mikado upon Engineer Minamisawa, of the destroyer Kasumi, who was mortally wounded in the fight.

PREDICTS LONG WAR.

Minister Hayashi Says Russia Cannot Keep Manchuria.

Paris.—Viscount Hayashi, the Japanese Minister at London, has been interviewed by a representative of the Patrie. In replying to the suggestion that it was England that launched Japan into the war in order that she and the United States might reap the fruits of a Japanese victory, he said:

"We do not need any one's help. We are not going to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for any Power. We want China to be open to all. We shall not allow preference to be given to any one. We want the open door. It is Russia that bars the way.

"For the moment this task suffices. But if ever a like danger arose through the action of another Power, we should not hesitate to take the same steps to put an end to it. Even if victorious, Russia could not reap the fruits of her victory; because in four or five years Manchuria would not maintain its position with regard to China. It would be the same if any nation tried to exclude the other Powers.

"China is waking up, and when her 400,000,000 people have realized their strength, they will not long submit to any Power.

"No concessions are possible on our part, unless Russia evacuates Manchuria. I think the war will last a very long time."

Russia's Losses.

Rome.—A private telegram from St. Petersburg says that in the fighting at Port Arthur the Russians lost ninety seamen killed and forty-nine taken prisoners.

Japan's Naval Loss.

St. Petersburg.—The Russian official list of Japanese vessels sunk or disabled includes the following: Battleship Shikishima and cruiser Tsushima, both repairing at Sasebo; cruiser Takashibo, sunk off Chemulpho; cruiser Mutana, sunk off Chefoo; unknown cruiser, sunk off Chemulpo, and six torpedo boats.

Sixty Killed by Japs' Fire.

Tientsin.—An official who witnessed the latest bombardment at Port Arthur reports that twenty Russians were killed on board the battleship Retvizan, twenty on board the Sevastopol and twenty in the town.

Thomas Tobin Executed.

Thomas Tobin, who murdered Captain Craft in the New Empire Cafe, New York City, in September, 1902, walked praying to the electric chair in Sing Sing Prison. Three shocks were given before the doctors present declared him dead.

Kansas Libel Law Unconstitutional.

RAILWAY MERGER ILLEGAL

Supreme Court Decides Northern Securities Company to Be a Trust.

DECISION IS VERY SURPRISING

Broad Principle Laid Down That Such Combinations Are in Restraint of Trade—Judgment of the Circuit Court in Favor of the Government Upheld in All Respects.

Washington, D. C.—The United States Supreme Court handed down a decision in favor of the Government against the Northern Securities Company.

The court stood five to four, Justice Harlan's decision being concurred in by Justices Brown, Brewer, McKenna and Day, while the Chief Justice and Justices White, Peckham and Holmes dissented.

In a majority opinion, read by Mr. Justice Harlan, the court upheld the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, from which the Northern Securities Company had appealed. This judgment decided the $400,000,000 merger to be illegal and in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, and enjoined the company from acquiring any more stock of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads, and from voting on the stock it held, permitted it to return such stocks to the original stockholders and enjoined the two railroads from paying any dividends on such stock to the company or permitting the company to exercise any control over the affairs of the two roads.

The time had come, Justice Harlan said, when the public needed to be protected from the encroachment of great combinations of corporate interests if the Government was to remain a Government of the people.

Justice Harlan said that in the merger of the two roads the stockholders disappeared, and reappeared in the Securities Company, the two thus becoming practically consolidated in a holding company, the principal object being to prevent competition.

"No scheme or device," he said, "could certainly more effectively come within the prohibition of the anti-trust law and it is within the meaning of the act a trust."

The case was argued in December last for two days, and attracted general attention at that time, as it did previously when the decision was rendered by the Circuit Court for the District of Minnesota.

The majority decision is far reaching. It does not sustain a single contention of the Securities Company, and does not sustain any one of the many errors alleged against the lower court.

No suggestion for the foundation of another merger is made by the court. The company is told plainly that the law of Congress is supreme, and the only thing railroad men can do to obtain relief is to have Congress change the law.

INDICTMENTS AGAINST HAM.

Surety Company's Boston Manager Charged With Larceny of $238,000.

Boston, Mass. — Two indictments charging larceny were reported against Wallace H. Ham, until recently manager of the Boston office of the American Surety Company, of New York. One indictment alleges the appropriation of stocks, bonds, certificates and cash, with an aggregate value of $214,000, from the American Surety Company, and the second bill alleges the larceny of $24,000 from St. Luke's Home for Convalescents, of which Ham was treasurer up to the time of his arrest.

Ham, through his counsel, entered a plea of not guilty. His bail was placed at $65,000.

VAIN ATTEMPT TO ROB BANK.

Burglars Use Eleven Charges of Explosive Without Opening Safe.

Slatersville, R. I.—An unsuccessful attempt was made by five men to rob the First National Bank of Smithfield.

The burglars blew off the outer door of the vault, but the explosion drove the inner door into such a position that at least ten other explosions were required, evidence of which was left to dislodge the door, but without effect. Persons living near the bank, aroused by the noise, saw five men leave the bank.

A DESPERADO SHOT DEAD.

Held Up the Sheriff, But Later Was Shot Dead.

Vancouver, B. C.—The shooting of a desperado, who has been the terror on the border south of Moosejaw, in Northwest Territory, and whom the authorities have tried hard to catch, is reported. The man, whose name was Jones, got the drop on the Sheriff who tried to arrest him, took the Sheriff's horse, and sent him home on foot.

The Sheriff returned with a posse of twenty-five men, took Jones by surprise, and ordered him to surrender. The desperado immediately reached for his gun, but was shot through the body and head, dying instantly.

Cowboys Lynch a Negro.

A negro who was arrested at Mojave, Cal., for a grave crime was taken from jail by a band of cowboys, tarred and feathered and then shot dead.

THREE DEAD IN DUEL.

Alleged Slander Leads to Rapid Gun Play in Mississippi Village.

Meriden, Miss.—As the result of a duel in Philadelphia, Miss., Dr. W. W. Jones, a prominent physician, and Roy Eshe, a planter, are dead. Frank Burnett, brother-in-law of Eshe, was mortally wounded.

It is alleged Dr. Jones circulated stories about one of the Eshe family. Both Jones and Eshe drew revolvers when they met. When Burnett came up to intercede he was shot by Jones.

IN WOMAN'S REALM

A Grace Darling of Brittany.

A real Grace Darling is about to be awarded a medal for saving not only one but three boatloads of men on the coast of Brittany. In the very narrow community in which she fishes and assists her father on his little farm this heroine is known as Rose Here.

Early on the 15th of November Rose Here went to the rocks near the Pyramide du Runiou to gather shellfish. The night, a very stormy one, had been followed by a heavy fog, which was just beginning to lift. Through the fog this fisher girl heard the cries of men. The Breton coast at this point is exceedingly rocky and is swept by speedy currents, which quickly carry to death persons not accustomed to their wiles.

Rose Here knew this. She calmly waited until the fog was high enough to disclose the men in danger. Away in the distance lay the English steamship Vesper; between it and the shore lay three boats. She put out in a small boat and after hard work reached the nearest of the three.

This Grace Darling could not speak English; neither could the boats' crews understand French, but she motioned the man away from the tiller and took his place.

The distance, as the crow flies, ashore was a scant mile, but the boat that Rose Here steered that day, with the others trailing behind, traveled four leagues as it wound its tortuous way through the reefs and past lurking shoals. Many times the men, exhausted, were compelled to cease rowing and rest.

Not until the dory had grated against the wharf at Pen-ar-Roch, where a hundred hands reached out to succor the fainting men, did she relinquish her place at the tiller. Then she set to work to assist in restoring the weakest of the sailors.

Captain Viel, of the Vesper, bared his head to the brave woman and expressed his regret that he was unable to recompense her out of his scant savings from the wreck. But he assured her that the British government, as well as the shipowners, would hear of her and that she, in all probability, would hear from them.

"Oh, it is nothing," said Rose Here, through an interpreter, as she started upon the long walk home. "I have saved more men than you had on your big ship."

"That is true," assented the natives. "She has brought a dozen or more lost boats into this port. She is a wonderful woman."—Detroit Free Press.

A Woman's Newspaper.

In spite of the vaunted equality and community of tastes of the sexes, one hears every day of the growing necessity for women's hotels, women's cafes and women's newspapers, and no doubt there will be started a cry for a special woman's dietary, because, as will be said, woman's digestive organs are different from those of a man. The necessity for a woman's paper is said to have grown out of the fact that there is much in the daily papers that feminine readers choose to skip, and it is believed that time and attention would be saved were women readers proffered special journalistic dishes suited to their peculiar palates.

Of course these dishes would be composed of "sugar and spice and all that's nice"—sugar in the form of social happenings, spice in the shape of social gossip, and a niceness that would exclude battles, murders and unpleasant deaths. Such a paper would be free from editorials concerning State affairs and its cartoons would never merit the reproachful words, "O, it's political this morning," with which feminine readers are said to greet a comic representation that is not of a social nature. This paper would certainly not arouse in masculine breasts that kind of eager curiosity with which women patrons regard the enclosure set aside for men, but would it be sure of feminine readers?

There are many women who frankly admit that they don't read political or war news, and there is still a greater number who, while disliking such subjects, will not confess that they skip them, but the number who do read these and kindred topics is too large to justify the existence of so tame a thing as a woman's paper.—Chicago Tribune.

Woman at Her Best.

Don't belong to the "old folks" and nod through the evening hours because your boy is at college. Don't attempt repair and preservation of beauty with paints, powders and veils. Take plenty of exercise, stand erect, sit erect. When you speak let your voice possess volume and energy. When you think, think freshly.

Don't say you haven't time for the afternoon's "forty winks." Take it, and your renewed strength will show in a freshened complexion. A half hour's nap after luncheon will do more to eradicate wrinkles than all the beautifiers in the world.

Don't think that a life of ease and luxury is essential to preserving youthful, delicate looks. A certain amount of work and exercise is necessary to keep the muscles firm and elastic and the flesh hard.

Don't let go of love or love of romance. They are amulets against wrinkles. Not all of the world's homage is poured at the feet of girlhood.

Don't fancy that the dew of youth, with its complexion of roses, is alone able to inspire passion. A woman's best and richest years are from thirty to forty. The old saw about "sweet sixteen" is exploded.

Don't be glum if you want to be young. Dance and sing and, above all, laugh. Ride, drive, row, swim and walk a mile—or make it three—daily. Keep your heart young, and thus defy Father Time.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Tin Wedding.

There are so many things about the celebration of a tin wedding that can be made amusing that it is rather a mistake to take it too seriously. The best plan is to bring in as many droll features as the imagination will suggest, without making the provocation to amusement too much of an effort.

It is not feasible to have the invitations sent out on sheets of tin, but to the cards on which the invitations are written may be attached little strips or tags of tin. The wording of the invitation may be as simple as one chooses.

There cannot be very much done in the line of tin decoration, although I have heard of taking the sheets of tin from which tinsmiths have stamped patterns and utensils, and putting these up as a background for flowers. The many bright, irregular points of the tin caught the light, and in the openings were thrust bunches of flowers, ferns and greenery of different descriptions. The effect was odd, but pleasing.

All the flowers that are put about the room should be in tin receptacles instead of in vases of glass or china. The boquet carried by the bride should be placed in a tin funnel, to serve as a boquet-holder. If this is decorated with ribbons it will be very pretty. The brightness of the new tin will contribute to the gay effect and be of value wherever it is used.—Woman's Home Companion.

In Grandma's Day.

The employment of women, even in the summer schools, did not become general until after the Revolution. With the gradual recognition of their value as teachers came the enlarging of the educational opportunities of the girls, but the nineteenth century was well advanced before they had anything approaching the same advantages as the boys. Books had nearly always been considered outside the feminine sphere from the most ancient time. When Francoise de Saintonges, in the sixteenth century, wished to establish girls' schools in France, she was hooted in the streets and her father called together four doctors of law to decide whether she was possessed of a devil in planning to teach women. In like manner, early in the last century, when Mary Somerville's father discovered that she was engaged by herself in mathematical and other studies, said to his wife: "Peg, we must put a stop to this, or we shall have Mary in a straight-jacket one of these days."—Good Housekeeping.

Straw hats appear in the shops.

Girdles are made of circular pleats.

Belts of red calfskin are more novel than pretty.

A wee bit of white touches up the dark gown.

There is a new sort of "rain-splash" effect in cloth fabrics.

Velvets are broaded and fringed till they look like fancy portieres.

Some early spring jackets are belted with patent leather or soft suede.

Narrow bands of Persian velvet, set on like tucks, make a stylish skirt trimming.

Pale blue and purple is a combination seen occasionally. It makes one swallow hard.

Belts that curve high in back are best for the short-waisted figure, as they help to define the waist line.

A wide sleeve ruffle always seems to diminish the size of the hand, hence its revival with other coquettish things.

Buttons play quite an important part in dress decoration, and many good examples are seen. The tailor button never goes out of favor on zibeline cheviot, serge, camel's-hair or tweed. Large, handsome and costly buttons are used to ornament the velvet costume.

Our Later Friendships:

By the Editor of Collier's Weekly.

PEOPLE make friends later than they used to, or at least so to us—probably because they grow old, in general, la they did. Friendship must change its nature with a years, but whatever makes later life full of activities and ginnings causes friendships also to begin at even the lat of the journey. Of two old men, early friends, who h relled, Coleridge said:

"They stood aloof, the scars remaining,— Like cliffs which had been rent asunder."

Such an image, of course, gives powerfully the sense of fixity, the op the fluid potentiality of youth. Yet in the same poem we have the not all is glorious in youth:

"And constancy lives in realms above;
And life is thorny, and youth is vain."

Friendship become rid of some vanity, it becomes more noble and s to the deeper thoughts and ideals, when the roots of it grow back int distant past; and if we can keep the power of making a few new friend as we need them, to supplement those inherited from youth, which gre with the years, but riper and more select, friendship should play a s role far along toward the end of life, the best role, indeed, of its care Emerson thinks, a lifetime is needed for its completeness, while an h day is enough for toil or play. The late friendships of the unmarried, th less, and the widowed have a special necessity and pathos of their o mates and children, to a large extent, at certain periods, naturally place of other friends.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

MARCH 22D.

The senate spent the greater part of the day on the Indian appropria- tion bill. Mr. Lodge took exception to the provision exempting candidates for the position of Indian agency farmers from civil service examination and on his suggestion the amendment was passed over without action.

Other features arousing discussion were those relating to the designation of Indian school superintendents as Indian agents and authorizing the pay- ment of the claim made by Indian tribes on account of the difference be- tween the value of payments made them in greenbacks and coin pay- ments, as required by treaties.

A bill providing for the enlarge- ment of the public building at Tyler, Texas, was passed.

When Mr. Carmack's resolution di- recting the committee on the judiciary to inquire into the legality of the re- cent old age pension order of the sec- retary of the interior was reached, Mr. Carmack asked that it go over, sub- ject to his call. He explained that in naming the judiciary committee he meant no discourtesy to the commit- tee on pensions.

Mr. McCumber, chairman of the committee on pensions, gave notice that when the resolution is taken up he will move to substitute the name of the committee on pensions for that of the committee on the judiciary.

Outside of a few routine matters the house devoted the entire day to further discussion of the postoffice ap- propriation bill, but disposed of only one page of the bill. Mr. Butler, of Pennsylvania, endeavored unsuccess- fully to have passed an amendment de- signed to transfer back to the office of the first assistant postmaster gen- eral jurisdiction of the free delivery and rural delivery service, which caused Mr. Moon, of Tennessee, the leading minority member of the com- mittee, to administer a rebuke to those members who are trying to take from the fourth assistant postmaster gen- eral certain duties given to him un- der law.

He said there was a motive behind it all and that certain members chaf- ing under the recent report of the de- partment, are seeking to punish Bris- tow for discovering frauds in another bureau of the department.

A resolution was passed fixing March 25th, after the disposition of the pension bills, for the considera- tion for providing for the election of a delegate from the territory of Alaska, and making the bill privileged there- after.

The house then went into commit- tee of the whole and resumed consid- eration of the postoffice appropriation bill.

The State is Rich.

There was more money in the Ala- bama state treasury Tuesday than ever before known at the close of a day's business.

When Treasurer Craig Smith closed his books the cash balance was shown to be $1,713,589.81. This is high wa- ter mark in the history of the state, and is gratifying, when it is consid- ered that this accumulation has come right upon the heels of the legisla- ture with its large immediate appro- priations and also under the 10 cents reduction in the tax rate. The largely increased receipts from the convict de- partment has added much. It is not probable that the balance will get much larger during this year. Very heavy quarterly appropriations are due on April 1st, and as there will not be much money coming in again until next fall, when tax payments begin, the balance will start on the decline.

Senator Burton's trial at St. Louis began Tuesday.

Mill to Resume.

As a result of the conference be- tween the citizens of Ensley and Geo. H. Schuler, the large rod mill of the Alabama Steel and Wire company will resume work within the next three weeks. This is one of the largest in- dustries in the district and gives em- ployment to 2,000 skilled workmen.

Sam Daily, a Tuscaloosa negro, has donated 125 acres for an industrial farm for negro boys. Daily proposes to make the farm self-supporting, and with that idea in view he has already stocked it with hogs, cows and chick- ens. He believes that he can raise sufficient stock on the farm to pay all its expenses. He is also planting a large portion of it with peanuts to fat- ten his cattle and hogs.

The Louisville and Nashville Rail- road Company has finished their new depot at Cullman at a cost of $15,000, and the employes have moved in. A new side track is being put down and the yard paved with crushed stone.

Mr. McCumber, chairman of the mmittee on pensions, gave notice at when the resolution is taken up will move to substitute the name the committee on pensions for that the committee on the judiciary.

Outside of a few routine matters e house devoted the entire day to rther discussion of the postoffice ap- ropriation bill, but disposed of only e page of the bill. Mr. Butler, of ennsylvania, endeavored unsuccess- lly to have passed an amendment de- igned to transfer back to the office the first assistant postmaster gen- al jurisdiction of the free delivery nd rural delivery service, which aused Mr. Moon, of Tennessee, the nking minority member of the com- ittee, to administer a rebuke to those embers who are trying to take from fourth assistant postmaster gen- al certain duties given to him un- er law.

He said there was a motive behind all and that certain members chaf- ng under the recent report of the de- artment, are seeking to punish Bris- w for discovering frauds in another ureau of the department.

A resolution was passed fixing arch 25th after the disposition of e pension bills, for the considera- on for providing for the election of a elegate from the territory of Alaska, nd making the bill privileged there- fter.

The house then went into commit- ee of the whole and resumed consid- ration of the postoffice appropriation ill.

The State is Rich.

There was more money in the Ala- ma state treasury Tuesday than ever efore known at the close of a day's usiness.

When Treasurer Craig Smith closed is books the cash balance was shown o be $1,713,589.81. This is high wa- er mark in the history of the state, nd is gratifying, when it is consid- red that this accumulation has come ight upon the heels of the legisla- ure with its large immediate appro- riations and also under the 10 cents reduction in the tax rate. The largely ncreased receipts from the convict de- artment has added much. It is not robable that the balance will get much larger during this year. Very eavy quarterly appropriations are due n April 1st, and as there will not be much money coming in again until ext fall, when tax payments begin, he balance will start on the decline.

Mill to Resume.

As a result of the conference be- tween the citizens of Ensley and Geo. H. Schuler, the large rod mill of the Alabama Steel and Wire company will resume work within the next three weeks. This is ode of the largest in- dustries in the district and gives em- ployment to 2,000 skilled workmen.

Sam Daily, a Tuscaloosa negro, has donated 125 acres for an industrial farm for negro boys. Daily proposes to make the farm self-supporting, and with that idea in view he has already stocked it with hogs, cows and chick- ens. He believes that he can raise sufficient stock on the farm to pay all its expenses. He is also planting a large portion of it with peanuts to fat- ten his cattle and hogs.

HON. C. W. THOMPSON

Died Sunday in Washington of Pneumonia

Representative Charles Winston Thompson, of the Fifth Alabama dis- trict, died Sunday afternoon. His younger son, C. W. Thompson, Jr., who has been visiting his father during the present session of congress, was the only member of his family with him at the time. The remains will be car- ried to his home in Tuskegee and the interment will take place Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Thompson died of toxaemia, a blood poisoning, due from a virulent form of pneumonia resulting from grip. There was little hope for him Friday and Saturday. He was taken sick a week ago and gradually grew worse.

Mr. Thompson was absolutely with- out hope. He seemed to have a pre- monition that his illness would result fatally. Before he became critically ill he told his friend, Representative Wiley, that he was seriously ill and feared the worst would result. Mr. Thompson's mind was perfectly clear until Sunday morning. He then be- came delirious and did not recover consciousness.

The house will adjourn Monday out of respect to the late representative. Representative Wiley will present a resolution reciting that the house has learned with profound regret of the death of Representative Thompson, and asking that in the future a day be set apart in which proper respect may be paid to his memory.

General regret is expressed over Mr. Thompson's death. He had made many strong personal friends in the house and during his illness constant inquiries were made at his hotel about his condition. He was in all respects a self-made man, succeeding in life by his own energetic effort. He was a very successful business man and is reputed to have been very wealthy.

Charles W. Thompson, democrat, of Tuskegee, was born in Macon county, near Tuskegee, Ala., December 30, 1860; was educated in the common schools of the county, at the Park Hill high school at Tuskegee, Ala., and at Bryant & Stratton's Business college at Louisville, Ky.; was appoint- ed by Governor Joseph F. Johnston in 1896 a member of his staff as lieuten- ant colonel, and served in that ca- pacity until the end of his term; was a member of the Methodist church, president of the Bank of Tuskegee; was county superintendent of educa- tion for Macon county from 1886 to 1888, and 1898 was chosen without op- position to represent the Twenty- sixth senatorial district in the sen- ate of Alabama; was elected to the Fifty-seventh congress and was re- elected to the Fifty-eighth congress, of which he was the sixth member to die.

Mr. Thompson was a widower, his wife was Miss Estelle Alley, of Tuske- gee, and died about fifteen years ago. He is survived by two sons, Ernest W. Thompson, editor of the Tuskegee News, and Charles W. Thompson, Jr., one of his secretaries, and also by his mother.

The postoffice, the military academy and the sundry appropriation bills con- stitute the work mapped out for the house this week. The week in the senate will be devoted almost entirely to appropriation bills, beginning on Tuesday with that for the District of Columbia and following with the In- dian and pension bills.

Mrs. Roosevelt has started a collec- tion of china, intended to include at least one piece from every china set used by every president of the United States from Washington down. Richard F. Outcault, the cartoonist, has been fined one hundred dollars for imitating United States currency in a cartoon. The same cartoon was printed in twenty different publica- tions, and the secret service men say they will collect a one-hundred-dollar fine in each case. Outcault thinks he should have a share of it.

The finding of the court of inquiry appointed to investigate the causes for the collision of the Missouri and Illinois off Guantanamo are received at the navy department. A high offi- cer of the navy department said the evidence pointed to the fact that the accident was due to the failure of the steering gear of the Missouri.

THE FIRST DIVIDEND

Of Bessemer Savings Bank was Paid Saturday

Bessemer had one of the liveliest days it has had for some time, the oc- casion being the payment of the first dividend to the creditors of the de- funct Bessemer Savings bank. Seven hundred and eighty-two checks were made out representing a sum of $52,- 000. Of this amount five hundred checks were issued, aggregating a sum of about $30,000.

One of the largest checks drawn was by the city of Bessemer, which amounted to something near $4,000.

It is understood that Receiver T. O. Smith, of the defunct Bank of Com- merce, that failed at the same time the Savings bank closed its doors, is getting matters in shape to pay a div- idend at an early date. It is stated that the bank will be able to pay 75 per cent of its claims.

SHOOTING AT BESSEMER.

Resulted Fatally to an Innocent By- stander.

While resisting arrest E. H. McGi- ver, a negro, lost his life; Deputy Sheriff Newt Clemmons, who was at- tempting to capture him, was serious- ly, perhaps fatally, wounded, and Mrs. Willingham, a passerby, was wounded by a stray bullet. McGiver and an- other negro named Threat were want- ed on a charge of shooting and dan- gerously wounding Seaborn Cook, a farmer, at Virginia Mines, from where they were en route to the city. Threat was arrested by Chief Wal- lace on the outskirts of the city and is in the city jail. He has made a statement saying that Mr. Cook was shot accidentally.

Later.

Mrs. W. Willingham died from the wounds caused by stray bullets from the rifles of deputies in the battle.

ILL HEALTH

Given as the Cause of Mr. Benton's Killing Himself.

With a bullet wound in his head George D. Benton, aged fifty-seven years and one of Bessemer's promi- nent citizens, was found dead on the porch of his residence Sunday morn- ing by his young son, Carl. The dead man's revolver, a 38-caliber Smith & Wesson, was found near his body. For some time Mr. Benton had been very despondent and low-spirited as a re- sult of a long and aggravated illness, and it was in this temporary state of derangement of mind that he took his life.

For a long time Mr. Benton has been prominent in the industrial and commercial development of the Mar- vel City and was one of the best known men in the county.

New Compress Company.

At Selma a deal was consummated by which J. B. Ellis and associates will become owners of the two com- presses in Selma. The new company has as its stockholders besides Mr. El- lis all the cotton buyers, cotton mer- chants and cotton factors of Selma.

It will have over one hundred thou- sand dollars capital. The Dallas press is to be remodeled and overhauled and the old railroad press which has been out of commission will have an up- to-date modern press erected.

Opelika has been made a meal sta- tion for the Atlanta and West Point road.

Creditors Get About 75 Per Cent.

The appraisers of the defunct Shap- ard bank have made their report and it shows that of the $135,000 of notes, mortgages, etc., only $72,000 can be collected. The preferred creditors of the bank will get only about 75 per cent of their claims

In a letter received from Hon. Sid- ney J. Bowie, he states that he has had advices from the department of agriculture which informed him that Messrs. W. G. Smith and F. M. Meeker, who have charge of the soil survey in Sumter county, will come to Selma about the first of October and begin a thorough test of the soil of Dallas county.

Seriously Injured.

Morrow Blackburn was seriously, perhaps fatally, injured by falling from an electric crane in the Ensley steel plant. His arm was broken, his hip dislocated, and it is feared that he was injured internally.

Mr. Blackburn is an electrician and was at work on a crane. In attempt- ing to come down he missed his foot- ing and fell a distance of over forty feet. Mr. Blackburn is 32 years of age and was recently married.

Selma will entertain the state's Red Men during May.

Eufaula's Carnegie library will be completed this week.

The world's cotton crop for 1902-03 is estimated by the department of ag- riculture at 17,179,765 bales, valued at $750,082,451. This is based on the latest data available, the figures in most instances representing the cot- ton appearing in commercial channels. Since Korea has joined Japan, Rus- sia considers Korea as belligerent and will act accordingly.

Two thousand Korean troops, now at Seoul, will be sent to the north at once.

Of this sum only 50,000,000 yen has actually been disbursed, includ- ing the payment for the cruisers Nis- shin and Kugua, purchased abroad.

BALTIMORE FIRE.

Committee Lays Blame on Cigar or Cigarette.

The special commission named by local and foreign insurance people ap- pointed to inquire into the origin of the Baltimore fire has formulated its report. They find in substance that the fire originated from outside causes in the John E. Hurst Co.'s building.

The electric switches were cut off, the flow of gas was cut off at the me- ters and the fires in the boxes of the boilers were shown to have been drawn before the blaze started. It is the theory of the commission that a lighted cigarette or cigar must have ignited inflammable material in the cellar, which smoldered until the fire- men discovered the smoke and began work.

DON'T LIKE THE CUT

And the Ensley Steel Plant is Prac- tically Closed.

Pending an agreement between the officials of the steel plant and the open hearth furnace workers the mill has practically closed down. Since the resumption last month the men have been dissatisfied with the reduc- tion made in their wages. Before the works were closed down last October the open hearth men were getting $3.40 a day and six cents tonnage on each ton. When the plant resumed the men's wages were fixed at $3 a day. The contention now hinges on the question of tonnage. The work- men, it is understood, are contending for $3 a day and 4 cents tonnage.

In making its report in favor of Mr. Lever in the Dantzler-Lever con- test from the seventh South Carolina district, house committee on elections No. 1 takes the ground that the inves- tigation shows that Dantzler, a col- ored man, was not elected. At the same time the committee refuses to say that Lever was elected, and the report leaves him in the position as if no contest had been made The committee draws the conclusion that if it advanced a ruling on the disfran- chisement of the colored vote and de- clared Lever not elected on that ground the decision would be a prece- dent for unseating nearly every mem- ber in the house from several south- ern states which it names.

It is reported that drafts and checks representing many thousands of dol- lars sent in two small mail pouches from Memphis to St. Louis have mys- teriously disappeared.

John C. Williams, employed at the Becker saw mill at Fruitdale, was caught by a belt at the mill and horri- bly mangled by the fly wheel. He was instantly killed.

The sum of $9,845 has been sub- scribed for the new Y. M. C. A. gym- nasium in Montgomery.

Killing at Kimberly.

A. J. Ausborn shot and killed Harry Moore at Kimberly mines. It ap- pears that Moore, who was drinking, abused and threw one of Ausborn's little boys off the train before it came to a stop. The boy informed his fa- ther of the occurrence and the father immediately left the train with the boy and the killing resulted in a few minutes after. Ausborn surrendered.

Moore was a young man and has figured in several rough escapades. One of these was an occurrence in North Birmingham when he, while in company with Jim Myrick and several women, cut Will Denver's throat and left him lying on the roadside.

In Shirred White Velvet.

Gorgeous dress hats are of shirred white velvet, not too big, and with artistic brim lines. A paradise plume, or a cluster of curly white ostrich feathers, one of these is the preferred trimming.

Shun any efforts of your milliner to set a cut steel or rhinestone buckle on your velvet hat. To put it on would be to rob it of its prestige as a fashionable hat, and to place it in the category of last season's millinery. Only plumes are worn with this superb white velvet hat, and it is demanded that these feathers be in perfect condition, the best of the kind.

If any flowers or colored trimming be introduced on these new hats, you may be sure it is on the under brim. This brings it more directly near the face, where color may be needed to be becoming, and it does not quarrel with the elegance of your shirred white velvet hat.

Parlor Amusements.

Two parlor amusements which I have lately seen carried out with great success are the following: Send a person out of the room, decide upon an object or some simple performance, recall the person, and have a member of the party place his fingers lightly upon the person's shoulders while he and all others think intently of the object or act decided upon. The results sometimes are almost uncanny. A lady went straight and drew a scarf-pin from a man's necktie just as we willed, found a key hidden in a lady's slipper and so on. The other "trick" is to draw upon a sheet of paper a square with diagonal lines between the corners, the only opportunity of the artist to watch his own progress being in a mirror held up before his hands by a second person. A newspaper is held over the sheet and the hand which is doing the drawing. The results are sometimes uproariously funny.—Good Housekeeping.

The Magic Garter.

The magic garter is again becoming a factor in weddings. For years there has been attached much significance to the "throwing of the bride's bouquet," and the lucky maiden who caught the fragrance was supposed to be relieved from single blessedness before the end of the year. But a more potent amulet has appeared, as only one girl was able to catch the flowers, while by the "garter" scheme many may be favored. The custom provides that the bride shall at her wedding wear a pair of garters for each of her bridesmaids. These are presented to her attendants immediately following the tying of the nuptial knot, and if worn by them are supposed to bring the wearer a husband within a year. The mysterious disappearance of bride, attendants and close friends immediately after a recent ceremony led to the discovery of this unique fad. The charm, it is alleged, applies also to close friends of the bride, and naturally the charmed bands of silk and elastic are greatly in demand. Rumor has it that the bride at a recent wedding wore ten pairs to meet the demands made upon her by girl friends.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Why Always Pretend?

What a good thing it would be if women would be true to themselves and converse intelligently when in the society of gentlemen. There is nothing that honest men desire more than to understand that mysterious race that is so like themselves, and yet so unlike, who share their homes, but not their thoughts; who are so shrewd, so practical and so irrational. The poor men yearn to break down the invisible barrier and see into the real life of these they love so well; but the loved ones smile and chatter and say pretty things, and ingenious things, things they have borrowed from men and improved in the borrowing, but never a word of the really true, and in many instances vital thoughts that are working in their busy brains, says the Business Woman's Magazine.

So the men flatter and lie because they think women like it, and the women accept it all because they think it is man's nature; and the men think women are dear empty-headed angels; and the women think men are fine intelligent brutes; and the two classes go on loving and despising one another accordingly, and all for the want of a little discernment and truthfulness in conversation.

Little Acts of Kindness.

Some people are quicker than others to seize an opportunity for doing a kind act. It is after the opportunity has passed that some of us think what we will do if it ever comes again. Now, one of the things we all have to learn is to keep our eyes wide open, and not only see, but to immediately seize, any opportunity which presents itself.

I read a pretty story the other day of a lady who, not having time for luncheon, had taken to the train a little bag of biscuits. Having finished the biscuits, she carefully folded the paper bag and placed it on the floor in order that it should be duly taken away. The train drew up, and the lady, with her friend, alighted, but an awkward country boy sitting opposite, seeing the bag still upon the floor, picked it up and hastened after the ladies. In a very shy manner and with a scarlet face, he presented the bag to its late owner, asking if she had not forgotten it. Many people would have laughed and made the poor youth ill at ease by remarking that the bag was thrown away, but the lady graciously accepted it and not only thanked him, but kept the bag in her hand until he was out of sight. She saw at once what was in the boy's mind and would not embarrass him by letting him see that he had made a mistake.

An Old Maid's "Don'ts."

"Old maids' children" have a reputation for being brought up on the eminently correct plan—a reputation that is proverbial. A spinster claims to have furnished Good Housekeeping with these "Don'ts" in connection with bringing up a baby. They sustain that reputation, for they are certainly sensible beyond the ordinary. She says:

"I have never brought up a baby, nevertheless I have lived in families where there were babies and young children, who, through (as it seemed to me) mismanagement, were no comfort to themselves or any one else.

"Don't wake baby up unless necessary; it makes it nervous—and a baby's first business is to sleep and eat and grow. If it must be awakened, do it by rustling a paper or a very gentle touch.

"Don't get it excited at night; it should go to sleep quietly and calmly. The morning is the time for a frolic.

"Don't jump it up and down or let it bear its weight on its feet before nature is ready.

"Don't look cross at it. A mother's smile is heaven to a baby.

"Don't shake it, however annoying it may be.

"Don't let it go to sleep at night without a gentle rubbing all over with the hand at first, and when older with a flesh brush.

"Don't walk the floor with it when it frets; this does the child no real good, and it soon forms the habit, and the mother or nurse has to suffer.

"Don't be irregular about feeding. Animals are fed (or should be) regularly; why not the human race?

"Don't let it suffer for a drink of cold water (not too cold, of course), and let it drink from a cup or glass. It is said to be easier for the little uncertain lips to cling to the edge than to a spoon.

"Don't teach it to be afraid of the dark, or thunder, or of animals, a child is naturally fearless and it ought to be encouraged.

"Don't let its clothes get wrinkled or hunched. This is uncomfortable for a grown person, how much more for a baby!

"Don't let it go barefooted—have heard it said a baby will rub the soles of its feet together and make the legs crooked.

"Don't let it stay wet; it will chafe. Nor with cold feet; gentle friction is good.

"Don't allow it to be kissed in the mouth. Under the chin is a soft, safe place.

"Don't give it more than one thing at a time to look at, and wait until it turns its eyes away.

"Don't speak loudly to it nor jerk it. Calmness and quietness are always best."

Fashion Notes.

Spider figures are noticeably frequent in modish laces and embroideries.

A knot of colored ribbon without any ends at all is among the new cravats.

On the flounced skirts the flounces slope up toward the waist line in the back.

Plain net or other transparent materials are made up over flowered silks.

A few well-gowned women are wearing short, loose-wristed gloves without any buttons.

More sleeves of evening coats are made with the deep cuff and full drooping puff above than in any other way.

Wedding veils must be put on now so that nearly all of the hair shows and give a long, narrow look instead of spreading at the sides.

The new shirt waist blouses are always cut with a French back and in front a few tucks from the shoulders to the bust line. The fronts do not pouch at all, but are large enough to be easy. The sleeves must not have the long droop, either, but just an easy sort of bishop sleeve going into a narrow band at the cuff.

JADE COMES FROM CHINA

IMMEMORIALLY PRIZED AS THE STONE PAR EXCELLENCE.

Every Woman in the Celestial Kingdom Wears at Least One Jade Ornament—Powdered Jade Used for Stomachic Trouble.

With Chinese, jade has been prized from time immemorial as the stone par excellence. It may be fairly stated that every woman in China wears at least one jade ornament, which, if not the genuine article, is at least a good imitation. What the bamboo is to the ordinary Chinaman, providing him as it does with almost every imaginable article required by the social conditions of China, that jade is to the connoisseur and man of refinement, if within somewhat narrower limits. It has been made into snuff-boxes, cups, plates, bowls, bracelets, ear-rings, vases, boxes, inkstones, flutes, pestles and mortars, seals, ear-stoppers, scepters (so-called), pillows, boats, hair-pins, rings, head ornaments, paper-weights, Buddhas, human figures, beasts, birds, fishes, etc., etc.

Now, what is jade?—a question frequently heard since the siege of the legations at Peking. Here is a Chinese answer: "Jade is the quintessence of heaven and earth. It is marked with the dark hues of the hills, with the blue tints of streams. It is white as sliced lard, red as a cock's comb, black as pure lacquer, and yellow as a cooked chestnut." Some writers add a fifth color, "crimson as rouge." Nearer, perhaps, to the mark for western readers will be the following details, gathered from conversation with Prof. Lewis of Cambridge.. The term jade, as popularly employed, includes two minerals, jadeite and nephrite. The specific gravity of jadeite is about 3.1; that of nephrite 2.9. The fusing point of jadeite is much lower than that of nephrite. By the mere process of handling and inspection it is impossible to tell one from the other.

The Chinese, who until recent times have known nothing of specific gravity, test jade by its hardness: "Jade is hard and fine and steel can do it no injury." Again, "As your jade is white as pig's lard, and rings when struck then it is genuine. There are so many substances which resemble jade that it is necessary to discriminate carefully.

"Genuine jade is soft looking and glossy, as though steeped in some kind of fat. On being struck it gives forth a clear, ringing sound, like a bell, which seems to stop and then goes on again, dying away in the distance and gradually." The Chinese classify jade according to color and provenance: "The best kind of jade," says one writer, "is orange yellow; the second best is the color of mutton fat; the next best is yellow, which is not easy to obtain; then comes white. Among the rest is a stone, called by the Chinese fei ts' ui, from its resemblance in color to the plumage of the kingfisher, which, appears to be chrysoprase, and is now very highly prized. White jade with black or smokelike streaks also commands fancy prices; though, of course, all really depends upon the treatment by the artist of well-selected material.

Everything in China of any rarity whatever is quite certain to be dragged into the pharmacopoeia of the Chinese physician. Jade is no exception to the rule. It may be swallowed as a powder, or in little pieces the size of hemp seed, for various stomachic complaints, even pock-marks and scars may be eliminated by being daily rubbed with a piece of pure jade. It is also considered to be of a very moist nature, and we read of an imperial favorite of the eighth century, who was cured of excessive thirst by holding a fish-shaped piece of jade in her mouth. And so when the tomb of the great commander. Ts'ao Ts'ao, third century, A. D., was opened two hundred years after his death, among the usual objects found in such circumstances was a large silver bowl full of water. That the water had not dried up was accounted for by the presence in the bowl of a jade figure three feet in height.

Jade is chiefly brought from the K'un-un or Koulkun range, between the desert of Gobi and Thibet; from Khoten or Ilchi, in Yarkland; and from Lan-t'ien, on the Beluртagh mountains, and still further to the west. This Lan-t'ien has been confused by Chinese writers with another Lan-tien in the province of Shensi, near the city of Hsian, whither the Chinese court fled in August, 1900, upon the relief of Peking. In the tenth century the latter was actually known as the jade-hills district, although it does not appear that any jade has even been found there. One writer says: "When white jade is very good, you can see your face in it as in a mirror."

As regards color, it is necessary to correct previous quotations by another from an apparently more sober writer:

Jade occurs only in two colors, white and green. Specimens of red and yellow jade, so called, are in reality other stones, equal perhaps in value to jade, but not actually jade. All jade in its natural state is found in the rocky bed of a flowing stream. Before it has been removed from its place, the jade inside the rough block is as soft as cotton wool; but when removed it becomes hard at once, and when exposed to the air still harder. It is inaccurate to speak, as is done, of working soft jade. The outside of a block of jade in its natural state is called "jade skin." It is used for ink-slabs and trays, and is of no great value. Of old, if the jade within the outer covering was over a foot square, and without flaw, it was used for imperial seals. This is what was meant by "the jewel worth several cities," and is not easy to obtain. If about five or six inches square, and without flaw, the jade was made into cups and goblets, which are now also very valuable. Besides these, there is a strange variety which comes from So-li (?) Ordinarily, it is white, but if examined in fine weather, it will flash red, and in dark rainy weather it is green. It may be called the jade goblin, and is found in Korea. On the Tai-wei hills in the northwest of Korea there is a deposit a thousand years old, the jade in which is mutton-fat color, much like the best specimens from the Beluртagh mountains. Although much is written and said about other kinds, I have never seen them.—From an Article by Herbert A. Giles in the Nineteenth Century.

WILL CLEAN UP PANAMA.

Sanitary Corps to Precede the Diggers Down on the Isthmus.

When the senate of the United States ratifies the Panama treaty the army of the United States will take immediate possession of the canal strip, 10 miles wide through Panama, and exercise its authority over that strip, including the power of establishing and compelling the use of a complete sanitary system. If emergencies do not compel this country to take possession of the territory sooner, almost the first troops to be despatched to the isthmus will be one of the largest medical corps fully equipped which ever left any country in time of peace to administer to the wants of living men. In other words, profiting by the experience of France on the Isthmus and by its own experience in tropical climes, the United States proposes to establish sanitary regulations in Panama, such as it has already put into operation in Cuba and the Philippines, for the safety of its soldiers, of the laborers to be employed in building the canal, and of the people of Panama.

The equipment of this expedition will include all supplies known to be of value to the medical profession in tropical regions. The supply ships will cary hospital tents, immense quantities of medical stores and last, but not least, large supplies of mineral waters, which the soldiery will be compelled to use preparatory to establishing condensing and distilling plants on the Istmus for furnishing a home supply of pure water.

Not only does the government medical department feel assured that it can counteract much of the prevalent disease upon the Isthmus by the introduction of sanitary methods among the people, but it is intended also to make merry war upon the deadly mosquito, which scientists have come to believe transports more disease, or as much, at least, as any other source. Nets will be provided for protection, and in addition kerosene oil in large quantities will be poured on the stagnant lakes and ponds, especially near the inhabited places, to effectually put an end to their existence.

In commenting upon the improved methods in the army for practical medicinal purposes the other day an army officer said: "Ten years ago you could no more make a soldier believe that boiled or distilled water was necessary for his good health than you could make him believe that an army mule could fly. Nowadays when an order is given to drink nothing but pure water a soldier will hustle around and inconvenience himself a bit to get it. Only in case of extreme thirst will he take a drink from a running stream.

"It will be easy, comparatively speaking, to enforce the proposed discipline in sanitary regulations on the Isthmus. The United States does not propose to build the Isthmian canal upon the bones of her soldiers, nor upon those of the laborers employed in its construction, nor upon those of the people of Panama, if it can help it. If science can do anything to prevent it fewer lives will be sacrificed in this great work than upon any similar piece of work undertaken by any nation in the history of the world."—Chicago Daily News.

EFFECT OF COLD ON INSECTS.

They Are Not Injured by the Lowest of Low Temperatures.

The severest cold has no terrors for insect life. It has been shown by experiments that insects may be artificially or naturally frozen, subjected, indeed to very low temperatures, without killing or even injuring them. Eggs, larvae, the pupae, the stages in which most insects pass the winter, are perfectly immune to cold.

It is a common idea that cocoons of insects serve as a protection against cold, but this is entirely erroneous. They, like the summer webs of webworms, are a protection against birds and insect parasites, but not against cold. The cocoons of summer broods are as stout and thick as those of the generations that pass the winter. Moths, butterflies and other insects build stouter and more compact cocoons in tropical and torrid countries than they do in those climates where they are besieged by winter. There are many insects, allied to the builders of cocoons, that make no such covering, the pupae or the chrysalis being left entirely exposed. And so little heat is maintained by the pupae of insects that no matter how thick the cocoons they are always too slight to repel freezing cold.

Certain degrees of frigidity seem to have vastly different effects on different species of insects. Gnats and midges dance in the winter sunshine; butterflies, Vanessa, Grapta, and sometimes Collias, skim over the snow; wasps and bees wind their way through the leafless woods; ground-beetles run quickly over the cold earthearth; crickets peep from beneath stones and rotting logs, while other species, the vast majority, in fact, are locked in the lethargy of hibernation. One of the commonest evidences of this hibernation is to be seen when firewood is carried into the house and placed near the warm stove. It takes only a short time to bring out a swarm of ants that were sleeping in the beetle-borings, their common retreat.—St. Nichols.

Asbestos-Mining.

Asbestos is a compound of silica, lime, magnesia, and oxide iron, and is probably the most curious natural product in existence. Being composed of fine fibres, it can be spun and woven into cloth, indestructible by fire, which renders it invaluable in many of the arts. Asbestos-mining is carried on by cutting down the hills of asbestos-bearing serpentine, much as a farmer cuts down a stack of hay or straw, or by open quarring on the level. The rock is blasted out, and the asbestos, separated from the containing rock, is "cobbed"—that is, separated by hammering from inferior foreign matter. This cobbling is a comparatively easy matter in the case of the finer quality, as it usually separates readily from the other minerals which the ore contains, but in the lower grades much difficulty is experienced in separating the fibrous matter from the non-fibrous. At best there is a great waste. Much of the asbestos is found in thin and narrow veins and is neglected, as by the present mode of operating it does not pay to separate this from the serpentine. When "cobbed" the asbestos is graded according to purity, color, and length of fibre into three grades and bagged for shipment.

A Strange Old Medal.

Attached to a very ancient human skeleton found in one of the old mines in the Wichita mountains was a strangely carved medal. It is four or five inches in diameter. On one side is a raised figure representing two hands clasped; on one cuff is the American eagle; on the other are three bars extending lengthwise of the cuff. Above the hands are a pipe and tomahawk crossed. On this side of the medal are the words: "Peace and Friendship." On the other side is a bust of President Jefferson, with the inscription, "Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States, A. D., 1801." A silver ring is fastened to a post on the top of the medal.

Renovating Dresses.

Black silk may be cleaned and made to look well as long as there is any good in the material. Perhaps it is soiled and lustreless. Rip it carefully, picking out all the loose threads and brush it to remove the dust and lint that accumulates chiefly in the seams. If there are any greasy spots, rub them with a cloth dipped in gasoline until they have disappeared. Lay the breadths one by one on a clean table, sponge them first on one side, then on the other, with a piece of soft flannel dipped in a mixture containing a little borax. Rinse in clean water without wringing, and when all the breadths are done stretch each one on a clean board and fasten the edges at intervals with small tacks, taking care to keep the goods perfectly straight. When you remove it, you will find it smooth and fresh. trous, especially on the wrong side. This will be a great improvement on ironing, which often changes the color of silk and makes it too stiff. Black woolen goods may be washed in a good borax suds and ironed on the wrong side before using again.

To Care for Lamps.

Never touch the chimney of a lamp with water. A few drops of kerosene oil will remove the smoke and greasiness, and a rub with soft flannel or chamois skin will result in a clear polish.

Clean every bit of the burner with a rag dipped in kerosene, and polish it dry and bright. Boil very dirty neglected burners in soda and water.

See that the outside of the lamp is dry, clean and perfectly free from oil after being filled. Each day rub the burnt portion of the wick with a duster; do not cut the wick.

Do not fill a lamp to the brim.

Do not let a lamp burn after the oil is exhausted or turn it down. Nearly the same amount of oil is consumed as when the flame is full, what is burnt passing off in the form of gas when is often smelt when entering a room where the lamp has been turned low.

A bit of camphor the size of a hazel nut put into the oil reservoir improves the light.

Empty and wash the reservoir every few weeks to prevent the collection of sediment from the oil.

Soak new wicks in vinegar, and dry thoroughly before putting in the burner.

Household Hints.

Small paper doilies that are the exact counterfeit of fine hemstitched linen squares are dainty and serve many purposes, in lieu of the real thing. Where the laundering of linen doilies is an object for consideration it is a positive relief to have the sense of clean linen, and to be able to discard it after its being once used. These imitation doilies are intended to serve cheese and other trifles on, says the Household Ledger.

Pretty silver frames to hold ramekins are now in vogue. They are not much more than a heavy wire, and have a handle extended on one side. These are a convenience and a protection—from heat—and do not conceal the decoration.

A homemade rack for either hats or clothes can easily be made quite a thing of beauty. First obtain a long panel of wood, any desirable size, with either a beveled edge or an ornamental molding tacked on. Decorate with brass-headed nails, pyrography or paint; the ornament may be either a motto, a scroll design, coat of arms or other heraldic device. Suspend by two brass screw eyes to the wall and fasten on the front brass hooks or wooden pegs.

After squeezing the juice from a lemon, utilize the remains for cleaning brass, by first dipping in salt and then in powdered brick dust. Nothing does the scouring of a copper cooking vessel so easily as this method.

If there is a crack anywhere to fill, as in the plaster of a closet, mix plaster of paris with vinegar instead of water, as it will not dry and set as soon, but gives a longer time to finish before becoming hard.

Recipes.

Cottage Pudding—Beat two eggs, add to them half a cup of sugar; beat and add three tablespoonfuls of soft butter; add one cup of milk, alternating with two cupfuls of flour; beat well and add four level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; grease a round cake pan; turn in the mixture and bake in a moderate oven 20 minutes; serve with sauce.

A Relish—Cut a veal cutlet into two inch square pieces, season with salt and pepper. Dip each piece in beaten egg, then in finely chopped mushrooms; put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan, when it is hot lay in the cutlets and fry brown on both sides; remove the pieces to a hot platter; make a brown gravy and pour over the meat; serve hot.

Lemon Cream Jelly—Soak one fourth box of gelatine in one cupful of cold water; put one cupful of water and one cupful of sugar in a agate pan, add the rind of one lemon and the juice of three, soak the gelatine and stir until it is dissolved; remove and strain; when cool and beginning to stiffen add two cupfuls of whipped cream; turn this into a mold and let stand until firm.

JAPAN'S FIGHTING

THOUGH SMALL, THEY TO TACKLE BIG RUS

Are Good Seamen, But of Very Di pathy of the Jap With the Smaller Round Scrapping Liked by Russia

NO other two types of seamen are quite so different as those of Russia and Japan.

The little Jap is essentially a steamboat sailor. You never meet him on sailing ships, except as cook or steward.

But the captains of foreign steamers like Japanese crews. They are thoroughly hardworking and steady. They can be relied upon in time of danger, and when ashore they seldom get drunk. In this last respect they are the most wonderful sailors in the world.

The Russians, especially those from the Baltic region, make nearly as good sailors as the Scandinavians. Almost every English and American sailing ship carries a few Russians.

The writer was once aboard a ship on which there were five Russians before the mast. They were thorough sailors. They could not read their native language, but three of them were fond of English novels of the penny-awful sort.

They were all Baltic Russians, and they always made the distinction.

"Vat, you tink I vant to be taken for vun of dose Black Sea fishermen?" one of them asked one day. "Vell, perhaps I don't need to tell you dat I am not come troo de Bosphorus. I don't look like dose shrivelled up grain dumpers, do I?"

He swelled up his gigantic chest and stretched out two arms that were like a main yard. He had been in the Czar's navy, but had deserted to sail in foreign merchantmen.

They have Norse blood in them, these Baltic seamen, and they prefer the free and vagabond life of merchant sailors. Therefore, the seamen of the Russian men-of-war are mainly "dose Black Sea fishermen."

The writer spent several months in Black Sea Russian ports, and, being at that time before the mast, came into close contact with the seafaring men. Despite the Baltic Russian's characterization, they are not particularly shrivelled up, although not so tremendous in size as the Baltic men.

Russian sailors are fond of fighting when very drunk, but not otherwise. Two of them tackled each other one day on the quay in Odessa. They threw their arms about each other's necks and kicked with their knees and bit.

A crowd of seamen gathered about, and finally an onlooker gave one of the combatants a sly but hard kick, whereupon the crowd laughed. This went on until he who had been kicked by the outsider broke loose from his adversary and turned fiercely on the humorist.

Several others ventured into the scrap, and pretty soon a dozen men were biting, tearing and punching one another and jumping on those who were down.

Suddenly a Russian naval lieutenant, in his bright uniform, flashed into the crowd and laid mercilessly about him with a thin cane. The fight ended in an instant. The huge, clumsy sailors were cowed by authority and stood cringing about the officer like dogs before their master.

On the other hand, when an English police officer tried to quell a row among some Russian sailors in an English seaport they played football with him through a window. That was only because his uniform wasn't Russian.

When some reserves finally came upon the scene the belligerents went willingly to jail. The next day they were arraigned in court. Their faces were bitten and beaten.

The Magistrate expressed great disgust at their methods of fighting. This surprised them. Through an interpreter they said:

"If you fight, don't you try to hurt the other fellow as much as you can? Isn't it fair to use all the means given you—your teeth, your feet, your nails? If we were to use only our fists, we couldn't hurt each other in a year, and the fight would never end."

The Japanese sailor's idea of fair fighting is diametrically opposed to that of the Russians. His rules are stricter even than the American's. At any rate, he disapproves of a big fellow's pitching into a little man, even though the latter may have science with him.

This trait was shown at one of the countless sailors' fights that take place in Nagasaki.

Two sailors of an American ship went ashore to settle a dispute in the good, old Anglo-Saxon way. About 200 Japs, mostly navy and some merchant seamen, accompanied the combatants and their Yankee backers to the suburbs.

One of the fighters was much smaller than the other, but more active, so it was a pretty even match. But it didn't take any one long to observe that the sympathies of the Japs were with the little fellow.

Time was called. After sparring, the big fellow landed a hard knock on the little chap. A hiss came from the crowd.

The little chap danced around, and, taking advantage of an opening, landed so heavily on the big fellow's jaw that he floored him. The yell that arose from the onlookers would have done credit to ten times their number.

"Good, good, good, little man!" they shouted, their little brown eyes glistening with excitement.

So it went on. Every time the big

Finally, several small, uniformed mounted police appeared. If their object was to disperse the crowd no one knew it. They were lifted off their horses and swallowed up by the throng.

Later on one of them waved his arms and screamed with joy when the little chap finally put his big opponent out of business. Then the Japs carried the victor on their shoulders to the nearest tea house, where they cheered him lustily, made him drink as much saki as he could, cheered him again, and then the big fellow, for displaying such good taste in losing.

The Japs themselves are not afraid of a fight, even when their opponents outnumber them. This was shown by an encounter several years ago between two Japanese man-of-war's men and six hoodlums on Folsom street, in San Francisco.

It was after dark, and the roughs, seeing the two Japs coming down the street, thought they could bulldoze them as they could Chinamen. They tackled the two Japs, and the two Japs tackled them.

It looked as if the Japs were doing a ballet dance—their legs shot out in all directions, and six very sick looking hoodlums disappeared down a side street. The two Japs seemed highly elated.

Deep down in the Japanese sailor's heart is a glowing hatred of the Russian sailor. It is about his only racial prejudice.

The Russian has no particular animosity for the Jap; he merely considers him a very pugnacious little chap.

The Russian sailor likes fight when he is drunk, and if any Japs are around he will favor them as well as the next one. But the Jap, who does not drink, and who enjoys a fight when he meets somebody he does not like, loves to get into a mix-up with a Russian. As a result, times are never dull ashore whenever Russian ships anchor in Nagasaki harbor.

In Nagasaki the sailors of all nations consider it a prime duty to get drunk when they go ashore, and usually the Russian sailors are in the majority. The British tar, American tar, or German tar may run howling through the streets, but unless he tries to wallop everybody he meets, the small, neatly uniformed dock patrolmen will wink their almond eyes at him.

But let a Russian sailor attempt similar antics and it is all up with him. The first little patrolman who sees him makes a dive and grasps the Czar's sailor by the wrist.

Usually the Russian is twice the Jap's bulk, but that is immaterial. He stands no show at all. The Jap has a peculiar jui-jitsu twist that he applies to the wrist, and the Russian goes along to the lockup every time.

If he begins to fight savagely the policeman shows him what jiu-jitsu tactics really are. Therefore, it is not an unusual sight in Nagasaki to see a brown policeman, scarcely five feet over all, coming down the street with a six foot three Russian sailor in tow and in complete submission.—New York Sun.

An Old-Time "Yarn."

Of all the tales about "one-horse" railroads and "dummy" lines this old story, which the Manchester Union discovers in a New York paper of 1859, seems not to have been beaten in fifty years.

It is well known that the Portsmouth Railroad, says the extract, has to turn everything to account to pay running expenses, and many are the jokes perpetrated upon the conductors in reference to their shifts to get a living. It is said that one of them last year was accustomed to bring fish from Portsmouth and peddle them on the way to Concord.

One day he brought smelts, which he dealt out to his customers at every station till he got to Suncook, where he blew his horn. An old woman came out and asked for six.

"Just a pattern—all I've got left. You're in the nick of time," he said.

When he began to count the fish he found only five. Then he reckoned backward and forward on his fingers, trying to remember where he had disposed of the four dozen with which he had started.

Presently he cried, "Hold on! I have it. Wait a little and I'll be back."

He ran his train back seven miles to a place where he had given a woman one more than she had paid for, got it, came back to Suncook and gave it to the waiting customer. Then the train went on to Concord.

Hardening Iron.

When phosphorus is applied to heated iron it has the effect of facilitating the absorption of carbon by the iron. By taking advantage of this fact, a new iron-hardening process has been invented in Germany. With the aid of phosphorus, carbon is caused to penetrate the iron rapidly to a considerable depth, and causes it to become so hard at a depth of about a millimeter that it can be neither cut nor chipped with the best steel. At the same time the welding properties of the iron are not injuriously affected.—Youth's Companion.

AGRICULTURAL

Dairying and Feeding.

Dairying is an occupation which has paid in every section of the United States, and has been accomplished under difficulties which should not have occurred. The farmer who makes dairying a specialty gradually becomes wealthier because his farm increases in fertility every year, and because the cattle enable him to sell the products of his farm at prices much above their real value in the form of milk, butter and cheese. The value of the butter produced annually in this country amounts to over $200,000,000, and there is a home market for all that has been produced, but a small proportion being exported. The consumption of butter is estimated at about eighteen pounds per year for each inhabitant, and the total amount produced is over 1,200,000,000 pounds, of which over twenty-four per cent. is made in the North Atlantic States, fifty-four per cent. in the North central group, seven per cent. in the South Atlantic States, eleven per cent. in the South Central division, and four per cent. in the Western division. It may be stated also that twenty per cent. of the product is made in factories, the farms being the sources from which the larger proportions of butter come.

Small Poultry House.

It is generally considered that ten square feet of floor space should be allowed for each fowl in planning a poultry house, and on this basis a house for twenty hens would be about ten by twenty feet inside. Usually this is a safe measurement where no space is provided for a scratching shed; in the latter event much less space in the house proper will suffice, as the hens use it almost entirely for roosting purposes. Prominent poultrymen claim that six square feet for each hen is sufficient, but for the novice we advise the ten square feet.

Whatever the dimensions, if no scratching shed is provided, care must be used that the house is free from draughts and comfortable. In the colder sections every poultry house should be lined inside with tarred paper at the back and sides. The front may be arranged so that during the warmer periods of confinement it can be covered with wire netting through which the sun's rays may come and thus provide a pleasant place for scratching.

If no place is planned for a scratching shed it will be necessary that the food be given at least twice daily, scattered among the chaff on the floor, else the hens will not take enough exercise in the limited space, to keep them in good condition. Whatever the plan of house, it is necessary to provide a fair amount of light and ventilation as well as to keep it fairly warm in winter.

A Rack For the Feed Lot.

In the West we build a rack like this for feeding straw in an open lot to horses and cattle, says a correspondent in an exchange. Lay two logs, any length, say east and west, matching them at the ends in top, and lay the ends of them six feet on the inside. Build log cabin fashion until it is high enough to reach a cow's brisket. Then lay only one log and set it in the middle of the crib, notch it well and spike it down. Now, lay poles all along, resting the foot of each under the bottom log on the inside and leaning the pole on the top log in the middle. Then lay one from the opposite so as to make an X, using the log in the centre as a rest and the bottom log as a foothold. Fasten the end poles, and the others will stay in place as long as the straw is kept in there. You can make them any length desired. The poles being laid alternately, give space enough to admit the horses to the straw, and by having the poles ten feet or more long the rack will hold a good load of hay or straw for about twenty feet in length of crib.—Connecticut Farmer.

Advantages of Sections.

There can be no objection to one booming his own section, provided it has any merits at all, but it is not a good plan to attempt to induce people to leave certain sections for others without good reason. Certain agricultural journals are lauding certain sections of the country, telling of advantages in that section over others, and are inciting farmers to changes which many of them ought not to make. As a matter of fact, and of good, common sense, there are advantages in each decent section that may not be found in others. The farmer of the South truthfully tells of the advantages gained in his warm climate with the long growing season. The farmer of the far North and Northwest talks of the advantages of his wheat section; the man of the thickly settled Middle States tells of the advantages of nearby markets and so on; each one is truthful and has the advantages he names.

This being the case, why not stay there and work out your salvation? The Northern farmer going South, the Eastern Farmer going West and vice versa must meet conditions new to him and conditions which will be trying for a number of years until he gets the hang of them, so what does he gain by the change unless he has a barren farm for a fertile one? If one is doing fairly well in his present location, or if the location is a fairly good one, and he is not doing well, it is a question of the man more than it is of the locality. If you have half a chance, work out the problem where you are; it will be solved easier and sooner than by seeking pastures new.

Keep the Boy on the Farm.

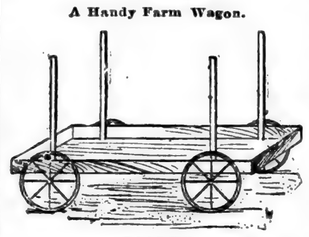
Touching on the steady migration of the young men of the rural districts to the cities in search of a so-called "better chance," and believing that Indiana is being sapped of its energies by that movement, the State Department of Public Instruction, in its last bulletin to the teachers, says that they can influence the boy to stay on the farm and to work out its problems.

"It will be a sad day for our national life when all our young farmers come to town; when the small, well-cultivated homesteads give way to landed estates," the bulletin says.

The necessity of keeping the boys on the farm was the subject of a discussion as to what the teacher can do for the community. A teacher's power in determining the industry of a community lies in making her schoolroom a busy workshop, where the rights of others and the nobility of honest toil are taught.

The bulletin which is being sent out by the State Superintendent deals with the relation of the teacher to the school, her patrons and the locality. The teacher, the bulletin says, ought to be a missionary, harmonizing turbulent elements.—Indianapolis News.

A Handy Farm Wagon.



Pigs and Corn.

Corn will always be the leading pig finisher, but it can never, fed alone, be the food to develop young hogs. A whole ration of corn is not the cheapest ration either, writes Forrest Henry, in N. W. Agriculturist. When you are trying to grow piggy on corn alone, you are trying to make a bone out of material that is poorly adapted for the purpose and consequently you have a poor weak frame at a big expense. I find nothing better or cheaper than wheat shorts as a supplementary feed. It is ground and readily mixes into a slop, it is appetizing and helps to grow a strong framework. If succotash (wheat and oats mixed) is obtainable, when ground it makes a very good substitute. It cannot, however, be fed safely to small pigs. I sometimes get barley that is of a low grade and sells at a low price, have it ground and mix it with the shorts. This helps out the shorts and saves buying. I can nearly always, however, sell the barley for enough to buy the shorts, and I prefer them to any considerable amount of barley. A few pumpkins or squashes in their season do wonders for the pig in keeping him thrifty and giving him a good appetite. In fact, a pig will eat almost anything on the farm and relish it and do the better for the variety. Try giving him a clean feeding floor for a variety if he has been accustomed to a filthy one, and see how much better he will relish his meals. If he has been obliged to sleep in a mud hole, give him a dry, clean nest and see if he will not profit by it. We will have to take less money for our pork the coming year than we have been getting the past two years, therefore, it stands the pig raiser in hand to do his utmost to produce pork more cheaply, and I know of no better way than to feed the pig a greater variety of feed and give him better care.

Poultry Advice.

Don't neglect those frozen combs. They make your flocks look bad.

See that the incubator is in good condition, and begin hatching now.

Don't let your eggs chill; gather them three or four times a day. Chilled eggs never hatch.

The farmer who says he has no time to care for his poultry is not much of a farmer. Good care and feeding of poultry more than pays the cost to any farmer.

The damp and changeable weather, very common at this time of the year, brings on colds and roup in the poultry yard. If they are promptly attended to at first, you will save disastrous results later.

The weight of eggs is about one and one-half pounds to the dozen. A pound of eggs will go as far as a pound of meat for any family. Think of this when you are feeding and caring for your fowls.

The first and last and many other points in the chicken business is to be sure that your stock and facilities are free from grave defects. Remember the old truth "That whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The poultry business is all right as long as we confine our operations within the limits of our capacity. When we exceed those limits we find ourselves in trouble, perhaps without realizing from whence the trouble came.

No sensible excuse has ever been offered for keeping scrub fowls. Thoroughbred fowls should be in the yards of every farmer as well as every up-to-date fancier. It costs no more to feed thoroughbreds than it does mongrel scrubs, and when they are marketed they bring a much better price.

Woman's Realm

Girls Should Be Dignified.

Not long ago something was said on the woman's page of the Boston Herald concerning the behavior of girls, and the frequent cause of complaint against them for bad manners. There is still something to be said, but on quite on another side of the matter, and that is the need that girls should be exacting in the manners of the young men who are their companions, as well as they should be careful of their own.

Quite how far girls are responsible for the behavior of the men with whom they associate one cannot say, but it is in a much larger degree than is generally supposed, and it is not too much to say that girls cannot be too strict in their demands. Little lapses of manner should not go unrebuked, else larger ones may follow.

Of course it is conceded that the girl requires a little courage sometimes, and the young woman dreads to give offence or have herself dubbed haughty and disagreeable, but this should not for a moment deter her from holding her associates of the other sex to the standard of manners which she should set high.

Some young men have an abominable practice of touching a young woman unwarrantably; they will take hold of her arm on the street to help her over a gutter or up a stair when there is not the slightest need for assistance. It is only exceptionally expected nowadays that a man should offer his arm to a lady with whom he is walking at night.

At a dance not long ago a young girl seated herself, following a waltz, in a large arm chair, whereupon her partner perched himself upon the arm. Instantly the girl arose and, not daring to say anything, rebuked the offender by a look. The young man also rose up quickly and begged her pardon. It is quite safe to say that his manner will never be lax in the presence of that girl again.

Another girl was seen at the same dance permitting her partner to fan her with her fan, which was attached to her belt by a rather short ribbon. She should have detached the fan and handed it to him outright. The fanning was perfectly admissable, but the too apparent familiarity was unpleasant in this case.

Girls should not only be dignified in their own behavior, but command dignity from those by whom they are surrounded. Besides, young men really often err through ignorance, and if they are of the right stuff, and are worth making friends of, they will be grateful for little lessons given with a courtesy that is yet absolutely unmistakable.

Equal Partners.

When the descendant of a man who received a title of nobility for his achievements a century or more ago marries the daughter or granddaughter of an American who has "done things," the disinterestedness of the foreigner's affection for his wife is often questioned. The doubt implies that no foreigner of rank would marry an American wife except for her money.

This theory is not complimentary to American girls. Englishmen, with and without titles, are practically unanimous in confessing the charm of the girls brought up in the American atmosphere of freedom and taught to believe in the equality of sexes. They do say, occasionally, that women here have too many privileges, and that their wishes are deferred to more frequently than is wise; but they all admit that the American system, instead of destroying the feminine charm, makes it irresistible.

It is this attractiveness of American girls that leads young Englishmen to seek them as wives. The wealth of the bride has little to do with the case; many girls who are not rich have married into titled families abroad.

The title itself is an accident. The possessor of it is usually several generations removed from the man who earned the honor; whereas, in the United States, it has frequently happened that the bride of the foreigner is the daughter of a man who, if titles of nobility were conferred by the American Government, would have been made a duke, a marquis or a knight because of his statesmanship, his success in war, his inventive genius, or because he conquered the wilderness by building railroads through it. The American bride is every time nearer that her husband to the fountain head of the kind of greatness which is decorated with titles in Europe.—Youth's Companion.

Improving Hollow Cheeks.

There are manifold reasons for hollow cheeks. The main ones are, a natural disposition toward bodily thinness, which manifests itself plainly in the face. Weak, undeveloped muscles due to defective nutrition, as the result of impaired circulation and general physical weakness. Lack of teeth, which takes away the natural support and allow the cheeks to sink inward, even though they be quite fleshy. In such cases the missing cheeks should be replaced, if possible, for the sake of proper mastication as well as for good appearance; then the labor of restoring the contour of the face will be quite easy, provided, of course, the health is good. To impart firmness, facial gymnastics and massage, accompanied by a good prepared skin food or cocoa butter, will prove beneficial. The skin food is to be applied just before retiring and the exercise to be indulged in both night and morning for about ten minutes. To exercise the muscles, first compress the lips, fill the cheeks with air and work the jaws in a chewing movement, puffing the cheeks outward as much as possible and keeping the mouth closed. Before applying the skin food prepare the face to receive it by a thorough washing in warm soapy water, followed by a cold rinse. Dry, and with the tips of the fingers stroke the muscles of the cheeks upward and backward with gentle pressure, after placing the thumbs at the base of the ears. Anoint the hollows with the cocoa butter and execute a rotary movement, beginning by placing the finger tips at the corner of the mouth and following the jaw bone to the temple. Start again at the corner of the mouth and work upward through middle of cheek to outer corner of the eye. Repeat each movement ten times, keeping the pressure firm but gentle.—Marion Alcott Prentice, in Mirror and Farmer.

Wall Paper Picture Mats.

The new picture-framing idea is the use of wall papers for mats Not only dark green, gray, blue and red cartridge papers are used for mats, but the figured wall papers as well. One of the prettiest landscape pictures recently shown in an exhibit had for a mat a cream satin wall paper marked with gauzy spider webs connected by a silken spider thread. In the upper left hand corner of the picture was a spider weaving a web about a huge crimson rose The effect was exquisite, combining as it did the cream and gray tones with the red of the rose Another wall paper idea was a water-color sketch of a child, which was framed with a mat made of violet wall paper. The frame itself was of violet passepartout, which made it a fitting object to hang on the boudoir walls of the elderly woman for whom it was intended.

A dainty little country landscape had for its setting a mat made of wild rose crepe paper. The frame was of pink ribbon pasted on the glass the same as in passepartouting. This picture, too, was for a boudoir. Possibilities lie dormant even in a crepe paper napkin. A pansy one, for instance, with its floral sentiment, is beautiful for a photograph frame which is to be presented as a gift. It is easily made by cutting an oval or square in the centre, padding with cotton, scenting with sachet and using a pasteboard packing.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Latest Trimmings.

Band trimmings will be the height of vogue and the Oriental colorings in their embroidery will be daintier than ever. In the new Paris bands the colorings and designs are quite characteristic. One costly one has a cherry design worked in peculiar colorings of blue and purplish red. White and champagne vie with each other for supremacy as a background for these Paris bands.

Trimming Laces.

As exaggerated lace sleeve ruffles are one of the season's distinctive style features, much interest centres in the new trimming laces. Repousse, pousse, Vierre, Val and any net-top lace will be used for these sleeve ruffles, and lace flounces for skirts are to be revived.

FASHIONS OF THE DAY

Illuminated linens are new.

Panne velvet is used for evening wraps.

Velvet bracelets with jeweled clasps have been revived.

Pongees are to be coarser and heavier than last season.

White duck shoes with trimmings of shiny black leather are a promised vogue.

The surplice idea with a guimpe of lace is introduced upon gowns of all materials.

Nothing so choice comes later in the season as these first showings of summer fabrics.

Very smart is a black velveteen gown trimmed with white satin whereon is braided silver cord.

Very new evening hats are embroidered with straw or have a fringe of straw balls around the rim.

Underslips of silk or fine cambrics are necessary for the lingerie and thin silk blouses so much worn this winter.

As far as one may phophecy at this early date, no fabric will equal sibeline in popularity for street gowns and coats.

Creamy pinks and plain golden yellows are delectable shades in the soft clinging liberty stain used for girlish evening frocks.

A white Paris muslin evening gown has an enormous shoulder cape of white silk, bordered with Tom Thumb fringe of white silk, set here and there with pearled pendants.

"Be it resolved, That we, the people's party executive committee of Chilton county, do hereby indorse the UNION, a paper published in Clanton, Ala., as our official organ tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

CHURCH NOTICES.

We are going to revise our church notices this week and would urgently ask that all pastors and clerks look over our list in the UNION and if any are wrong, please send the correction in at once and we will cheerfully make it right

A CLEAN CANDIDATE.

The registered voters in our county should have received by this time a letter from Hon. T. Scott Sayre, of Montgomery, candidate for judge of this circuit, inclosing the opinions of a few of the many prominent men who indorse his candidacy. Look over these carefully and notice the stress these gentlemen lay upon Mr. Sayre's HONESTY, INTEGRITY and ABILITY, and you can't help but vote for him.

"A judge, like Caesar's wife, should be above suspicion."

CIRCUIT COURT.

The spring term of our court opens Monday, April 4th, for two weeks. Judge Richardson will be on the bench. We invite all our friends to make the UNION office their headquarters while in town, and we will strive to do all in our power to accommodate them. Come in.

FOR PROBATE JUDGE.

We are reliably informed that the Hon. L. H. Reynolds will make the race for the populist nomination for probate judge. So far we have not heard of any one who will contest it with him, and it looks like he will have a walk-over. It is a sure thing that the entire populist ticket will be elected "hands down." The race is open to all according to the call.

A HAPPY FAMILY.

How pleasant it is to see Brother Kilgore and the banner man dwell together in unity. Who would have "thunk" it, after the many pleasant things they each have said about the other? It puts us in mind of a happy family in a menagerie or a sort of a monkey and parrot time—"Two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one"

JEMISON.

Editor Union—I wish to say a few words to the people through our paper. To commence with, the populists around here feel greatly encouraged since our meeting at Clanton on the 15th. But, oh! the democrats that went down to that great democratic rally (?) from here, how sad they look. If you were to meet one of them (not knowing what had happened) you would think his best friend was dead, or that he had lost his plow horse and could not make any 15-cent cotton. For after the few demmies gathered they were so badly demoralized they never made any kind of a proposition to the populists. Mr. Adams said they had made every kind of an offer, but our committee never heard of it, and Adams said if there was any trouble the people would know who to blame. Yes, Brother Adams, we well know who to blame if we have trouble. We know who started trouble in Chilton; we know who always stirred up strife; we well remember the first trouble the populists had in Chilton, when our people were divided. It is enough to make a dog laugh to think of the democratic rally at Clanton, how they were going to harmonize all the people into the democratic party; but when the battle was over and the smoke had cleared away the populists were still on top, and instead of populists going into the democratic primary, many democrats have gone with the populists. Some old line democrats were on the streets talking for the people's ticket, and by the way, Henry Honeycutt was with the populist committee and pledged them his support, and Judge Honeycutt has quit the dems and will help the people elect their ticket. This is the right kind of harmony. But would not the politics of Chilton make an interesting book if they were written up! Adams came over to Chilton and takes charge of the populist party and Judge Honeycutt went out at the other door, and then when Adams saw he was losing out in the populist party he went into the democratic party and took charge of it, and Mr. Honeycutt returns to the people, and I don't blame Mr. Honeycutt much for getting out of a party that Adams controls and many a poor democrat would be glad to get away if Adams continues to control the democratic party. But I knew Mr. Honeycutt was not a democrat and could not work in harmony with that party, and knowing him to be an honest man have thought when the democrats started up their rings and court house cliques, as they have done, he would quit them. And, honest, now, don't it look like the old court house gang? But, oh! Adams says all the trouble with the populists is that a few men want office. God bless his poor, pitiful soul, he does not want an office and no one else in Clanton either!

Look over the list of candidates and see if there is a single one in Clanton that wants office on the democratic side. But don't the banner lie? Said there was about 70 populists present and about 90 democrats. If there were that many democrats, then they must have been behind closed doors, getting up another rally, or trying to get rid of the one on hand. Any one must be a fool who could not see that there were over 300 populists in town. I must close now, but I do hope the democrats will have another rally soon, and then we'll take in the rest of them, all but their candidates.

ONE OF THE BOYS.

RIDERVILLE.

We are glad to say that the smallpox and measles are about vanquished, and that Mrs. J. C. Merchant and Mrs. R. T. Carroll are up again after a spell of sickness.

Much sorrow is expressed for T. G. Milling, who is confined to his bed with a severe attack of la grippe.

Now, a few words about politics. I want to tell the people through the UNION that the Banner wants to get another number to multiply by. I notice he said there were about 70 pops at Clanton the 15th; said each one would carry three votes, making a total of 280. Now, Mr. Banner man, multiply by 20 and see the difference, makes 1,400 votes, and that is what the dems will have to beat to elect their ticket in Chilton county.

Another fellow in the Banner of two weeks ago spoke of Brother W. H. Conway as though he was going through the country advising our people to stay out of the primary April 11th. Suppose he is. He has a right to say what he pleases to his own people. He is not meddling with the dems, and if they have not enough dems to run a primary without the help of the populists and republicans, they had better quit, for we are not going to help them Our people remember fourteen years ago when the dems ruled us out of the primary and wanted to run the election by bossism, and now we see the same COURT HOUSE RING RULE GANG trying to get in power again, but they can't fool us any more. Success to the UNION

FINAL PROOF NOTICE.

Department of the Interior. Land Office at Montgomery, Ala. March 4, 1904.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the clerk of the circuit court at Clanton, Ala., on April 16, 1904, viz.: George W. Postmaster-General Payne recommends a small appropriation for extending telephone service in the rural mail delivery, providing a special stamp which the sender may place on his letter authorizing the postmaster to open it and telephone the contents to the receiver. It will save twenty-four hours in many cases and for all practical purposes will be pretty nearly a telegraph service for speed, and that in regions where telegraph service does not exist.

How statesmanship may come in "the small package" is demonstrated in the case of Congressman Thomas W. Hardwick, of Georgia, who stands but an inch over five feet in his shoes and weighs only one hundred and seven pounds. When seated in the house his toes just touch the floor and his head is barely visible above the desk in front.

This was a great gathering, with many ladies present. The audience was favored with an organ and violin duet by the Misses Stewart, who rendered in a very pleasing manner a medley of popular airs. Mr. Guy Higgins presided and talks were made by several gentlemen present, who eulogized Mr. Strock very highly. After the singing of "America" by the entire house the meeting adjourned.

CLANTON HIGH SCHOOL.

The following pupils have neither been tardy nor absent during the past month, which ended last Thursday:

Intermediate Department—Misses Elna Sartor, Emma Sims, Drucilla Robinson, Maggie McKinney, Belle Goodgame and Belle Cooley; Masters Charles Wilson, Joe Teel and Will Wilson.

Primary Department—Misses Corinne Tyus, Katie Smith and Ethel Mullins; Masters Leonard Smith, John T. Morgan, Joe Robinson and Tom Teel.

The term examination was held last week and the pupils came out much better than they did the last examination. Now they are anxiously awaiting for their reports.

The public term will close the 12th of May and a summer normal will open the 16th of May for the benefit of all who expect to take the state examination in July and any others who wish to take any special work. Those who desire can get instruction in expression and physical culture also. Good board can be had with private families at reasonable rates.

PROVIDENCE.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space for a few words in regard to the meeting held at Clanton on the 15th inst. I want to say that I am proud to see the harmony prevailing among our people as shown by the meeting. There was not a jar or a single discordant voice, notwithstanding the fact that the democrats had called a rally for the same time and place, as they said for the purpose of inviting the people of Chilton county into one political party? But as they (the democrats) failed to make any proposition in any shape, form or fashion to harmonize the people, and as we were not asking to harmonize and had no proposition to make, everything was harmony. In calling a primary we made the call broad enough to let ALL voters of the county in that are willing to abide by the result of such primary. So let us continue to stand together as we are at present, and everything will go well with us, as has been the case in the past. Success to the UNION and the PEOPLE. Respectfully,

W. H. SHAW.

The preliminary trial of those accused of the Melton assault was had in Justice Deason's court, Tuesday. After hearing some evidence the justice continued the examination for ten days, discharged Jack Davis (colored) and put W. B. Smith under $1,000 bond, Echols and Cook under $500 each and Jake Harris and Green Williams (colored) $500 each.

MILLINERY OPENING.

The P. D. Wilson millinery opening on Tuesday was a grand success. Fair ladies, sweet music and a gorgeous display of hats and accessories to making a pretty woman still prettier, and one not so well favored extremely attractive. Miss Clara Small was the presiding genius at this feast of beauty and flow of ecstasy.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The regular third Sunday services at Clanton Baptist church were conducted by Rev. A. J. Gross, of Howard college, the regular pastor, Rev. A. C. Swindall, having been invited to preach that day at the Baptist church in Montgomery. Rev. Gross preached very acceptably to good congregations both morning and evening, and gives promise of making a good minister in the future. Rev. J. M. Kalin from Alvin, Tex., a former resident of Chilton county, was present and helped in the service of prayer. He has been absent from Chilton for fourteen years, but numbers of his old friends were very pleased to meet him once more and those who had not met him before were happy to meet so good a man.

EVANGELIST COMING!

The Rev. John L. Brasher, of Birmingham, Ala., who is the regular Alabama conference evangelist of the Methodist Episcopal church, and an honored member of the Alabama conference and an educated theologian, will begin a series of meetings at the court house at Clanton, Ala., on Friday, March 25, 1904, at 7 p. m. The meeting is to run ten days, morning and evening services. Let everybody come regardless of denomination or belief.

Mr. Brasher is an effective preacher, a natural orator, a soul winner. Let the old brethren and sisters who have long wanted to feel once again a touch of the 'old time power" come and work with Mr. Brasher. Let mothers whose hearts are troubled because husbands, sons or daughters are wayward and ungodly come. Let the many candidates and their friends stop telling the boys how "it is" and come to hear Mr. Brasher. It may do you far more good than to get the nomination. Let the saints come and work as never before that God may pour out a great blessing in all hearts.

Preachers especially invited.

May your expectations be great and the measure of blessings greater!

Sincerely younrs,
S. J. JENNINGS.

PROVIDENCE.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space for a few words in regard to the meeting held at Clanton on the 15th inst. I want to say that I am proud to see the harmony prevailing among our people as shown by the meeting. There was not a jar or a single discordant voice, notwithstanding the fact that the democrats had called a rally for the same time and place, as they said for the purpose of inviting the people of Chilton county into one political party? But as they (the democrats) failed to make any proposition in any shape, form or fashion to harmonize the people, and as we were not asking to harmonize and had no proposition to make, everything was harmony. In calling a primary we made the call broad enough to let ALL voters of the county in that are willing to abide by the result of such primary. So let us continue to stand together as we are at present, and everything will go well with us, as has been the case in the past. Success to the UNION and the PEOPLE. Respectfully,

W. H. SHAW.

A Paradise For Criminals

Zafferines, a Spanish Penal Settlement, Ruled by Convicts Xavier Duroc in La Revue --- Translated For Public Opinion. :-: :-:

ON the Zaffarin islands, a few miles from Kiss, off the African coast, is the most astonishing and the most comical fortress that ever was constructed, a penal colony which is absolutely unique and entirely different from what one would expect even in Spain. The largest island contains the town of Zaffarines, which up to six o'clock in the morning is absolutely silent, the ruins and stillness suggesting a town which has been deserted after a disaster. There are not even dogs or birds. At six o'clock, however, at the thin tolling of the bell of La Conquista, a tower which is found at the centre and summit of the island, the doors of the prison open, the stores and the heretofore deserted streets suddenly become animated. For ten minutes there is life in the streets, the prisoners scattering in every direction, then they disappear and the town again looks like a dead city. The life, however, has been transferred to the taverns and the hovels; the rooms of the prison are empty, but the wine shops are full, each group of prisoners having its favorite tavern, although many have not attained this degree of discrimination and visit all impartially. Upon reaching the tavern many prisoners install themselves in a corner from which they do not move until it is time to return to the prison.

PRISONERS WITH LIBERTY.

There is no doubt that this island is the paradise of criminals. Here the prisoners have absolute liberty to devote themselves to sloth or drunkenness, they may promenade freely in the open air, play at cards, talk, drink, assault or even stab one another. Some few work, carrying water, performing a crude form of masonry, etc., while not a few of them manifest by their yawning that they are extremely bored. It is needless to say that every lazy, quarrelsome, drinking gambling individual could easily accommodate himself to such a life, for here he is in his element. At Zaffarines he does not have to battle for subsistence since he is clothed, nourished and lodged at the expense of the state, which does not interfere with his actions and leaves him free to act as he pleases. A single liberty is denied the prisoner and that is to leave the island; but this is little desired. The boarders of Zaffarines have also a douro in the bottom of their pocket, and for those who are not satisfied with the infected mess served by the prison there is always the table d'hote at which many feasts take place.

CARRYING OF ARMS COMMON.

The carrying of arms is an almost universal practice, and there are few prisoners who have not in their linen belts a large knife. This latter is not the traditional navaja which bends in the middle and opens with a spring, but a large, solid, pointed knife, and a man who has not his herramiento is not a man at all. Although upon his entrance into the prison the criminal is searched, the confiscation of a knife is a rare occurrence. It is possible that at the moment of crossing the prison threshold the criminal has not his knife, but it is certain that he does not go to sleep without his "armed friend." The question naturally arises, Where are these weapons obtained? The answer is easy; they are obtained from the keepers themselves. Authority in the prison of Zaffarines is merely a fiction, the true masters of the place being the prisoners, to whom everything is subordinated. The captain of the place, if he had to live on his salary, could not exist, therefore he installs a tavern and the prisoners make him rich. In this tavern there are sold, besides liquors of all sorts, knives, revolvers, cartridges, etc., the captain being the one chiefly interested in the multiplication of thefts, for the product of these goes to swell his bank account.

JAILERS AS RUM-SELLERS.

Each of the two captains in the place is the owner of two establishments at which they have made a fortune. One of them married the daughter of a criminal, his son is an officer, and his daughter is about to marry one of the officers of the place. This is a family of the most eminent respectability, the flower of the high life of Zaffarines. In 1901-1902, at head of one of this official's taverns, there was installed one of the orderlies who was a part of the garrison of the place, and who was under the command of the military son, and although the other tavern-keeping official recently died, his rum shops are kept by an infantry sergeant. A fifth tavern belongs to a prisoner condemned for two homicides, and the two others are the property of free men who have no position in the prison.

The penalty of hard and forced labor does not exist in the Spanish penal code, and in the penal settlements only those work who wish to. At Ceuta the workshops have a special organization, but at Zaffarines and other places the work is less well regulated, the only apparent distribution of the men being into brigades. The workman obtains a minimum of thirteen centimes and a maximum of one peseta a day, and for a man who has no family to support, no lodging to pay, the money earned in the penal settlement is really a surplus which few free workmen are able to lay by. Formerly the management of the settlement made certain deductions, for example, those men who earned less than twenty-five cents receiving nothing until there had been formed a fund of five douros, after which the whole wage was paid. The five douros was used for the purpose of sending the criminal home on the day of his liberation or to pay for his capture in case of escape or attempted escape from the island.

SOME OFFICIAL THIEVES.

In the management of these reserve funds, however, grave scandals took place, the prisoner at the end of his term of service finding but little of the reserve fund at his disposal, the vampires of the administration so confusing the poor wretch that in the end he always left the prison with nothing in his pockets. In 1901 General Weyler decided that there should no longer be formed reserve funds and that each prisoner should receive each day the total wage due to him. This has not in any sense assisted the prisoner, for under the former rule the reserve funds, in case the officials were honest, really represented a certain guarantee for the criminal, but now the convict no longer practices economies, gambling houses have greatly increased, and theft is the most ordinary event.

Goats.

H. G. Stephens, of the St. Charles Hotel, has long been interested in goats and is regarded as an authority on that humble animal. "Few people know the many admirable qualities of the goat," he said. "Goats are the only animals that will boldly face a fire, and they are often kept in stables for the sole purpose of leading horses from the stalls in case of a conflagration. Horses, you know, will burn to death before moving from the flames unless some other animal leads them out. Goats can foretell stormy weather and invariably find shelter before a storm arrives. Even in domesticated life the goat loves to clamber about on dizzy heights and will generally be found on a crag of rock, or if that is not available, on the roof of a barn, or the top of a barrel. The most valuable variety of goat is the Cashmir, whose soft, silky hair furnishes material for expensive fabrics. The Cashmir is a native of Thibet, but the shawls are made in France, Germany and, in later years, in the United States. To make a single shawl a yard and a half square, at least ten goats are robbed of their coats.

"I now have a pet goat nearly twenty years old. She is almost as intelligent as a human being and knows a lot of tricks, and is so strong that I can ride her with ease. I have seen specimens of the famous snake-eating goat of India. It is said that these goats devour the most dangerous reptiles and have absolutely no fear of the poisonous vermin with which the country abounds."—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

Too Busy to Make a Noise.

A Kansas City teacher of a kindergarten was incapacitated from work one day last week by the following incident. The subject of the lecture and object lesson was animals, birds and then more animals.

"Now, children," said the teacher, "I want each of you to think of some animal or bird and try for a moment to be like the particular one you are thinking about, and make the same kind of noises they are in the habit of making."

Here was the command. Here the finale:

Instantly the schoolroom became a menagerie. Lions roaring, dogs barking, birds singing and twittering, cows lowing, calves bleating, cats meowing, etc., all in an uproar and excitement—all, with one single exception.

Off in a remote corner a little fellow was sitting perfectly still, apparently indifferent and unmindful of all the rest. The teacher, observing him, approached and said:

"Waldo, why are you taking no part with the other children?"

Waving her off with a deprecating hand and wide, rebuking eyes, he fervently whispered:

"Sh—sh—sh, teacher—sh! I a 'ooster, and I'm a-layin' a aig!"—Kansas City Star.

Married Sisters.

A study in relationship is offered by two families living in and near here. A veteran of the Civil War has a son who married a well-known young lady of the county, and to whom several children have been born. Later the father of the young man wedded a sister of his son's wife, and the relationships of the two families thus becomes decidedly interesting. A few of the odd relationships thus developed are as follows: The father is the son's brother-in-law and both grandpa and uncle of the young man's children. The senior wife is both grandma and aunt of the younger family of children, senior wife is both stepmother and sister-in-law of the young man, and so on ad infinitum.—Walla Walla Statesman.

Future Life of Animals.

Sir William Blunden, a doctor and baronet, has just favored a meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals with some views on the future state of animals. He "certainly believed," he said, in the future existence of animals, and, though he could not bring forward evidence in support of his proposition, he could not at the same time forward evidence to the contrary. If they took the case of the tinker's ass, which was born and reared in hardship, he found it hard to think that a merciful Creator formed that animal merely to suffer at the hands of man without receiving some compensation in the next life, if not in the present.

My Grandmama.

Grandmama wears a soft gray gown;
It's silky when I smooth it down.
I hope I'll wear a soft gray gown
When I am old like her.

Grandmama's hair is snowy white;
It almost sparkles in the light.
I hope my hair will be as bright
When I am old like her.

Grandmama's smile is very sweet;
My pa says it "can't be beat."
I hope my smile will be as sweet
When I am old like her.

Grandmama knows I love her well;
I love her more than I can tell.
I hope little girls will love me well
When I am old like her.

Sweet Music.

The children of Paris have a new toy—in a clockwork phonograph costing only seventy-five cents. This remarkable instrument, which a paper describes, has a mica diaphragm, a sounding-box, a trumpet, and a needle which follows the record upon the disk.

Most marvelous of all is the disk itself, for the voice record is made in chocolate. It is said to give a fine reproduction of the voice, and—and—and—the record, tune and all, can be eaten after it has been played.—Our Junior Citizens.

A New Game.

This can be played by any number, but five or six are enough to make it interesting.

The hostess supplies a box containing a simple gift, or even a nice candy, for each child. This box is carefully wrapped and tied so that its contents are secret. It is then given into the keeping of one who is selected and called the fairy. To each of the others is given a bit of stick or paper, but the article is called, first a nail, secondly a hammer; then, pinchers, etc. One girl or boy goes to the fairy and says:

"Please give me your box." The fairy says:

"I will if you will bring me a nail." The player then goes to the one with "a nail." She replies: "I will give you my nail if you will bring me the hammer." So she goes to the end one who gives up say—the pinchers. Then going back she collects each article—failing if she forgets what each one has—and so back to the fairy who delivers up the box which is opened with anticipation and each one receives his own gift. Should the first player forget any article, he pays a forfeit and the next one takes his place.

A Brave Signaler.

Valiant and venturesome were the American soldiers in the Spanish war, and valiant, too, were the Spaniards. It rejoiced Colonel Greene, of the signal corps to tell the story of a gallant Spanish flagman, which Gen. A. W. Greely repeats in his article in the Century Magazine on the United States signal corps in war time.

At El Caney the Spaniards occupied the graceful stone fort of El Viso. It was the key to the situation on their left, and they built a telephone line from Santiago to the fort, which they equipped as a signal station.

On July 1 the American attack began at 6 o'clock in the morning, and our left pushing forward to cut off the enemy's line of communications, occupied the high road to Santiago about 8 o'clock. Espying the telegraph wire that bound together El Caney and Santiago, the American soldiers, obedient to military instinct promptly cut it.

But the beleaguered fort was no more cut off from communication with Santiago than was Crose at Allatoona from Sherman at Kenesaw mountain. In a few minutes a Spanish flagman appeared on the commanding summit of El Viso and began signaling to Santiago.

His figure moved sharp and clear against the morning sky, within rifle range of 2000 keen-eyed Americans, who were pouring a fire into El Viso. At intervals the deep notes of Capron's battery roared over the shrill music of the bullets.

Indifferent to shot and shell, the Spaniard rhythmically waved his signal flag to and fro until he had sent his message. In telling the story, Colonel Greene added: "How long the flag waved or what it said, I do not know, but as no signal flag was reported among the trophies at El Caney, I hope that he escaped. Here's to him, if alive! If not, peace to his memory!"—Indianapolis News.

Pilgrim Fathers of Eleuthera.

Everybody knows what happened to the Pilgrim Fathers who sailed in the "Mayflower" and founded the New England states; but there were other shiploads of Pilgrim Fathers who left England to colonize the lands of the west. They have left no mark on history, but their descendants are still living on such forgotten islands as the Caymans, the Caicos and the Bahamas.

In the muniment room of the Bahama government at Nassau, there is a musty old manuscript which tells the story of the Pilgrim Fathers of Eleuthera, a godly band who, after many stirring adventures, helped to build up the colony of Virginia. It is a tale on which Defoe might have constructed a great romance, but it has lain hidden for many generations beneath the dust and cobwebs of the Bahama archives, and is now published for the first time.

When Cromwell ruled England, one Captain William Sayle obtained authority to colonize the island of Eleuthera, in the Bahamas, on condition that there should be in his little commonwealth absolute liberty of conscience, "every man to enjoy his own opinion or religion as seemeth best to himselve, without controul or question." The effect of this latitudinarian spirit is thus graphically told:

"Upon these terms they furnished him out with a ship and all provisions and necessaries for the design, and some few persons embarked with him and sailed to Summer's Island, where they took in Mr. Patrick Copeland, an elder of the church there of persons who had sailed thither for conscience sake, and so many others of the church, as there were in the ship in all seventy persons.

"But on the way to Eleuthera, one Captain Butler, a young man who came in the ship from England, made use of his liberty to disturb all the company. He could not indure any ordinances of worship, etc., and when they arrived at one of the Eleuthera Islands, he made such a faction, as enforced Captain Sayle to remove to another island, and being near the harbour, the ship struck and was cast away.

"The persons were all saved, save one, but all their provisions and goods were lost; so as they were forced (for divers months) to lie in the open air and to feed upon such fruits and wild creatures as the island afforded. But finding their strength to decay, and no hope of any relief Captain Sayle took a shallop and eight men, and with such provisions as they could get set sail, hoping to attain either the Summer's Island or Virginia; and so it pleased the Lord to favour them, that in nine days they arrived in Virginia, their provisions all spent."

A relief expedition was sent from Virginia and many of the remaining sixty castaways were brought to that colony. Others established themselves in the various islands of the Bahamas, where their descendants are living to this day.—New York Press.

Queer Things in Horns.

An osteologist is one who makes a study of bones. The government gives employment to several of these experts and one of them is the authority for the queer things herein related about horns. It must be premised, however, that all horns are not bones. Take the horns of the rhinoceros, for example. It is nothing more than a protuberance composed of agglutinated hair. You cut it in two, and, examining its structure under the microscope, you find it is made up entirely of little tubes resembling hair tubes.

Of course, these are not themselves hairs, but the structure is the same. The horns of the African rhinoceros sometimes grow to the length of four feet. From them the Dutch Boers make ramrods and other articles.

In old times, rhinoceros horns were employed for drinking cups by royal personages, the notion being that poison put into them would show itself by bubbling. There may have been some truth in the idea, inasmuch as many of the ancient poisons were acids, and they would decompose the horny material very quickly.

A species of rhinoceros, now extinct and only found in a fossil state, used to exist which had no horns at all. The meaning, as it does, "horned nose," is rather a misnomer in their case. Several kinds of rhinoceros in Africa have two horns, one behind the other; but the extinct rhinoceros, known as the dyceratherium, had a pair of horns on its nose, side by side.

Many of the giant reptiles of long ago had enormous horns. The great lizard, known as the triceratops, had a big horn over each eye and a little one on its nose. The dinoceras and the tinoceras, gigantic mammals of the tertiary epoch, had three pairs of prominences on their heads, which are believed to have supported horns.

However, the material of which horn is composed quickly decays, being largely made up of gelatine and other animal matter, so that these appendages are apt to be found absent when the fossil bones of beasts which had them are found.

Some fishes have horns, which are actually outgrowths of bone on their heads. The box-fish, which inhabits the warm waters of the globe—a little fellow six or eight inches long—has horns an inch in length.

Birds have horns, also sometimes. The hornjed screamer (which is related to the duck) has a single horn attached to its skull, springing from a cartilaginous base and curving upward. It is really a modified feather, though a true horn.

Plenty of reptiles have horns. Lizards are very commonly provided with them. There are chameleons with three horns like the ancient triceratops. Horned toads have a sort of crest of four horns on the back of their heads. There is a small African snake which has two horns.

No horned tortoise now exists, but a fossil specimen was found a while ago on Howe's Island, in the Southern Pacific, which had four horns on its crest, and resembles a cross between a horned toad and a snapping turtle.—Waverly Magazine.

He Would Be Let.

"Huh!" grumbled Mr. Skinnay, who was being uncomfortably crowded by the jolly-looking fat man in the trolley car, "these cars should charge by weight."

"Think so?" replied the fat man. "Then they wouldn't think it worth while to stop for you."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

AN ELOQUENT DISCOURSE BY THE REV. C. L. PALMER.

Subject: "Why the Righteous Suffer and the Ungodly Prosper"—God Permits Afflictions to Come Upon His People as a Character Test.

KINGSTON, N. Y.—In the Reformed Church of the Comforter on Sunday morning the Rev. C. L. Palmer preached a scholarly discourse entitled "Why the Righteous Suffer and the Ungodly Prosper." He took his text from Psalm 73: 3: "For I was envious at the arrogant, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked."

The Seventy-third Psalm was probably composed by Asaph, who was a pious Jew, and one of the leaders of the temple chorus. The phraseology and contents indicate that he was intelligent and spiritual, and that in the course of his religious experience was exposed to the ravages of doubt. However, upon mature deliberation all doubt was overcome, and he became strong in the faith.

The particular problem that confused him was why the righteous suffer and the ungodly prosper. Why the most vicious criminal should enjoy material prosperity and consecrated disciples be subjected to suffering. If God is perfectly righteous in Himself, and supremely just in all His dealings with men, why does He allow the ungodly to succeed and the believer to fail? Why does He not obliterate every sinner and preserve every saint? Why does He permit the godly to pass through so many deep and raging seas of affliction? Why are many of the Christless so free from human misery? These are questions which have been fresh in the mind of every generation, and the only satisfactory answer is the one that sufficed the psalmist.

Before undertaking to develop so important a subject it is necessary that we divest our minds of one possible misconception. The implication of the text is not that all the wicked prosper, and that all the righteous are afflicted. It is not that all the ungodly prosper because they are ungodly, or that all believers are afflicted because they are believers. It is not true that all the worldly enjoy success, and all the righteous are discontented, unhappy and unsuccessful. The psalmist was in a pessimistic mood at the time of writing, and describes a condition from which he was eventually extricated. It is true that some godless men and women seem to be happy and prosperous, and that some devoted disciples are greatly afflicted. But it is far from the natural deduction of Scripture and experience that all the godly are unsuccessful and the wicked prosperous, though we do acknowledge that the ancient sentiment of the text is not without its modern application. We still wonder why the unrighteous prosper and the godly are afflicted.

I. WHY THE UNGODLY ENJOY TEMPORAL PROSPERITY.

We cannot deny that many worldly people have an abundance of life's blessings, and that they appear to be quite free from adversity. It is well known that many of our most wealthy people seem to be indifferent to religion. They spend their time and means either in business or seeking pleasure. Our contention is that human success or failure is not an infallible criterion by which we are to justify or condemn the government of God.

It is not uncommon for godless people to inherit property. Nor is it unusual for unbelieving parents to leave an inheritance to their children. That while there has been utter indifference to Christianity there has been no want of concern in the accumulation of wealth. And many possess a disinterested temperament that protects them from needless care and anxiety.

Unbelievers are often more shrewd than Christians. "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." A life of utter absorption in the accumulation and management of money develops an acumen, one who readily discovers whatever will contribute to his personal and temporal advancement. And since we are free moral agents it is possible for one to succeed in the direction of his ambition.

Unbelievers are often less scrupulous. They will do many things for temporal comfort that others will not. A godless mortal will keep a saloon or a gambling den, from which the profits are very large. He will desecrate the Sabbath or violate any of the divine laws without hesitation so long as his personal interest is encouraged. His motto is "eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die." Would a reborn soul and heir of the kingdom do the same? A true disciple of the Great Teacher would not consciously transgress any civil or religious requirement, even if by such a violation he would increase his means and comfort.

The attention of unbelievers is more concentrated on the accumulation of wealth and on personal comfort. It is about all many think of. They think about money when they retire. They dream about it at night. It is upon their minds when they awake in the morning, and they labor for it during the day. It is the only desire they have, and it is not strange that they should obtain it.

Christians are unwilling to deprive themselves of the comfort and blessing of giving. Our churches are supported by the professed followers of Christ. All the philanthropic and charitable organizations are largely sustained by those who bear the Christian name. The church has great reason to thank God for those who give so liberally toward her support, while the world is either hoarding or wasting its means, they are applying their gifts to the social, intellectual, moral and eternal improvement of others.

The long suffering of God is not to be ignored. God permits ungodly people to obtain the desire of their hearts. The sneering jest of Dionysius, the younger, a tyrant of Sicily, when, after having robbed the Temple of Syracuse, he had a prosperous voyage with the plunder is well known. See you not, said he, to those who were with him, how the gods favor the sacrilegious? The interpretation of the incident was from the standpoint of a heathen. God simply permitted him to escape.

Doubtless the ungodly are allowed to prosper, in order to test and prove the righteous. It is a test for the faithful but unfortunate to see some godless mortal carried on the sea of prosperity. But it is a test that we are abundantly able to sustain. Socrates, being asked what would be vexatious to good men, replied, the prosperity of the bad. What would vex the bad? the prosperity of the good. It is not and cannot be made to appear incompatible with the perfection of God's government that the ungodly should have a measure of material prosperity.

II. WHY THE RIGHTEOUS HAVE ADVERSITY

Having admitted that the ungodly often enjoy temporal prosperity, it remains to acknowledge that the righteous are frequently subjected to the greatest suffering of body and mind, and if possible to ascertain the cause. Not all are greatly affected, though it is very likely that every heart sustains some burden.

Even our limited knowledge of the Scriptures and imperfect religious experiences enable us to understand why believers are often afflicted. It seems as if some were destined to be unfortunate. Everything they undertake fails, and the harder they labor the more they are disappointed. We utterly repudiate the doctrine of fate, but find ourselves confronted with the fact that some seem to be creatures of misfortune.

Many of life's adversities are brought upon ourselves. We may accuse others or even God, but in our inner consciousness find ourselves confronted with the conviction that we have been the cause of our own suffering. A man who resorts to steal wheat from an elevator may have it come down an avalanche of the staff of life which smothered him to death. He has transgressed the law and brought upon himself destruction.

Some of life's adversities are brought upon us by others. The social fabric is so closely woven that even one thread cannot be broken without weakening the whole. So we suffer for the deeds of others. A bank official absconds with the funds of the institution and wrecks it, or all they possess. One partner defrauds the other and throws him into bankruptcy. The President is assassinated. The nation is broken-hearted and the nation is plunged in mourning. An intoxicated driver destroys the life of his child and the parents nearly never recover from the shock.

Unquestionably God permits adversity to come upon His people. Adversity is required as well as prosperity. If we are not for the former we should be no different to the latter, and from the same source from which all blessings flow. Prosperity is a more severe and crucial test of character than adversity. The hour of summer sunshine produces more corruption than the longest winter. India with her famine is more to be pitied than ancient Rome with her apoplexy of wealth. Better grow in scarcity than plenty without stint.

We believe that God sometimes sends affliction to bring His children nearer to Himself. He takes away the idol from the heart that He may be the only object of adoration. He sweeps away the idols from the lands to teach His people that they are dependent on Him. One has to suffer long pain to teach him the frailty of the body and the certainty of its ruin. Spurgeon used to say that trials are like boys' tops, they only spin when they are whipped.

There is a famous fairy tale of the wardine that will convey to our minds the interpretation that we ought to put upon the sublime doctrine of providence. A certain hermit resolved that he would travel from place to place until he found some one who could offer a satisfactory explanation of the government of God. As he was passing along on his course he met on his journey an angel in the form of a man and joined him. The first night they stopped at the house of a very holy man. They spent their time in praising God and conversing upon divine things. In the morning when they departed the host presented with him a cup of solid gold. The next night they came to the home of a very religious man by whom they were hospitably entertained. In the house they had an infant upon whom their affections centered. When they left the next morning the angel destroyed the life of the child. The third night they were entertained in a home of great wealth. When they left the following morning the angel killed the favorite steward. The fourth night was at the home of a godly man to whom he gave the cup of gold which the angel left. After the fourth night the hermit asked the angel to explain why he had taken the cup and given it to the poor, why he had taken two lives. He replied that he will now explain. The first man was ruined by his cup, so I took it away. The second home was more concerned with pleasure to the child than in the service of God. The steward was slain to preserve the life of his master whom he was plotting to destroy. The golden cup was given to the ungodly man because his only good thing to be had here. Or in other and fewer words: "All things work together for good."

All ostensible prosperity is not true prosperity. The prosperity of the wicked is greatly overestimated. Some godless people succeed in certain particulars, but they have not that which is worth more than the treasures of Egypt. They are poor spiritually. They cannot purchase in the market the one great need of the soul.

The adversity of the righteous is greatly overestimated. They do suffer, but they expect to suffer and are willing to endure it. They know such suffering will contribute toward their sanctification. But it is better to be in misfortune circumstances and be in the kingdom of God than to roll in wealth and be outside of the kingdom. It is better to be in the kingdom with poverty than out of it without.

There is only one just conclusion, and that is that the government of God is perfectly just and that we are safe in His keeping. A child once said, I know that the criminal will obtain justice in the court because my father is the judge. We know that we shall have prosperity and adversity. We know that we shall have just what we need because our heavenly Father is the Judge.

Peril of the Tongue.

"Not that which entereth into the mouth defileth the man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth man." It makes a vital and an eternal difference to us how we express our thoughts. A man is in greater danger of self-destruction by speaking than by eating. Formerly many French words were in common use by the Germans, but now the English influence is toward the substitution of German terms for the French—the result being that, as the people speak, the language will become. This is supposed to indicate a higher and more solid patriotic or national spirit—as, other things being equal, it must. Statesmen perceive this truth and apply it to the bottom principle enunciated by Christ and thus apply it. But in our individual lives we often forget to act on it. It harms us to think evil; it harms others more to say what we think. It is the reason that silence is so often golden. And it is also on the same general principle that it is worth while to speak a kind word—if we can do no more.—Sunday School Times.

How to Get Warm.

Warmth is a sign of life. That is a very desirable part of our comfort realized by many a one who reluctantly leaves a warm bed, and shiveringly faces the winter's cold, indoors or out, the winter mornings. If there is an open fire or a heater near by, it is a great temptation to try to get warm by taking in the heat we can get from such a source. But some have learned a better way. To obtain heat from other sources and to warm for themselves. By brisk exercise of their own bodies, by the healthy shock of a cold sponge, by an energetic walk or by taking the car, they make and feel warmth, and the cold demon is defied. And this is the better way in all things. Created warmth is better than borrowed warmth. Your own smile of greeting to another will bring more warmth into his life than you can get by depending on other's. Your own loving word, your unselfish act, brisk and unhesitating, or perhaps its healthy shock as of a sponge, will set your spiritual circulation to tingling in a way that will warm you to the core. Try it some cold day.

A Lovable Quality.

People would try harder for true goodness if they knew how lovable a quality it is. When you know you can rely on any one, that whatever they undertake to do will be done, that you can rest assured over a share of your load to them, you cannot help liking them. On the other hand, it does not matter how amiable they may be if they are forgetful, if they are unpunctual, if they habitually neglect duties become sources of such annoyance that one's liking is apt to die out.—Anna Nicoll.

Censure and Criticism.

Censure and criticism never hurt anybody. If false, they cannot hurt you unless you are wanting in manly courage, and, if true, they show a man his weak points and forewarn him against danger and trouble.—Gladstone.

THE OLD FOLK
Never Without Pe for Catarrhal

MR. AND MRS. J. O. ATKINSO

NDER date of January 1, 1897, Dr. Hartman received the following letter: My wife had been suffering from a complication of diseases for the past 20 years. Her case had baffled the skill of some of the most noted physicians. One of the worst troubles was chronic consumption of several years' standing. She also was passing through that most critical period in the life of a woman's age of it. In June, 1896, I wrote to about her case. You advised a course of Peruna and Manalin, which we at once commenced, and have to say it completely cured her. She firmly believes that she would have been dead only for these wonderful remedies.

About the same time I wrote you about my own case of catarrh, which had been of years' standing. At times I was almost blind. I commenced to use Peruna according to your instructions and continued its use for about a year, and it has entirely cured me.

Your remedies do all that you claim for them, and even more. Catarrh cannot exist where Peruna is taken according to directions. Success to you and your remedies.

John O. Atkinson.

THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME

Never Without Peruna in the House for Catarrhal Diseases.

MR. AND MRS. J. O. ATKINSON, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

DER date of January 10, 1897, Dr. Hartman received the following letter: wife had been suffering from a com- on of diseases for the past 25 years. case had baffled the skill of some most noted physicians. One of her troubles was chronic constipation of years' standing.

also was passing through that most period in the life of a woman— of life. In June, 1895, I wrote to out her case. You advised a course and Manalin, which we at once need, and have to say it completely her. She firmly believes that she have been dead only for these won- remedies.

the same time I wrote you about case of catarrh, which had been of standing. At times I was almost ing. I commenced to use Peruna ing to your instructions and contin- use for about a year, and it has ely cured me.

ur remedies do all that you for them, and even more. Ca- cannot exist where Peruna is according to directions. Suc- you and your remedies."

John O. Atkinson.

letter dated January 1, 1900, Mr. Atkinson says, after five years' experience with Peruna:

"I will ever continue to speak a good word for Peruna. In my rounds as a traveling man I am a walking advertisement for Peruna and have induced many people during the past year to use Peruna with the most satisfactory results. I am still cured of catarrh." John O. Atkinson, Box 272, Independence, Mo.

When old age comes on catarrhal diseases come also. Systemic catarrh is almost universal in old people.

This explains why Peruna has become so indispensable to old people. Peruna is their safeguard. Peruna is the only remedy yet devised that meets these cases exactly.

Such cases cannot be treated locally; nothing but an effective systemic remedy could cure them. This is exactly what Peruna is.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

POPULAR SCIENCE

One out of every four persons who die in London dies "on public charity."

Prof. Hemstedt, of Frieburg, has found a radio-active gas in many springs and oil wells, and he has concluded that there are many other substances besides radium which emit Becquerel rays.

In a recent experiment eight to ten drops of formic acid taken three or four times a day has had a marked effect in stimulating muscular activity, which might be continued a long time without resultant fatigue.

In late experiments of Jensen, isolated cancer cells retained their vitality for eighteen days at one degree to three degrees C., twelve days at room temperature, and perished in twenty-four hours at body temperature.

There is no such thing as mountain sickness due to altitude, according to Dr. Biehley, a Swiss physician and Alpinist. He has made experiments which convinced him that the so-called mountain sickness is merely a result of excessive exertion of an unwonted kind, usually combined with injudicious use of tea, coffee or alcohol.

THE SPIDER'S TRAP

Bird Ensnared That Attempted to Rid House of Pest.

During the past season the Field Museum in Chicago became infested with a large number of obnoxious spiders. They festooned the ceiling and great columns of the building with yards of their shuttlework. Scrubwomen and janitors tried in vain to rid the building of the pests and their work. Finally a small bird known as the brown creeper discovered the state of things, and decided to take up his abode inside and assist the authorities in ridding the building of the pests. The Chicago News describes the bird's experiment.

For several days he flitted about very much as he pleased, wagging up and down column after column and probing his bill into every crevice. With his vigilance he actually carried on a very effective work, and the authorities and the public eyed him with gratified interest.

One morning, however, as the curator of one of the departments was passing a guard remarked, "There's a bird for your collection. Looks as if it were done for."

The bird lay panting on its side at the bottom of one of the columns.

"Bring a fly," said the scientist, as he took the little creeper in his hands. The guard held a buzzing fly on the point of a long pin to the bird's beak, and to his surprise the creeper bit at the insect voraciously.

"Doesn't look as if he were going to die," said the scientist. "I wonder what's the matter with him, anyway?"

Turning the bird over in his hand, he found it had been entrapped in a large spider's web, which had bound the wing and tail together in such a manner as to preclude flying. It looked as if some wise old spider had resented the bird's work of extermination, and had purposely ensnared him in a trap.

The queer bandage was removed, and the bird darted out over the iron grating and shot out of sight across the lagoon.

Number of Paper Money.

"If any one comes up to you and wants to bet you that they can tell whether the number on any of Uncle Sam's paper money is odd or even by looking at that part of the bill on which the number does not appear, shun him as you would the plague," said a guest at the Hotel McKay last night.

"Why? What is the joke?" asked another guest.

"Only this," replied the first. "I was out this afternoon with a number of men with whom I have business dealings. We ate lunch and then one man wanted to bet me that he could call the even or odd on the number of any bill I had, the loser to pay for the lunch. I took a bill from my pocket, folded it so that the number did not show and after he had looked at it he said 'Even.'

"It was even. Soon afterward I got stuck for the cigars the same way. After I had ben done four or five times they explained to me that all of the bills marked 'A' and 'C' were odd, while those marked 'B' and 'D' were even. It cost about $6 to find it out, but I guess it was a good investment at that. It is the same on all bills. Be careful when attempting to do the work not to take the series letter in front of the number, but hunt for a small letter on the left hand side of the bill."—Duluth Evening Herald.

Liked It.

Wayne McVeagh, the lawyer and diplomat, has on the outskirts of Philadelphia an admirable stock farm. One day last summer some poor children were permitted to go over his farm, and when their inspection was done, to each of them was given a glass of milk.

The milk was excellent. It came, in fact, from a $2000 cow.

"Well, boys, how do you like it?" the farmer said when they had drained their glasses.

"Gee! Fine!" said one little fellow. Then, after a pause, he added: "I wisht our milkman kept a cow."—Baltimore Sun.

Billion Dollar Grass and Alfalfa.

When we introduced Billion Dollar Grass three years ago, little did we dream it would be the most talked of grass in America, the biggest, quick, hay producer on earth, but this has come to pass.

Agr. Editors wrote about it, Agr. College Professors lectured about it, Agr. Institute Orators talked about it, while in the farm home by the quiet fireside, in the corner grocery, in the village postoffice, at the creamery, at the depot, in fact wherever farmers gathered, Salzer's Billion Dollar Grass, that wonderful grass, good for 5 to 14 tons per acre, and lots of pasture besides, is always a theme worthy of the farmer's voice.

A. Walford, Westlore Farms, Pa., writes: "I have 60 acres in Salzer's Alfalfa Clover. It is immense. I cut three crops this season and have lots of pasture besides."

It is harder to reconcile ourselves to other people's successes than to our own defeats.

The Talamancans are Indians of Panama, not far from the canal and about half way across the isthmus. They live almost in the primitive style of their ancestors in the days of Columbus and have little intercourse with whites, beyond trading fowls and pigs for tobacco, trinkets and ammunition. They speak their ancient language and still use the blow gun and spear. They live in huts of palm thatch, with a number of domesticated animals; for instance, the wild deer, peccary, tapir, and even the tiger cat. They hunt, fish and cultivate Indian crops and cassava. They have more fear of an evil than faith in a good spirit, are polygamists, and their simple government is hereditary. Their king is a despot as far as custom or law permits, and their "sokee," or medicine man, is lawyer, priest and doctor all in one. Their life is on the whole one of dreamy contentment. Apparently they are an inferior race to the Astecs, who probably ruled them.—London Globe.

EIGHT YEARS OF TORTURE.

No suffering more keen than kidney suffering. Sick kidneys make bad blood; cause weak, stiff and aching backs; cause blind, sick and dizzy headaches, lack of appetite and loss of sleep; keep you all tired out and spoil digestion.

To have perfect health you must cure the kidneys. Read how one man was cured by Doan's Kidney Pills after eight years of torture.

Henry Soule, of Pultney St., Hammondsport, N. Y., says: "For eight years I suffered constant agony from kidney complaint. I endured the worst torture from gravel and the kidney secretions were excessive and contained sediment like brick dust. I had to get out of bed from ten to twenty times a night and the loss of sleep wore me out. Indigestion came on, and the distress after eating was terrible. Doan's Kidney Pills effected a complete and lasting cure, and after the symptoms of kidney trouble were gone my stomach began to work as it should. This lasting cure, especially in a person of my age, proves the great value of Doan's Kidney Pills more convincingly than could any words of mine."

Miss M. Cartledge gives some helpful advice to young girls. Her letter is but one of thousands which prove that nothing is so helpful to young girls who are just arriving at the period of womanhood as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkam's Vegetable Compound too highly, for it is the only medicine I ever tried which cured me. I suffered much from my first menstrual period, I felt so weak and dizzy at times I could not pursue my studies with the usual interest. My thoughts became sluggish, I had headaches, backaches and sinking spells, also pains in the back and lower limbs. In fact, I was sick all over.

"Finally, after many other remedies had been tried, we were advised to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am pleased to say that after taking it only two weeks, a wonderful change for the better took place, and in a short time I was in perfect health. I felt buoyant, full of life, and found all work a pastime. I am indeed glad to tell my experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it made a different girl of me. Yours very truly, MISS M. CARTLEDGE, 533 Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga."

At such a time, the grandest aid to nature is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It prepares the young system for the necessary changes, and is the surest and most reliable cure for woman's ills of every nature. Mrs. Pinkham invites all young women who are ill to write her for free advice. Address, Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Mrs. Estes, of New York City, says:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I write to you because I believe all young girls ought to know how much good your medicine will do them. I did dressmaking for years before I was married, and if it had not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I do not believe I could have stood the strain. There is no other work that is such a strain on the system. Oh, how my back used to ache from the bending over! I would feel as though I would have to scream out from the pain, and the sitting still made me so terribly tired and weak, and my head throbbed like an engine. I never could eat after work, I was so worn out. Then I was irregular, and had such frightful cramps every month they would simply double me up with pain, and I would have to give up working and lie down. But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound changed me into a strong, well woman. Yours very truly, MRS. MARTHA ESTES, 513 West 125th St., N. Y. City."

MORO TREATY ANNULLED

Rights Conferred by General Bates Declared Forfeited.

NATIVES FIGHT FOR SLAVERY

United States Troops Defeat Them and Capture Cannon and Ammunition—The Sultan of Sulu and His Subjects Commanded to Obey the Laws of the Philippine Commission.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of War Taft told the House Committee on Insular Affairs of a rebellion that has broken out among the Moros because of a proclamation issued by the Philippine Government abrogating the Sultan of Sulu treaty and prohibiting slavery. General Wade reported from Manila that a reconnoitring force east of Cottababo, Province of Moro, was attacked by a force of Moros, who rebelled against the anti-slavery law. General Wood telegraphed that the Moro position was shelled and the Moros were flanked and their outworks taken. Twenty-one old Spanish cannon and thirty-three Lantaka guns, besides large quantities of arms and ammunition were captured in the works, which were strong and well constructed. The Moro loss was considerable. There were no casualties on the American side.

In reporting this engagement to the House Committee, before which he appeared in the interest of the bill to provide for the more effective administration of civil government in the Philippines, Secretary Taft explained that some time ago he sent a cablegram to Governor Luke Wright, telling him to notify the Sultan of Sulu and the Dattos, who made a treaty with General Bates on August 20, 1899, that the treaty is abrogated and annulled, and that the Sultan and his Dattos have forfeited the annuities which were to be paid them under the treaty, and that they must henceforth obey the laws of the Philippine Government. Secretary Taft took the position that the Sultan of Sulu treaty was a mere modus vivendi, and that it has not been complied with by the Sultan of Sulu.

Before Secretary Taft entered upon the duties of Secretary of War Secretary Root directed the Philippine Commission to take up the subject of legislation for the Moros and submit it to Washington for approval. The object was to do away with polygamy and slavery and introduce a form of trustworthy government in the Moro country.

As the Moros are Mohammedans, there is more than ordinary difficulty in governing them. It has been said that our success thus far has been due to an understanding with the Porte under which the pilgrims to Mecca have been influenced every year to go home and counsel good will toward the United States.

UNION MEN BANISHED.

Telluride Citizens' Alliance Gets Rid of Trouble Makers.

Telluride, Col.—Between sixty and seventy-five members of the Telluride Miners' Union and sympathizers who were recently deported, but who returned when the militia were called away, were forcibly taken from their homes and boarding houses by 100 armed members of the Citizens' Alliance. They were then put aboard a specially chartered train and deported to Ridgway.

The men were warned individually and collectively after they were forced into the two cars of the train never to return to Telluride on pain of death. To make this warning more impressive the Alliance members fired a number of volleys at the departing train.

The decision to deport the unionists and their sympathizers was reached at a recent meeting of the Alliance. This meeting was largely attended. The strike situation was discussed and it was the consensus of opinion that something radical must be done. The running out of town of the union agitators and their sympathizers was finally suggested and promptly agreed to.

Loses in Vote on Amendment to Congregational Teaching Bill.

Paris, France.—The Government was defeated in the Chamber of Deputies in connection with the bill suppressing Congregational teaching. An amendment offered by M. Cailiaux extending the period of suppression from five to ten years was carried against the opposition of Prime Minister Combes.

The vote was 282 to 271. The stability of the Government does not appear to be affected.

Lincoln, Neb. — In the Lancaster County primaries practically every precinct declared for Representative E. J. Burkett for United States Senator to succeed Charles H. Dietrich.

Burkett has no opposition. The Republican State Convention, which meet here May 18, will select a Senatorial candidate.

IRISH DEFEAT BALFOUR

British Ministry Beaten in House of Commons by Eleven Votes.

Premier Declines to Accept Result as a Cause For Resignation—Coup Planned by Liberals.

London, England.—Mr. Balfour's government was defeated in the House of Commons by the combined Liberal and Nationalist vote. This reverse was due to the prohibition by Mr. Wyndham, Chief Secretary for Ireland, of the teaching of Gaelic in the junior grades of the Irish Nationalist schools. Mr. Balfour, though defeated by a majority of eleven on this question, does not regard the vote as one of want of confidence, and he will not resign on this account. This determination was strengthened by the fact that shortly after the foregoing defeat he was able to secure a majority of twenty-five.

On the question of Catholic education the Nationalists had previously voted with the Unionist government, but while so doing they were planning the downfall of the Conservatives. The mine so ingeniously laid was sprung with a success that thrilled the country. The strategy with which the attack was planned and the scenes which marked its culmination recalled the times when Gladstone and Parnell waged a titanic struggle in the same arena.

It is learned that the Premier regards it as one of the essential principles of his party to keep the reins of government, at least for the present. What he may do after Easter still remains in doubt. The blow administered makes the Premier's task of holding his party together doubly difficult, and many supporters of the Government frankly said that they favored an early dissolution of Parliament rather than again undergo the humiliation experienced.

By a curious coincidence the only other defeat suffered by the Unionist party since Lord Salisbury came into power, and which endangered the existence of the Government, occurred nearly eight years ago, on Sir Thomas Esmond's amendment to Gerald Balfour's Land Purchase bill, when it again fell to the lot of the present chief whip of the Irish party to declare the Government in a minority, which on that occasion was one of only four votes.

STRIKE RIOTS IN CHICAGO.

Drivers of American Can Company Stoned and Dragged From Wagons.

Chicago, Ill.—A series of riots occurred between striking employes of the American Can Company and union teamsters who had refused to quit work in sympathy with the strike. The first disturbance was in the North Side of the city at one of the stables of the Can Company, several men being injured and two pickets arrested.

Two pickets were doing duty in the neighborhood when six teamsters attempted to leave the stables with teams. The pickets by signals summoned about twenty helpers. The drivers were stoned and dragged from the wagons, the assailants escaping when a patrol wagon loaded with police arrived.

A second fight took place at the company's South Side barn. Escorted by police several wagons succeeded in getting half way to a railway freight house, followed by threatening crowds. At Twenty-sixth street and Wentworth avenue the police charged a mob that was showering missiles on the drivers. The wagons reached their destination after the police had captured four of the rioters.

STILL AFTER HEINZE.

Butte and Boston People Say He Got More Than $1,000,000 of Ore.

Butte, Mon.—Another charge of contempt of court was preferred against F. A. Heinze and some of his companies and officials before Judge Knowles, of the Federal Court, by the Butte and Boston and the Boston and Montana companies. It is alleged that the accused violated an injunction issued in 1898 on a portion of the Johnstown claim, and have taken out ore valued at $110,000.

The defendants have been cited to appear for trial in the near future. An application has also been made to make perpetual the order to inspect the Rarus and Michael Davitt workings, it being charged that further investigation has disclosed a continuous violation of the injunction in the Michael Davitt, and that the value of ore taken by Heinz amounts to more than $1,000,000.

TIME GRANTED MACHEN.

Machen and the Others Have Until April 23 to Docket Appeal.

Washington, D. C.—Justice Pritchard, in Criminal Court No. 1, granted counsel for August W. Machen, George E. Lorenz, Dilier B. Groff and Samuel A. Groff, convicted of conspiracy to defraud the United States in connection with the Postoffice Department investigation, until April 23 next to file their bill of exceptions and to docket their appeal in the Court of Appeals.

It is probable the appeal will not be heard until fall. None of the other Postoffice Department cases in which indictments have been reported will be tried prior to October.

SUBMARINE BOAT SUNK

"No. A 1" Run Down While Engaged in Mimic Warfare.

Eleven Persons, Including Lieutenant Mansergh, the Senior Officer, Drowned —First Mishap of the Kind Known.

Portsmouth, England. — One of the newest of the submarine vessels recently added to the British Navy, the No. A 1, was struck while maneuvring in seven fathoms of water by a big steamship and went to the bottom a wreck.

Eleven persons were drowned within her steel sides, one of the victims being Lieutenant Mansergh, the senior officer engaged in submarine work. Not one person on board was saved.

The vessel that ran her down was the Berwick Castle, a Donal Currie liner, to the officers of which no blame attaches, as her officers were unaware of the presence of the submarine in those waters, and there was nothing above water to indicate that it lay below.

The accident occurred half a mile off the Nab Lightship, at Bainbridge, Isle of Wight, where the submarine was engaged in maneuvres. She was far down under the water awaiting the approach of a British battleship, which, in the mimic war she was playing, she intended to torpedo.

The liner felt the impact of the collision, but the officers did not dream of the real nature of the obstruction they had struck. On arriving in port the official report was that the liner had hit a torpedo, presumably a harmless affair used by the fleet in its practice work.

The other submarines and torpedo-boat destroyers taking part in the maneuvres heard the report of the Berwick Castle, but the dreadful significance of it was not realized.

It was only after waiting for several hours in vain for the A 1 to reappear that suspicion was aroused. Finally the hull was detected in the water half a mile off the lightship. She was located by the breaking of the waves at that spot.

That the submarine rose to the surface just before being struck is probable, for the officers and men of the Berwick Castle say that they saw a glistening, torpedo-like hull in the water.

The No. A 1 was of the latest Holland (American) model, and while she had proved to be capable in most ways, she was regarded as a bad diver.

She was built at Barrow, was 100 feet long and had a displacement of 180 tons.

This is said to be the first mishap of the kind on record.

WOOD NOMINATION CONFIRMED.

Vote of the Senate, 45 to 16, Practically on Party Lines.

Washington, D. C.—The nomination of Brigadier-General Leonard Wood to be Major-General was confirmed by the Senate. The vote stood 45 to 16, and was on party lines, except that four Democrats, Messrs. Cockrell, Dubois, Pettus, and Patterson, voted for Wood, and two Republicans—Scott, of West Virginia, and Kittredge, of South Dakota—voted against him.

Mrs. Wood has made all arrangements to sail for the Philippines, and the Senators having her husband's interests at heart thought it would be a graceful thing to bring the confirmation about so that she might be relieved of all anxiety on this score as she sailed on the long voyage.

$1000 FOR TAR AND FEATHERS

Montpelier, Vt.—Claude R. George, a student at Montpelier Seminary, received a verdict of $1000 for the discomfort and injury which resulted from a coat of tar and feathers applied by James Howard. The verdict was returned against Howard alone. W. S. Fleury and Royce Marvin, the other defendants, having been declared not guilty.

The evidence showed that George had been hazed by half a dozen students on the night of Jan. 12, 1903. They broke into his room, and, after treating him roughly, administered a light coating of tar and feathers.

STORM DOES $50,000 DAMAGE.

Rain and Hail in New Orleans Wreck a Building—Many Stores Flooded.

New Orleans, La.—The worst hail storm ever known here, accompanied by lightning and a terrific downpour of rain, caused considerable damage in and around New Orleans.

The roof of the Southern Express Company collapsed under the weight of water and hailstones, wrecking the building, injuring four men and killing eight horses. In many of the retail stores the stocks were damaged from $500 to $5000 by the rain. The total damage exceeds $50,000. Much damage was done to fruit trees and young corn in the country.

Austin, Texas.—Fire swept over the Batson oil field, burning every derrick in the field, and more than 2,000,000 barrels of oil in storage was destroyed.

The Texas Company, of which John W. Gates owns a controlling interest, had more than 1,000,000 barrels of oil in storage in the Batson field, and this is reported to have been burned, entailing a loss of about $700,000.

WESTERN MAIL ROBBERIES

Operators in Two Big Raids Obtain More Than $50,000.

First Haul Made Near Poplar Bluff, Mo., Where Pouches Laden With Paper Worth $40,000 Were Taken.

Washington, D. C.—The Postoffice authorities are greatly concerned over the operations of a gang of mail pouch robbers now operating in the Middle West. Already the gang, in two daring thefts, obtained more than $50,000 in cash, drafts, money orders and checks.

The first successful haul was reported to the department on February 28. On the preceding night two mail pouches, probably containing registered matter, were stolen near Poplar Bluff, Mo. No trace of the thieves has been gleaned. The pouches were routed from Memphis to St. Louis, by way of Hoxie, Ark., where a transfer is made.

Postoffice inspectors who have been at work upon the case report that the pouches reached Poplar Bluff all right, but that no trace of them is obtainable after they left that point. Soon complaints of lost money orders and checks, drafts and currency, began to pour into the inspectors' office. It is now known that over $40,000 worth of loot was secured in that raid.

Hard upon the heels of the robbery at Poplar Bluffs came a report of a like robbery at New Lisbon, Wis. The gang operated in the same mysterious manner, the first intimation of the loss coming to the Washington authorities in the shape of complaints from the losers. Two pouches were abstracted, and they were the richest in the car. This last robbery is understood to have occurred a week ago. So far about $10,000 worth of currency and paper has been reported missing.

These are not the only robberies in which the gang has been concerned; but in other cases they missed connection and got comparatively little. It is believed that employes of the department are accomplices, abstracting the pouches while in transit and throwing them off the trains to confederates.

In ordinary mail robberies the offenses are committed on the same run, and the detectives are able to discover the thieves by a process of elimination. But this gang seems to choose a different route and a different section of the West.

Postoffice inspectors in Washington are reticent. Several of the best and keenest operators in the Secret Service of the department are now in Missouri and Wisconsin, closely scrutinizing all department employes connected with the railroad mails and the transfer service.

MAJOR BEAN SHOOTS HIMSELF.

Army Officer Who Conducted Cheap Food Experiments a Suicide.

Omaha, Neb.—After calling to his wife to play for him on the piano while he was preparing some baggage for his approaching departure for the Philippines, Major William H. Bean, chief commissiary for the Department of the Missouri, shot himself through the temple and died instantly.

"Play something with a go in it," he said; "something lively." She struck up a march, and in the middle of it the pistol shot startled the household. So far as can be ascertained the act was unpremeditated.

Major Bean was particularly distinguished for his successful efforts towards perfecteing the emergency army ration.

He was forty-three years of age, a graduate of West Point, and had been suffering from insomnia for several months. His body was sent to his old home at Chester, Pa., for interment.

22 LIVES LOST IN SHIP CRASH.

English Vessel is Sunk by a German Off Dublin Bay.

Dublin, Ireland.—The German bark Mona met in collision with the English ship Lady Cairns off Dublin Bay. The Lady Cairns sank in a few minutes. Her crew of twenty-two were drowned. The Mona, badly damaged, was assisted into Dublin harbor.

The Lady Cairns was a three-masted iron ship of 1186 tons, commanded by Captain T. Evans, and was bound from Liverpool for Timaru, New Zealand. She was built in Belfast in 1869 and was owned by L. Tulloch, of Swansea.

The Mona was commanded by Captain Schwarting and was last reported at Ardrossan.

HOSTILE MORO LEADER KILLED.

Last of the Irreconcilables in the Island of Jolo Shot on a Mountain.

Manila, P. I.—General Wood reports that the allied dattos in the island of Jolo drove the recalcitrant datto Pangliman Hassan, the last of the hostile Moro leaders, from the place where he had been hiding since his defeat, near Siet Lake. One of the dattos killed two of Hassan's sons.

A detachment under Major Hugh Scott of the Fourteenth Cavalry surrounded Hassan on a mountain and Hassan was killed. He was the promoter of the troubles in the island of Jolo.

Ten per cent. of the claims was the first of four installments to be paid. Further payments are planned as follows: June 12, 25 per cent.; Sept. 12, 25 per cent.; Dec. 12, 40 per cent.

Both Engineers Killed.

Ohio Postmaster Arrested.

Distinction of Birth in America and in Engla

ONE can hardly cast so much as a glance at the United Senate in session, and then at the English House of session, without recognizing the American elective body a far more intellectual aspect than the other assembl without further observing that nine-tenths of the visible in the British House is to be seen in the faces and for the Bench of Bishops, or the so-called Law Lords, who may have been of the humblest. Jackasses became such a nuisance in the district of Kaiu, on the island of Hawaii, that a round-up was recently held, with the result that five hundred of the animals were corralled. Then a public sale was held and the superfluous asses disposed of. It is said that the jackasses will be turned into canned beef.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

MARCH 28TH.

The senate for three hours discussed the recent order of the pension bureau making old age an evidence of disability, and then passed the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The discussion of the pension bill was based on the resolution offered some days ago by Mr. Carmack directing the committee on judiciary to inquire into the authority of the executive branch of the government to make such an order. Mr. Carmack contended that no such authority exists, but several republican senators argued that the order was in line with the regulation issued by Judge Lochren, commissioner of pensions under Mr. Cleveland, fixing 60 years of age as an evidence of infirmity.

Mr. Proctor presented a partial report on the army appropriation bill. He said that among the items disagreed to was that giving advanced rank to retired officers who had served in the civil war. He said that the house had accepted the senate provision for an increase in the engineer corps of the army, but that the senate had receded from its amendment for a three battalion regiment of native troops in Porto Rico. The report was accepted, and a further conference ordered.

MARCH 29TH.

The bill authorizing the erection of an additional executive department building in Washington was the subject of debate in the senate. It remained unacted upon. Senators divided largely on the question of location, but there was also talk as to the necessity of better office accommodations for the senate and the supreme court.

For the want of speakers, general debate on the sundry civil appropriation bill in the house was closed several hours before the time agreed on, and the bill was read for amendment. Seventy-five pages were disposed of, the only important amendment adopted being one providing for an initial appropriation of $500,000 for the completion of the capitol building, according to the original design by Thomas U. Walter. The total cost of the work is limited to $2,500,000.

The senate committee on postoffices amended the house provisions prohibiting rural free delivery carriers to act as agents for newspapers, so as to allow the carriers to receive subscriptions for and deliver newspapers upon the request of patrons residing upon the respective routes. On account of its incomplete state the exact amount of the increase made can not be given, though it is said the bill will carry not more than $1,000,000 over the bill as passed by the house, except for an emergency measure incorporated in the bill. The house bill provides for the rental of the Pennsylvania railroad site in New York city for postoffice purposes, but the committee decided that it would be better business policy to buy the site. Therefore, an appropriation of $2,000,000 is made for that purpose.

The Last One.

Both houses of the legislature have passed a bill authorizing the payment by the state of New York of a pension of $72 per month to Hiram Cronk, the last American survivor of the war of 1812. Both the republicans and democrats supported the bill for a pension and the sum of $72 was agreed to after a state senator had declared that Cronk was in want.

Heavy guards are kept at the vatican. A plot is reported to have been discovered against the life of the pope.

Acting Postmaster General Wynne has issued an order allowing ten days' leave of absence to all postmasters of second and third class postoffices who want to attend the convention of the national postmasters of the second and third class postoffices, to be held in St. Louis May 15th next.

GEN. PAYNE DEAD.

Was Leader of the Famous Black Horse Cavalry.

William H. Payne, counsel for the Southern railway, a distinguished confederate officer and commander of the famous "Black Horse" cavalry at the first battle of Bull Run, died at Washington, Tuesday, aged 73 years. His death was due to general breakdown.

General Payne lived at Warrenton, Va., and practiced law in the Virginia courts for many years. He organized and was the first captain of the Black Horse cavalry, was colonel of the Fourth Virginia cavalry and became a brigadier general in 1864, commanding a brigade under General Fitzhugh Lee.

STATES DISPUTE

Both Mississippi and Louisiana Claim Same Territory

Mississippi and Louisiana are playing for a large stake in the shape of territory, variously estimated to be worth from $200,000,000 to $10,000,000. This territory consists chiefly of oyster beds, which are said to be the largest and most valuable in the world.

Louisiana bases her chief claim to the territory in dispute on the ground that she was admitted to the union five years ahead of Mississippi, and as the coast lines of the two states as defined in the congression acts overlap each other, the prior claim must be the only valid one.

The act of congress admitting Louisiana as a state gave her all islands within three leagues of the coast. Mississippi was given all islands within six leagues of the coast when she was admitted to the union. The issue is very similar in its nature to the Alaskan-Canadian boundary dispute, with the exception that in the latter case the territory was estimated backward from the coast, and in the Mississippi-Louisiana dispute it is estimated seaward from the coast.

The old maps, charts, official records and documents dating back a century ago will be brought into the controversy when the taking of testimony is commenced at New Orleans on the 4th of April. The final hearing will take place before the United States supreme court in October or November.

Louisiana claims that in 1812 St. Bernard parish was a solid marsh stretching out to a point opposite the Mississippi coast, and was then, and is now a part of the Louisiana mainland; that it has been cut off from the mainland by storms and floods and with each season there have been changes in the aspect of the land. islands have been swallowed up, new islands built, etc. Mississippi claims that this territory has always been islands.

The facts in the controversy will be hard to prove, because the territory in dispute has never been inhabited and no authorized surveys or plats have ever been made. Much depends upon the traditions of the locality and the testimony of those who have been familiar for many years with the oyster reefs and fishing grounds.

CANAL ENJOINED.

Chicago Attorney Tries to Stop Further Construction at Panama.

Warren B. Wilson, a lawyer of Chicago, has filed in the district supreme court a bill in equity for an injunction against Secretary Shaw, the republic of Panama, the new Panama canal company of France and others to estop the construction of the Panama canal. He asks that Secretary Shaw be enjoined from permitting the payment of any moneys under his control under the pretended authority of the void act of June 28, 1902, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacifics oceans." He avers that there is no appropriation by law of any money for the payment of any of the construction expenses, and declares the act of June 28th, 1902, is in violation of the constitution of the United States and is null and void. He charges the treaty is wholly unconstitutional and invalid, both in the United States and in Panama, in its essential features and confers no rights and imposes no obligations upon either of the parties directly concerned. Mr. Wilson charges that even if the act was valid its terms and conditions have not been complied with and do not authorize the proposed payments, which will, therefore, he alleges, violate the constitution.

Uniontown is to have a new hotel.

The damage to farming interests of Mississippi by frost Monday night will aggregate many thousand dollars in the truck farming belt. The prospects of a full crop are reduced 50 per cent. The damage to strawberries, beans and tomatoes is especially severe. The destruction around Jackson, Miss., was almost total.

To Treat the Lungs.

A Breslau surgeon is expected to make at this week's annual German surgical congress the first announcement of an invention providing for the exposure of the human lungs for operative purposes.

Experts already acquainted with the process say the invention will widely increase the range of chest surgery and operations. It consists of an air-tight cabinet, holding the patient and two operators, the patient's head protruding through an opening at the side. The principle involved is the reduction of the air pressure around the exposed lung so as to prevent its collapse.

LATEST WAR NEWS.

A report has been received that Chinese instigated by Japanese have murdered a Russian civil engineer and several workmen near Chansi.

A correspondent at New Chang cables that the Russians have ordered the American flag to be hauled down. The proclamation of martial law completely paralyzes the whole commerce of the port.

According to a letter received from the officer of the Russian gunboat Korietz, which was destroyed by the Japanese at Chemulpo, his ship technically fired the first shot of the war, but this shot was not fired until after the Japanese had fired three torpedoes in an effort to sink the Korietz.

The financial situation in many cities in Russia is fast becoming alarming. Most of the banks of Vladivostock have been closed on account of the scarcity of ready money, thus making it impossible to cash checks. The rise in the price of food is causing intense distress in many places. At Warsaw bread, potatoes and greens have been quadrupled in price. Pawnshops are crowded and many private ones are being forced to close, as all the ready money has been used up making loans. Charitable institutions in many cases are unable to relieve the distress among the poor. The same state of affairs prevails at other cities.

SECRETARY DEFENDS RULING

On Old Age Pension Increase.

The secretary of the interior sent to the senate a communication in response to Senator Overman's resolution directing the secretary to furnish the senate a copy of the order issued by the department enlarging the pension act of June 27, 1890, and amendments as to the disabilities of applicants for pensions, and to report by what amount the order will increase pensions annually.

In regard to the increase of pension appropriations needed to carry the order into effect, the secretary gives the estimate of the acting commissioner of pensions, made public with the order of March 15, 1904.

Secretary Hitchcock says:

"When it is understood that in the adjudications in this act, age has always been considered a factor with other disabilities, and when it is further considered that far more than ten years there has been an established rating (the maximum allowed by law), based solely on the age of 75 years and that for nearly seven years there has been an established rating (the minimum provided by law), based alone on the age of 65, it will be apparent how largely problematical must be an estimate of increase of expenditures under the order of March 15, 1904.

"The acting commissioner of pensions has given attentive consideration to the second paragraph of the resolution and by reference to his report it will be seen that he estimates the order of March 15, 1904, will result in an increased expenditure annually of $5,400,000."

Secretary Hitchcock's letter is accompanied by a letter from Acting Commissioner of Pensions Davenport, who says Commissioner Ware's order does not enlarge but simply construes the pension act of June 27, 1890, and its amendments.

CAPT. T. J. CORNWELL.
SECRETARY AND TREASURER

A declaration of incorporation has been filed by the Merchants' Insurance and Loan Company, of Bessemer. The capital stock is fixed at $10,000, divided into 200 shares. The officers of the company are O. W. Wilson, president; Sam Lefkovitch and T. J. Cornwell, secretary and treasurer. Other incorporators are J. Marks, Sam Erlick, J. Jaffe, W. A. Simmons, E. A. Little and W. T. Kennedy.

A Gurley citizen gave as collateral for a loan some kegs of liquor. Under the law this constitutes a charge of wholesaling. The man was ignorant of this fact and very much surprised when arrested.

Two white men have been arrested on the charge of robbing the postoffice at Victoria, Miss., Friday last.

Publicly Whipped.

Paint Rock experienced quite a sensation when Mrs. Willie A. Phillips severely whipped Dr. James M. Lowe with a buggy whip, which occurred on the most prominent street of the town.

The episode is the culmination of ill-feeling that was brought about by the marriage of the former's fourteen-year-old daughter last week to a prominent young man of the town. Dr. Lowe being a justice of the peace, performed the ceremony, and the irate mother chose this method of revenge.

One hundred and fifty killings have occurred in Mississippi thus far during 1904.

SON SHOOTS FATHER

Ft. Payne Boy Takes Revenge for Whipping.

Deputy Sheriff Cole, at Battelle, was killed Monday morning by his 10-year-old son. The boy had been fighting and his father whipped him for it. The child afterwards stole his father's pistol and blew his father's head off.

Another Near Tuscaloosa.

A report comes from Duncanville of a shooting which occurred last week, the victim being W. P. Curry, who was shot by Harold Curry, his eldest son, who is about 23 years of age. Curry is a very prominent farmer, he and his son being both well known in Tuscaloosa.

It is said by some that young Curry went into his father's room and without a word shot him and walked away, while others state that the father was under the influence of liquor and was very cruel to his wife, the treatment going beyond the endurance of the son.

ALABAMIANS CALLED.

Witnesses Against L. C. Harding at Tampa, Fla.

L. C. Harding, who was recently wanted by the Alabama authorities for obtaining money by fraud from several banks in that state and whom Governor Jennings, of Florida, refused to surrender upon the requisition of the governor of Alabama, is in jail at Tampa, Fla., on a charge of using the mails for fraudulent purposes. He is to have a hearing Saturday, and in order to secure evidence that will hold him the United States district attorney filed in the federal court a petition for witnesses to be summoned from Alabama.

The petition was granted and the subpoenaes have been issued and forwarded to the federal authorities in Alabama.

Harding will make a desperate legal fight to keep from being sent back to Alabama for trial, for he realizes that if he is not convicted in the federal court he will be tried in the state court of Alabama. When Harding was first arrested in Brooksville it was learned that he had an arrangement with the station agent and trainmen to notify him when any strangers came to town. He was constantly on the lookout for the authorities and it was only by pretending to be a land buyer that a deputy marshal finally got into the town without Harding being given the tip.

Asked $60,000; Awarded $400.

Damages in the amount of $400 was allowed J. W. Galliher, plaintiff in a suit against the Labor Review and others in the Anniston city court. The suit was originally for $60,000.

The cause of the suit was that the name of Mr. Galliher was published on the alleged unfair list of the carpenters' union. The newspaper was a weekly published there by T. J. Lamar and his brother, Charles Lamar. It ceased publication about three months ago. An appeal will be taken.

DAUGHTER'S DEVOTION

Killed Her—Mother Died Five Hours Later.

Although weak and faint from an operation, and in a dying condition, Miss Emma Dorsey, a young lady 19 years old, got up yesterday afternoon and dragged herself to the telephone to summons a physician to the bedside of her dying mother. In an hour this young girl had passed to the great beyond, and her mother followed.

Open Grate Again.

At Northport, Ala., Mrs. Walker Smith died Sunday night from the effects of a burn received Saturday afternoon. She was sitting by an open grate reading a newspaper and fell asleep. It seems that the paper caught fire and when she awoke her clothes were all aflame.

William Z. Mead, former Birmingham agent for the National Life Insurance Company, of Montpelier, Vt., has been arrested and jailed at New Orleans to answer the charge filed by T. C. Thompson, Chattanooga agent of the company, of having appropriated $1,200 of the company's funds while acting as its agent several months ago.

A suit against the Southern railway company for $15,000 damages has been filed by an insurance company which suffered loss by the recent fire at the Magnolia compress in Mobile. The insurance company claims the fire was caused by sparks from a locomotive of the railroad company.

New Industries.

The review of industrial progress in the south for the first quarter of the present year ending with the month of March shows a total of 1,346 new industries reported from the southern states. This is an increase of forty-nine over the last quarter of the year 1903, and an increase of sixty-nine over the first quarter of last year. The review for the quarter just ended shows that 261 woodworking industries were established, that line of industry leading all others in point of numbers. Next in importance are natural gas and oil companies, of which ninety-three new ones were organized during the quarter. There were sixty-one new telephone companies, sixty ice and cold storage plants, fifty-two electric light and power plants, forty-six cotton and woolen mills, forty-five compresses and gins, thirty-four iron working plants, thirty-three oil mills and refineries and thirty water works plants.

Frost Needles.

Reports from fruit growing sections of north Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee adjacent to Chattanooga are to the effect that the promised immense peach crop is safe. Its safety means from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 to the fruit growers of the section. From only one source, Rhea county, Tennessee, has the peach and pear crop been reported killed by Monday's cold snap. The loss there will reach probably $150,000.

Central Texas was visited by frost at many points Monday night. Fears are felt for cotton, which had been planted early in an effort to head off the boll weevil, thousands of acres having been sown. It is also thought that much tender garden truck was injured, but the fruit is believed to be safe.

Georgia's First Newspaper.

The first newspaper ever published in this State was the Georgia Gazette, a quaint four-page affair printed in Savannah more than a hundred years ago.

Two copies of this ancient periodical were left at the Constitution office by W. H. Sharp, of McKenzie, Tenn., who owns the relics.

Aside from their curious crudity, aside from the solemn interest attaching to them as the handiwork of men dead for generations, these two yellow and faded papers are replete with a personal interest, for many of the persons spoken of in the news and advertising columns were the ancestors of men and women who play a prominent part in the affairs of to-day, here, in Savannah, and elsewhere in the State.

The publishers of the Gazatte were James and Nicholas Johnston, and their printing office was in Broughton street. There is living now one who is probably a descendant of one of these old editors, and he is Captain James Johnston, now a resident of Savannah.

The Gazette in size is probably about one-third that of a modern newspaper, and its pages are divided into three columns each, the type used in the news articles being very fine and of the old English style. There are remarkably few typographical errors, and an interesting absence of headlines, the megaphones by which newspapers now call attention to the matter they contain.

How primitive were the means of gathering news in those days is exemplified in a striking way in one of the two copies sent to this office. It occurs in the copy bearing date Thursday, May 9, 1793, No. 537 of the paper. The item, which occupies the centre of the front page, is printed in the the tiniest of type, and reads in part as follows:

"Madrid, February 7.—The following is an extract from the Madrid Gazette of the 5th instant, which officially announces the death of the King of France:

"'His Majesty has ordered the court to take mourning for three months from the 3d instant on account of the death of his most Christian Majesty, Louis XVI., King of France, who finished his career on the 21st of January, with a heroism equal to his hard misfortune, and to the inhumanity of the horrid and unheard of outrages committed against his august person.'"

Thus it was that in May the only newspaper in Georgia informed the people of the execution of the King of France, an event which was to change the history of all the world, and which, had it occurred at noon yesterday, would have been read in "extras" by the people of Atlanta the same day.

Lying next to this item concerning the late beheaded King is a formal protest from "the Grand Jury of the Circuit Court," which body asserts in stately terms that "The State of Georgia now lies under the greatest grievance a State can lie under," for the Creek Indians have been permitted to commit depredations on our frontier without being forced to make reparation. A recital of the grievance in detail follows this prefatory statement.

But within, on the two middle pages, are found those things to attract the lover of history with a personal bearing. These are the advertisements and personal notices which cover these two pages.

In oh of these Poulain du Bignon declares that his partnership with others in the ownership of the island of Sapelo, a part of which he purchased while yet in France, has been dissolved. This Poulain du Bignon was the great-grandfather of Fleming du Bignon, and the property named in the advertisement of the old founder of the family in America remained in the name of the Du Bignon owners until very recent years, when it was sold by a cousin of Fleming du Bignon, who had acquired the whole title. It was purchased for the use of a yacht club.

Richard Wayne, who was himself one of the most distinguished Georgians of his day, and whose descendants also achieved distinction, advertises that he will no longer import dry goods, but will confine himself from then on to the factorage and commission business; also that he has eleven negroes and some hogsheads of fine brandy for sale.

There is also a petition for the foreclosure of a mortgage, the petitioner being John Bulloch, an ancestor of President Roosevelt's mother.

George Houstoun offers a "settled plantation" for sale. He was the founder of one of the early members of a leading Georgia family, members of which still rank very high in Savannah.

Another plantation is offered for sale by Edwin and William Harden, whose advertisement is of interest by reason of the fact that one of the trio of Chatham County representatives in the Legislature is now William Harden. He is also librarian of the Savannah public library.

Francis Courvoise, Robert Forsyth and Louis Cuthbert, all familiar Georgia names, are among the other advertisers.

Jacob Waldburger announces that he is in want of an overseer. This Jacob Waldburger founded a handsome fortune, which, when his last descendant passed away just a few years ago, was distributed among charitable institutions and the Episcopal Church.

Another advertiser is Godin Guerard, and those familiar with the society happenings of the State will remember that quite recently a Godin Guerard, a descendant of the old advertiser, married a very popular and attractive young woman of Kentucky.

And so it goes all the way through the columns. There is scarcely a name mentioned that cannot be connected with some event in the history of Georgia or which name is not to-day borne by descendants of the same persons mentioned in the ancient paper.

Mr. Sharp, who owns the papers, thinks a great deal of them, and would be loath to part with them. They are, indeed, of considerable value as relics and curios.—Atlanta Constitution.

Stock-Raising in Alaska.

Stock raising is becoming an important Alaskan industry, and within a very few years it is probable that regular shipments of cattle for export will be made. The extensive areas of rich growths of grass and the absence of storms in the winter make many sections of the country ideal places for ranching. The winters of Alaska are more hospitable than those of the great plains of Wyoming, Montana and some parts of Nevada, and in the dead of winter horses and cattle can be worked without fear of being frozen. The temperature frequently is very cold, but there are no storms.

Several large stock growers of Washington State are planning to convert the Aleutian Islands into vast cattle and sheep ranges, which will surpass in extent the rapidly diminishing ranges of Montana and Texas. One company has begun the shipment of 25,000 sheep and 5000 head of cattle to the Aleutians, a first consignment of 8000 head of sheep having recently been sent from San Francisco. The company had demonstrated previously that sheep will thrive there, living throughout the winter solely on the grass of the islands, by having landed 1000 head there about a year and a half ago.

Cheaper to Die.

In the north of Yorkshire an old couple lived on their farm entirely alone. The good man had been ill for some time, when the practitioner who attended him advised that a physician should be summoned from the nearest town for consultation. The doctor came, looked into the case, gave his opinion, and descending from the sick room to the kitchen, was there accosted by the old woman saying:

"Well, doctor, what's your charge?"

"My fee is a guinea."

"A guinea, doctor! a guinea! And if ye come again will it be another guinea?"

"Yes."

"A guinea, doctor? bless me!"

The old woman then went upstairs to her husband's bedroom, and the doctor, who waited below, heard her say:

"He charges a guinea. And if he comes again, it'll be another guinea. Now, what do you say?"

The feeble voice of the sick man was lost on the doctor, but there was no mistaking the energetic tones of his wife as she answered:

"If I were ye I'd say no, like a true Yorkshire lad, and I'd die first!"—Tit-Bits.

How to Spend a Million.

I have often heard people speculate how such and such a millionaire can possibly spend his income, said a well-known art critic to a writer in London Tit-Bits. Personally, if I had a million a year I should find it the simplest matter in the world to get through every penny of it and yet live in my present simple style. Why, I could get rid of it comfortably in a month in cultivating a single hobby—collecting pictures and bric-a-brac.

There are heaps of pictures which you might cover twenty deep with sovereigns and yet not produce enough gold to buy them, and you can see some of them any day by walking into the National Gallery. Take that modest-looking little canvas, Terburg's "Peace of Munster." There is less than three square feet of it, but, if you would buy it, every square foot would cost you £3500 ($17,500). Then there is Corregio's "Vierge au Panier," an exquisite little painting, certainly, but you would probably cease to covet it if you were told that nothing less than thirty layers of sovereigns, covering every square inch of it, would make it yours.

Saving Westminster Abbey.

The decayed stonework of the chapter house of Westminster Abbey has been treated with complete success by Professor Church. The thirteenth century work of the chapter house was mainly executed in an inferior kind of sandstone, which was rather porous and fragile. It was found that the decay was due to the failure of particles of stone to adhere, the mischief in many places going to the depth of two or three inches. This was due to the effect of the sulphuric acid in the London atmosphere.

Professor Church found that repeated sprayings with baryta water reconstituted the stone and repeated sprayings and painting hardened it from the back and not merely at the surface. No appreciable consolidating effect was produced on the worst portions of the surface until it had been sprayed at least four times, while the deeper parts were found to have been already hardened. The stone thus reconstituted is little susceptible to the London atmosphere.—New York Sun.

A $40,000 PICTURE SAVED

TRANSFERRED FROM A CRACKING PANEL TO CANVAS.

The Face of the Secretary of State's Botticelli Madonna Imbedded in Tissue Paper and the Inch Thick Wooden Back Sandpapered Off—The Layer of Paint Then Transferred Uninjured to Canvas.

A Botticelli "Madonna," said to be worth $40,000, but not for sale at any price, has been saved to Mr. Hay, the secretary of state, by a resort to a delicate operation that required persistent work and the most scrupulous care and watchfulness for a year, writes the Washington correspondent of the New York Sun. Another painting belonging to Mr. Hay, less valuable, perhaps, only in that some doubt has been expreased by experts as to whether it was the work of Botticelli or his famous master, Fra Lippo Lippi, the Carmelite, has been saved also through similar efforts. If the cost of this work were added to the worth of the two paintings their value would be increased greatly.

Sandro Botticelli, the Florentine painter, died very early in the sixteenth century, so that the $40,000 work which Mr. Hay possesses is at least 400 years old. Lippo Lippi died in 1468. Both works are panels, and it was through the cracking of the wood, due partly to age and partly to the effects of the extremely variable climate of this part of the country, that the destruction of these magnificent products of art, each worth a prince's ransom, was threatened.

The panel known to be a Botticelli original is a Madonna in profile, the figure full length, surrounded by a host of cherubims. This was a favorite study of Botticelli, and Mr. Hay's gem has all the color which made the Florentine master stand alone among his competitors. The panel hung for years upon the wall of the main stairway in Mr. Hay's Washington residence, facing the spacious entrance hall.

The other panel, a smaller Madonna, developed cracks from the reverse side that threatened to increase and in time break through the painting itself, thus destroying its beauty and making it, from the standpoint of art, at least, a total loss. Slight cracks were observed, also, in the larger painting, and Mr. Hay, after careful inquiry, resolved, in the hope of saving both masterpieces, to resort to the delicate operation necessary to insure preservation, which he had been informed could be done by a man in New York.

Mr. Hay made arrangements with the New Yorker to undertake the work, but before it was begun the artist died, and Mr. Hay was obliged to look elsewhere for a person acquainted with the process, which had been originated in Europe and successfully applied to the preservation of panel paintings of some of the old masters. He ultimately found the right man, whose studio was also in New York, and to him was intrusted the work.

As the smaller panel was in a greater state of deterioration, one of the cracks having in fact extended all the way through from back to front, until the painting itself was effected, the workman began his delicate commission on it first and, meeting with success, started upon the larger and more valuable subject. The object of the operator was completely to separate the painting proper, that is the paint itself, from the wood upon which it had been placed 400 years ago, without in any way injuring or permitting it to be scratched, rubbed, cracked or bent.

To shave off the paint without injuring the picture was manifestly impossible, for the thin sheet of pigment would have broken of its own weight if once lifted from the backing. It was, therefore, necessary to attack the backing itself, working from the reverse side downward through the wood until the underconting of the paint was reached. How this was done is an interesting story.

Over the painted surface were placed hundreds of tiny slips of the thinnest tissue paper, these being held to the paint by a watery paste with just enough adhesive power to make the tissue stick. The slips of the first layer of tissue were pressed down and worked so as to conform correctly to what may be called the paint wrinkles, for Botticelli knew the art of making his pigment stand out in relief ridges to accentuate certain lines. More slips of paper, hundreds of them, were pasted over the first layer, and the fingers and thumbs of the operator moided them into and over the reliefs and the depressions which the foundation slips had followed. Then more slips, then larger sheets of the tissue, a great thickness of them, each carefully placed, pasted and worked over. This done, the panel was lifted, reversed and the matrix of tissue placed upon a prepared foundation of more sheets of the same thin material.

The really important and delicate work was now begun. This was the removal of the wood from the sheet of paint. The operation was performed almost entirely by the use of sandpaper, and to make one understand how tedious was the undertaking it is only necessary to say that the panel was nearly an inch thick.

Months of effort brought the operator near to the paint and the most scrupulous care had then to be exercised. As the wood was reduced the polishing away process became slower. Finally only the thinnest possible sheet of wood, thinner even than the paint adhering to its under side, remained.

Here came the crucial test. A too vigorous rub, a slip of the hand, a failure to perceive instantly the first appearance of the paint and coating, might have proved fatal to the valuable masterpiece which it was desired to preserve. But care, patience, keen eyesight and steady nerve won the day, and the last vestige of wood was resolved into powder, leaving only a thin layer of paint lying in a bed of tissue paper.

To have attempted to lift the tissue matrix would probably have been fatal to the painting. It was therefore necessary to secure it to a firm surface before it could be moved. After smearing it carefully with some adhesive substance, the operator laid on a backing of heavy stiff linen canvas, and the picture, matrix and all, was placed away to dry in a room kept at an even temperature. This drying process took a long time.

When it was regarded as safe to move the painting, it was again turned over, the canvas backing being underneath. The removal of the tissue paper was then begun, an easy task until the small slips adhering to the surface of the painting were reached. The parts of these slips not pasted to the paint were removed without difficulty, but it was a long and tedious operation, requiring patience and a gentle touch, to take away the rest.

The painting was found to be unharmed by the operation to which it had been subjected. The colors had been preserved and there was no rubbing away or searing of the paint. A coat of varnish was then applied, and when this was thoroughly dried the Botticelli masterpiece was shipped to Mr. Hay in Washington.

In the dining room of the secretary of state's residence is a great open fireplace. The larger Madonna has been imbedded in the wall over this, protected by heavy plate glass and with a frame of dull gold that seems to be part of the wall's moulding. It is there to stay. The smaller painting, now also saved from destruction, has been placed elsewhere in the house.

A THIRTEEN-YEAR-OLD TEACHER.

He Larruped One of his Pupils Who Was Twice His Weight.

The youngest pedagogue in Missouri, and perhaps in the United States, is teaching a country school near Gainesville, in the Ozark mountains. He is Glenn Harrison, aged 13 years. Glenn is the oldest son of Guy T. Harrison, a lawyer.

He completed the course of study of the Gainesville public schools in March, 1902. The same month he took the examination given candidates for third grade teachers' certificates in Ozark county, making a good average and securing a certificate. He continued to study, and just after he became 13 years old he took the examination for a second grade certificate. This time his average grade was the highest made, being 96 per cent. Mr. Harrison believed his promising son was too young to teach and refused to let him accept several offers. But one day when his father was absent attending court, Glenn took the job of teacher of a rural district, the directors of which came and offered him the place. He began work before his father returned, and the later, finding him so ambitious, decided not to interfere.

Glenn now has 29 pupils. The majority are larger and older than he, but he maintains a degree of discipline which many older and more experienced teachers may well envy. "How are you getting along, Glenn?" asked his mother one day, when he came home at the end of a week's work. "I had to whip several of the boys," the youngster replied. It turned out that among others he had larruped an obstreperous youth that weighed 180 pounds. Glenn doesn't weigh much more than half that.—Kansas City Journal.

Deep sorrow for a dead dog was shown in Wichita, Kan. It was a setter, and for years had accompanied the owner on hunting expeditions. The animal died, and was buried in an expensive coffin, with a satin pillow on which to rest its heard, and the coffin was covered with flowers.

Two detectives at Minneapolis, Minn., were getting shaved in a barber shop recently, and when their faces had been nicely lathered they saw a man come into the shop whom they needed badly in their business. Both ran out of the shop and all around the streets with the soap on their faces before they finally landed their man.

The Little Dreamer.

A little boy was dreaming
Upon his nurse's lap,
That the pins fell out of all the stars
And the stars fell into his cap.

So, when his dream was over,
What should that little boy do?
Why, he went and looked inside his cap,
And found it wasn't true.

Jolly and Helpful.

Here is a bit of work that will strengthen the muscles involved. The two opponents may be designated as number one and number two. Number one should stand in front of number two, with his back to the latter, taking number two's right arm over his shoulder and seizing number two's right wrist in the encircling grasp of his own right hand. Number two should make the same kind of clasp around number one's left wrist with his own left hand, holding the latter's wrist at the side. When this position has been taken, let number one sway slowly around to the left, number two making just enough resistance as will not altogether prevent the twisting of both bodies.

After three exercises in this position, the two boys should change places and then again twist in the same fashion to the left. A breathing spell should now follow. Then the original number one may again take position in front of his adversary, but with the other's left arm drawn over his shoulder with the hand-encircling clasp and with his adversary's right hand encircling his right wrist at the side. The twist should now be to the right, and should be firmly enough resisted by number two as almost to prevent the success of the twist. After this numbers one and two may again change positions, but remember that whichever contestant is in front of the other should be allowed gradually to obtain the victory, though not without fair resistance on the part of number two.—H. Irving Hancock in St. Nicholas Magazine.

Digging Out a Fox.

Mr. Ernest Harold Baynes, the naturalist, gives the Woman's Home Companion an exciting account of how he captured a fox. He says: "We suddenly came upon 'Diana' (the foxhound) buried deep to her shoulders in the mouth of a burrow, in front of which there was at least a wagon-load of sand. Across this heap of sand ran several lines of footprints, which resembled those of a rather small dog, but which we knew to have been made by the foxes which lived in the burrow behind it.

We first cut a straight stick about ten feet long, and stuck it into the burrow to get the general direction. We found it ran northwest as far as we could reach; so measuring off ten feet in that direction, we started to dig a pit about four feet in diameter. When we came to the tunnel we again thrust the stick, and proceeded as before. After several hours of digging we heard a feeble whining sound, and we knew we had not much further to go. The burrow had been winding, and we were now 45 feet from the mouth of the den, and the pit we stood in was more than six feet deep. The burrow took another turn at this point, and putting my hand around the corner, I drew from a hollow in the earth a little ball of soft gray fur—a baby fox—'The Sprite' himself. Again putting in my hand, I drew out two more balls of fur, and I handed the three to Mrs. Baynes, who was standing at the top of the pit. Two of the youngsters were still blind, and the third looked at us mildly out of the most inocent pair of blue eyes we had ever seen. From the mouth of a branch tunnel which extended toward the south I could hear some whines, which assured me that there were other young foxes in the burrow; but three were all I needed, and we left the others for the mother."

The Real Discoverers.

Uncle Robert had been explaining how messages could be sent back and forth between two far-apart places without any wires at all,—just telegraphed right through plain air! It was certainly very surprising! Morry and Paine went out on the doorsteps to talk it over.

"No, nothing but great tall poles at the places where you send them and get them,—the messages, I mean. You send them straight through nothing!"

"He said you set little waves moving in the air and they go all the way across to the other place."

"Yes," Uncle Robert's voice said. "And I really think the bunnies discovered it."

"Our bunnies?"

"No, not ours, but their great-great-great-grandfathers—oh, a great many greats!—way back to the first bunnie family that ever was. They were the ones that discovered wireless telegraphy. I think they ought to have the honor. If there's a splendid statue ever made, I think it ought to have a big cottontail bunney on top of it!"

"Oh," laughed both semall boys at once, "tell us why, Uncle Robert! My, a statue to bunnies!"

"Well, in the bunnie family, when there is any danger from an enemy,—and the poor little wild bunnies are surrounded by enemies on every side,—the different members of the family telegraph a warning to each other.

"'Run! There's an enemy coming!' they telegraph, and all the bunny boys and bunny girls and the grown-up bunnies that get the message go scurrying, hurrying into their holes. And you, they don't wait a minute. Such messages go a good many hundred feet sometimes."

"Through nothing, Uncle Robert? I mean air? Do they send them through the air?"

"No, through the ground. They stamp on the ground very hard with their strong little hind legs when they are arlarmed. And they do it on purpose to warn the rest of the family at a distance.

"'Run! Run! Run for your life!' The little message is carried through the ground much as our wireless messages are through the air. The sound-waves are set in motion one after another."

"Well," breathed Morry, "cousin Paine, let's go out and honor the discoverers' great-great-grandbunnies in our back yard!"—A. H. Donne, in Youth's Companion.

Jackie's Troubles.

It was a very comfortable Mother Rabbit had, carefully lined out the burrow and made it cozy with hay and dry leaves and linedit with fur from her own breast. Yet the bunny babies were not satisfied. "Too small," they said. "Our ears are always getting tangled up." But Mother Rabbit said, that was to be expected, as there were seven of them and each had four legs. Besides, she always made matters worse. "Don't so love to play tricks. "And can't a fellow help it." Jackie would say, "when his eyes are shut so tight he can't see a wink, I wish they would stay and open. I guess I'll rub them. That will be that will help." Rubbing, however, only made them sore, so he stopped it. Then one day they ventured by themselves, and he was into trouble indeed. But very soon he found one thing to grumble about.

"Don't like my fur," he said, "it's too thin."

"Do stop complaining," answered his mother. "A week ago you had no fur at all. It will be as thick as many time."

"Well, my legs won't get any longer anyhow," he went on. "Just see how My front ones are ever so much longer than my back ones. Why aren't they alike?"

"For shame!" cried his mother. "Everything suits you. How could your bits take long jumps if our legs were all the same size? You should see your father jump."

"Our father!" cried all the bunnies. "Have we a father?"

"To be sure you have," replied Mother Rabbit. "When you are a little older we will go out to see him." After that Mrs. Rabbitt had very little trouble. Jackie especially was always asking her questions.

"I suppose it is because he has a superior mind," she told herself. Nevertheless, it was very tiresome. At last came the important day when the children were to see their father for the first time. Their father was very proud when he saw them. He was a big rabbit, with long whiskers, and very wise in rabbit ways, so of course he learned many things from him. He showed them how to gnaw bark, and that their teeth, which were growing all the time, might not get too long.

"To-morrow I shall try all these things," Jackie decided. But alas! for the morning their mother came to them in great trouble. "My children," she said, "the reapers are out. They are coming nearer and nearer, and soon our home will be torn open and we ourselves killed perhaps. There is no time to talk," she went on, answering a question on Jackie's lips, "do just as I tell you. I will wait until the dreadful men are looking the other way. Then when I say 'run,' don't wait a second, but follow right after me. I know a good hiding place if we can only reach it."

Of course the little bunnies were terribly frightened. That is, all except Jackie. He was more anxious to find out what made the strange noises he heard. So when his mother, watching her chance cried "run," he went only a few steps beyond the burrow and there stopped. "I'll soon see what it is," he said to himself. But alas! then some one called:— "There goes bunny. Catch him, quick!" and before he had time to jump a hand was stretched and he found himself a prisoner.

Now indeed he regretted not obeying his mother. Oh, how good he would be if he could only get back to her once more! he thought, but struggle as he would, he could not get away. So with his heart beating wildly, he tried to resign himself to his fate. At last after what seemed a long, long time to unhappy Jackie, the voice said, "Poor little bunny, he does seem so miserable. I think I must let him go. I wonder if he can find his mother."

Jackie's heart leaped with joy. "Oh, yes, I will find her," he tried to say, "and oh, I'll be so good after this, so good!" Then, all at once, the terrible hands seemed to fall away from him, and for one delicious moment he could not move, so great was his happiness. In the next he had darted away just as straight as he could go for the thicket, where his unhappy mother watched and waited.

And how she fondled him! Smoothing out his roughened coat and rubbing her nose against his little wicked one. His brothers and sisters all gathered about him and told him how glad they were to have him back.

"Oh, mother, dear, I mean to be good," whispered Jackie, as his mother tucked him into bed that night. "I know," she, giving him a loving pat, answered:—"I believe you mean to, Jackie."—New York Herald.

Fashion in Handwriting.

There is a fashion in handwriting as there is a fashion in clothes, but, fortunately, the modes of calligraphy change with less weathercock facility than those of chiffons do. There is also a vast amount of character revelation in handwriting; so perhaps even if it became the vogue to alter the handwriting as often as the women would be unable to conform to the rule, says Home Chat.

But to return to the question of style, or fashion. The woman who writes what is called the Italian hand is almost died away with the old days in which the penny post had no existence and letter writing was a social art. We scribble now, whereas then twenty hours went further than they do now women produced workers in the art of calligraphy.

The gentle nurtured and carefully educated girl of the very earliest days wrote a sloping hand, formed her letters clearly and carefully, made very long tops and tails to those letters that require them, and took a pardonable pride in turning her up strokes with delicate fineness, falling off again to a fine, light finish.

She was very particular about the formation of her capital letters, using many a quaintly wonderful flourish, and she endeavored, as best she might, on her closely lined pages, to preserve an even line, employing sometimes ruled note paper, or using between paper a sheet of ruled paper, the lines of which gleamed through the top sheet and proved a guidance to her pen.

Many men of culture and refinement have also adopted the Italian style of handwriting. Those who have seen the signature of that great surgeon, Sir James Paget, will recollect the sloping character of the calligraph, the light and dark up and down strokes and the length of the looped letters. But in Sir James Paget's case, as in that of many other men of his marvellous intellectual power and unobstrusive modesty, flourishes of a pronounced type were absent.

Miss Braddon's handwriting tends toward the Italian style with pointed letters, well-defined tails, and a distinct difference between the up and down strokes.

It used to be cruelly said of women who wrote an ill-formed, undecipherable hand, that they were unable to spell; and of a truth in many cases this was undoubtedly so. In ancient days, of course, neither men nor women could be blamed for bad spelling, until the standard of orthography was settled, how was it possible for anybody to spell correctly? Still, there is no doubt that until girls were as carefully educated as their brothers, numbers of them did adopt a form of bad writing that left the spelling of words most questionable as regarded accuracy.

A Woman's Appearance.

There was a time when a woman seeking to look for a situation put on her oldest or poorest clothes either to excite sympathy or to demonstrate that she was very hard up indeed. But that has changed, and the woman who goes in search of work presents as good an appearance as possible, appreciating that it multiplies the chances odds to appear out at elbows and on the verge of poverty, says the New York Sun.

There are women who contend that to be well dressed is only within the range of a few. But there are others who have given the question considerable care, and they assert that it is within the power of all, provided the matter is approached from the standpoint of common sense. Failure is not to want of money, but to want of appreciation of merit or defect in it and to a certain slavish order of mind which leads to a blind following of fashion, without seriously considering whether it is the fashion for one's self or not.

Here of course lies the difference between the dressmaker and the artist in dress. The purses of many are not long enough for the demands of the latter, and therefore it is more incumbent on the majority to study closely the requirements of their own physiques, so that they may suggest to the dressmaker the want which is so costly in the hands of the artist merely, the knowledge of certain inviolable lines on which their clothing must be built, and to which the reigning fashion must inevitably give way. The pity of it all is that woman in pursuit of the beautiful in dress does not always study it from the real and object of it all—to preserve her personality in its most attractive grace—is common to the sex, but a refinement is reserved for the few. Possibly this arises from the fact that, though women may be fully alive to their attractions, they show a lamentable ignorance of their defects. Indeed, a full realization of both is indispensable to success in this important matter. For all-important though many rank it among the frivolities and possibly the snares

Hour Glasses For Children.

A clever mother recently gave hour glasses to her three children. They were timed to run out the end of an hour, half hour, and fifteen minutes, respectively. The little girl who before had dawdled through her piano practice, after watching the sands of time run out so visibly in her hour glass at once brought a new zest to her practice. The boys would thereafter time themselves on their evening "chores," and hurry back to see if they had been beaten by the hour glass, says the Pittsburg Leader.

It was a very good way of teaching them the value of time. If the experiment is tried, however, mothers must be careful not to allow their children to carry it to excess at first, and so grow weary of it as of a worn-out toy.

Health Means Beauty.

If you wish to be beautiful there are four rules you must follow. Here they are: Have plenty of exercise and fresh air, good food, sunshine and lots of sleep. This last is most necessary.

A hot bath and a few hours' sleep will do wonders to renew a youthful appearance.

Never eat or work if you are over tired. The digestive organs will surely refuse to do their task properly, and you will suffer the reaction.

It is always best to obey nature's laws just as strictly in regard to our complexion, as well as our lives.

Use tepid water to wash in, and if it is hard a little borax will soften it, as hard water is very bad for the skin.—
New York American.

Ingrowing Nails.

Despite the protests of many girls who are not yet converted, ingrowing toenails are invariably produced by pressure or a blow, says the Minneapolis Tribune. A shoe too narrow across the toe or tread of the foot, or insufficiently long for ease and comfort, though large enough elsewhere, either cramps or distorts the fore parts of the foot and toes or arrests the nails in their proper growth forward, forcing them back into the sensitive flesh at their roots and sides and causing them to grow in width and thickness only.

The results of tight shoes are not always immediate, but they are sure and very painful.

Comparing the late winter gowns with the few spring models on view, one sees little change in the general outline, or silhouette, as an artist would call it.

A charming dressing jacket of pure white crepe and Irish lace is made like a shawl. The sleeves are formed by the short points of the shawl, and a ribbon gathers in the fulness at the waist.

This season's velveteens have proven as durable and as satisfactory in all ways as the manufacturers promised, and it is to be hoped that fashion will allow them another season's vogue.

There is a craze for gowns where the waist is a tiny bolero, pelerine, or sailor collar of the skirt material over a blouse of thin material or lace.—It is a pretty, graceful fashion and furnishes a hint for making over gowns.

The cotton and silk mixtures continue to come in. Among them flecked tissue de soie, silk gauzes, satin lisse, and pointille cotton are familiar in name, but are much more beautiful this year than before.

The military jacket has taken remarkably well. Only fine broadcloth or the best quality of zibeline enters into its construction. There is a lavish use of braid in frogs, epaulets, and bindings. This short style is adapted only to slender, youthful figures, but on these it looks unusually smart.

Everything is to be tucked, we are informed, but the tucks are by no means to be the straight around or even up and down variety. Tucks in all sorts of circular and crescentshaped designs are presaged. Soft silks and pongees yield themselves to this sort of needlework manipulation.
Of course, it is all hand-done.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The average French man eats 428 pounds of bread a year.

Catarrh, bronchitis and various ear and nervous troubles are already recognized as effects of automobiling.

Over-fatigue is regarded by Dr. Burton-Fanning as the determining cause of ten per cent. of his cases of pulmonary consumption.

The self-lighting Bunsen burner of a German chemist depends upon the igniting effect of a pellet of palladium sponge, which is passed over the escaping gas as the tap is opened.

Fatigue of the eye in light of different colors has been studied in France by A. Broca and D. Sulzer. Light very rich in blue rays, such as that from the electric arc or powerful incandescent burners, proved injurious, the most desirable light being that from radiations near the middle of the spectrum.

The tree, Sapindus utilis, which is to be cultivated in Algeria as a source of natural scap, has a fruit about as large as a chestnut, with a dark-colored, oily kernel. A cutting from the tree reaches a height of six feet in two years, and attains maturity in six years, when it bears from 50 to 200 pounds of fruit.

WORK JUST AFTER EATING.

Tension of Mental Effort Following a Meal Sometimes Disastrous.

It has long been known that a man is not at his best for hard mental work directly after a hearty meal, but the real dangers of work under such conditions are perhaps hardly appreciated. The tension is increased not only in the arteries of the body, but also, in all probability, in those of the brain, and this makes it easy for a weakened point to give away.

We recently have had a striking instance of death from apoplexy occurring in a prominent physician while making an after-dinner speech, and the notable death of William Windom, a few years ago, under similar circumstances, will be remembered; and still other cases might be mentioned. The dangers from this cause have not been recognized, but when we remember that these public banquets involve a pretty hard ingestion of food and a consequent rise of blood presence, it need not be wondered at that sudden deaths from "apoplexy" during after-dinner speeches are often recorded.

Apoplexy is a well known possibility of mental strain; the weak point may be unknown to the subject himself and not revealed by any objective symptoms. The individual may have passed a life insurance examination successfully only a short time before, as is reported to have been the case with the physician referred to, but the special stress becomes too strong for some point of weakness, and the result is fatal. It is not work, whether mental or physical, that kills. Intellectual workers, as a rule, are among the longer lived, but special stress, under certain circumstances, such as post-convivial occasions, when the normal tendency to rise of blood pressure in the peripheral circulation is most marked, may be disastrous.—Journal of the American Medical Association.

A Wood-Eating Pest.

Occasionally an insect becomes such a pest that the government takes the case in hand with a view of exterminating it. This it what has happened to the powder-post beetle. Out in Iowa, where its ravages have been greatest, experiments are now being carried on to the end that the bug may be subdued. The powder-post beetle has an enormous appetite, and seemingly unlimited capacity for the various well-seasoned woods used in buildings, such as hickory, ash, and oak.

The little destroyer establishes himself, with a few thousand of his brothers, in a beam or joist, and chews away at it until only the outer shell remains, and that is apt to give way at any time with disastrous results.

The beetle is not of a new variety, for he has been known and dreaded some centuries, but he seems to be just awakening to full knowledge of his power, and the effect of his increased activity is not at all pleasing to the householders and builders of the west. So they have complained to Uncle Sam, who has undertaken his extermination. There is effectual and vigorous war being waged against him, but he has gained a very solid footing, and increases in number so rapidly that the government agents find it necessary to locate and burn joists, beams, and timbers infested by the little creature. As the treatment is destructive to the houses as is the pest Iowans are now wondering how they are the gainers.—New York Times.

A Wonderful Canon.

In preparing for the construction of a tunnel to irrigate the Uncompahgre valley in western Colorado, it became necessary to make a topographic survey of the bottom of the grand canon of the Gunnison river for a distance of about 1500 feet. But the walls of this canon, approximately 2000 feet in height, are sheer precipices, and it is impossible to go through in boats. A decent to the bottom was effected by means of a narrow fissure eroded in the granite cliffs, but in order to reach the opposite side of the river, with the aid of a similar fissure, the surveying party had to make a detour of about 150 miles. In all four extremely perilous descents were made to the bottom of the canon. In places it was necessary to let the men down over cliffs several hundred feet by means of ropes.

Egg Farci.

Cut hard boiled eggs in halves crosswise. Remove the yolks and put the whites aside in pairs. Mash the yolks through a seive; add an equal quantity of cold cooked chicken or veal (chopped fine); add a little melted butter; season to taste; add a little lemon juice, mustard and cayenne pepper. Fill the whites with the mixture and put them together.

Potato Gems.

To one cupful of warm mashed potatoes add one teaspoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of salt; beat the yolks of two eggs; add to them one cupful of milk; pour this upon one and one-half cupfuls of sifted flour and the mashed potato; add the beaten whites of the eggs, two and one-half level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; fill buttered gem pans two-thirds full and bake in a quick oven twenty minutes.

Rice Waffles.

To one cupful of boiled rice add one cupful of flour; beat one egg, add to it half a cupful of milk; pour this over the rice and flour and beat well; add one level tablespoonful of butter, melted, one level teaspoonful of baking powder and half a teaspoonful of salt; beat well and bake on a hot greased waffle iron. Sour milk may be used instead of sweet milk; in that case omit baking powder and use one level teaspoonful of baking soda.

Baked Potatoes.

Pare and cut four or five potatoes into thin slices, first dividing the potato lengthwise if large. Put the slices in a deep baking dish and over each layer sprinkle salt, pepper and flour and dot with bits of butter. When all are used pour on milk enough to cover the potatoes. Let them bake slowly, and twice during the process stir the brown skin that forms on top all through the potato. This is a convenient way when one has time for the long cooking; two hours will not harm them, and they need no attention at serving time.

Fruit Filling For Sandwiches.

Have ready the raisins seeded, the dates washed, dried and stoned, and some macaroons rolled fine. Chop the raisins and dates, and add if you like some of the canned apricots and cherries, also chopped fine. Allow about equal parts of each. When all chopped and mixed, moisten it with orange juice and the syrup from canned cherries, using about one-fourth cup for two cups of the fruit mixture. Remove the crust from thin slices of bread and cut into hearts, diamonds or other fancy shapes; spread quite thick with butter and then fill with the fruit mixture and put together.

A little flour sifted over suet will prevent the pieces sticking together while being chopped.

Mix plaster of paris with vinegar instead of water and you will find it excellent to stop the cracks in the wall.

To clean raisins roll in flour and then pick off all large stalks. If currants are washed they must be dried before added to cakes.

To keep cheese from getting mouldy wrap it in a cloth that has been dipped in vinegar and wrung out almost dry. Keep in a cool place.

When making pillows, if you wax the tick the feathers will not work through. To do this rub a very hot iron with beeswax and place it on the tick. Repeat till the whole thing has been covered.

Do not use bath brick or other gritty substance for cleaning taps, for it will get into the joints and cause needless wear and expense. A good polishing with oil alone will have excellent effect and can do no damage.

Lovers of cats should not forget to provide their pets with a little green food in winter. Lettuce leaves chopped in their food, or even celery tops, are relished by cats. It is a good plan also to keep a lot of grass or oats growing in the house for them to nibble at.

Because of the unporous quality of brown paper it is a good nonconductor of heat and cold, and in the absence of woolen blankets it serves the same purpose. Outing flannel or gingham can be lined with one or two layers and an excellent quilt made that will wear well and be a warm, comfortable covering.

Profits of a Sermon.

Queen Alexandra has just forwarded the Gordon Boys' Home and the British Home for Incurables $100, representing the profits derived during the year from the sale of Canon Fleming's sermon, "Recognition in Eternity." This sermon has reached a total profit of £1572, which has been distributed equally between the two charities.

A Moscow dentist has invented a system whereby false teeth can be made to grow into the gums as firmly as natural ones.

A London bootblack displays this sign in sight of his patrons: "If you like my work, tell your friends; if you don't like it, tell me."

When a newspaper or sheet of paper is seen attached to the window or balcony of a house in Mexico, it indicates that there are rooms to let in the house.

C. B. Hudson, who has been painting the fishes of Hawaiian waters, says that nearly all bottom sea fish have the power of changing color at will, like chameleons.

Charles Wetmore, of Winchester Centre, Conn., has a remarkable hen. It lays in a tree like any other bird and keeps Mr. Wetmore and his men busy hunting eggs.

In Prague there is a goose fair where 3,000,000 geese change hands. They are driven in from the country in the fall, and that they may travel with comfort their feet are encased in tar boots to preserve them from injury on the road.

A VANISHING ISLAND.

Falcon Isle Disappears and Reappears in an Astonishing Manner.

One of the most curious islands in the world is now known on the charts as Falcon Island. It is curious from the fact that it appears and reappears at intervals in the most exasperating manner, and has been doing this ever since 1888, when it was first taken possession of and charted.

This island is one of the Tonga group, and when in 1888 England took possession of it her officers found it crowned with palm trees and tropical vegetation. The highest bluff was some 153 feet above the sea level, and on this the Union Jack was planted. But only a year later the island had disappeared. The cliff was represented by a low-lying, dangerous reef, and there was not the remotest sign of vegetation. For thus making away with itself Falcon Island was speedily wiped off the charts.

But in 1892 a French man-of-war rediscovered it and duly planted the tri-color flag thereon. At that time Falcon Island afforded for the planting of the flagstaff a cliff twenty-five feet high at the southern end (the bluff mentioned above was at the northern end), and it was covered with a growth of green bushes and ferns. But Falcon Island did not behave any better with its new possessors than with England, for in April, 1894, it had again done the vanishing act, only a streak of reef remaining.

About a year later the Tongan Government took it in hand and went to find Falcon Island. They did find it with a vengeance, for when they arrived they found an island with bold, steep sides, the highest point being fifty feet above sea level. It was taken possession of it in the name of King George of Tonga and formed part of his possessions until in 1897, when it again disappeared—apparently for good that time, for since then, unless it has reappeared quite recently, it has not been heard of.

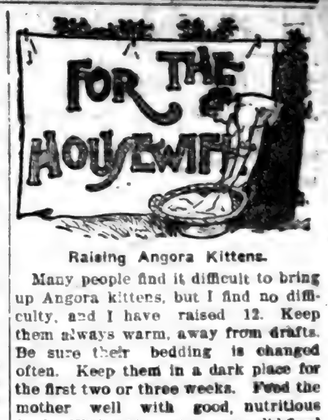
Falcon Island holds a unique record. Several islands have disappeared before now, and many of them have carried down thousands of people. But when they went down they stayed down, whereas Falcon Island bobs up and down and causes navigators to doubt their figures and wonder if visions are about.—New York Commercial.

Emperor of Japan's Pedigree.

The Emperor of Japan surpasses all sovereigns in the length of his pedigree. He is the one hundred and twenty-second member in direct, unbroken descent of his family who has sat on the throne of Japan. The founder of his house was, in Japanese legend, a goddess of the sun, and contemporary with Nebuchadnezzar, 666 years before the Christian era. On the other hand, the Romanoffs have been royal only since 1601, when they succeeded to the sovereignty of the then extinct house of Rurik. As for the other European rulers, King Edward can go back to Cedric, 495 A. D., the Hapsburgs to 952 A. D., and the Hohenzollerns to the eighth century, but as kings only to 1701.—London Chronicle.

Greatest Advertising Scheme.

The London Times has just closed up what is probably entitled to rank as the greatest advertising scheme ever undertaken by a newspaper. After devoting no less than $1,000,000 worth of advertising space to the sale of the Encyclopedia Britannica on the instalment plan, the undertaking has now ceased. Like all great ventures exploited by newspaper advertising, this one has yielded vast returns to all those who have had to do with it. And it deserves to be noted that the originator and chief promoter of the enterprise was a clerk in a Boston bookstore but a few years ago. This undertaking, and others like it, have yielded him a great fortune, and he is now the owner and occupant of a beautiful estate near London.



Raising Angora Kittens.

Many people find it difficult to bring up Angora kittens, but I find no difficulty, and I have raised 12. Keep them always warm, away from drafts. Be sure their bedding is changed often. Keep them in a dark place for the first two or three weeks. Feed the mother well with good, nutritious food. Withhold meat or any solid food for two days after the kittens arrive. Let the mother cat go out as often as possible for rest and fresh air.

When the kittens are three or four weeks old let them have a room to themselves, if you can, with various things to climb over, and a good warm bed in the corner. When they are about three weeks old teach them to lap milk. Give them warmed milk, one-third water, and a little sugar. Cut their first meat fine.

Never destroy all the kittens in a litter. Keep one, or the poor mother will have the dreaded milk fever.—Margaret L. Waite in Good Housekeeping.

To Make Washing Easy.

In answer to several inquiries for an easy method of doing the washing, I give the following, recommended by those who have tried it:

Into a half gallon of soft hot water, slice half a bar of any good soap, let dissolve, and remove from the stove; let cool a little, and into it stir half a teacupful of gasoline; fill a tub two-thirds full of soft, hot (not boiling) water, and into this pour the gasoline mixture, stirring well. Into this tub of water, put the cleanest and finest clothes, stir them about with the clothes stick, turning them over a few times, so that the water may come in contact with all soiled places; if not much soiled, no rubbing is required, rub a little, using no additional soap; but if any bad soiled spots show up, rub a little, using no additional soap; when they look quite clean, take them out through a wringer, into rinse water as hot as the hand will bear, rinse well, put them through the blue water, and hang on the line. On taking the finer clothes from the suds, put the next cleanest into the water and let soak while getting the others in line. A pounding stick, such as our mothers used, can then be used, pounding the clothes for about five minutes, which forces the water through the clothes, and is much easier done than scrubbing and rubbing with the hands. No boiling is necessary, if the suds are kept hot. For the much soiled clothes, the suds should be reheated, more water, soap and gasoline in above proportions added, and the rest of the clothing taken through this in the same way. Gasoline should not be used about the stove, but should be added to the dissolved soap away from the fire.

For washing black sateens, or dark colored calicoes, take wheat bran (two quarts to a dress), boil in soft water fifteen minutes, stirring all the time; let cool, strain, and use the water instead of soap suds; it removes dirt like soap, keeps the color, and no starching is necessary. Suds and rinsing water for such goods should be used merely warm—not hot.

To wash woolens dissolve a large tablespoonful of borax in a pint of boiling water. Mix one quarter of it in the cold water in which greasy woolens are to be washed; put in one piece at a time, using soap if needed, and if necessary, add more borax water; wash and rinse in cool water; shake well and dry quickly.—The Commoner.

Recipes.

Sauted Bananas—Remove the skins from the bananas; cut in halves crosswise, and saute in a frying pan in a little butter, dredging them with flour first; remove and sprinkle with powdered sugar; serve with half a cup of sugar warmed over the fire in one-fourth cupful of lemon juice and one teaspoonful of butter.

Meringue Sauce—Whip the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth; put three tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar and three tablespoonfuls of water over the fire; let cook until it will form a ball when dropped into cold water and rubbed between the fingers; pour this slowly over the whites of the eggs, beating rapidly; then beat over a cool part of the range for one minute; remove; add a little lemon juice or currant jelly.

Potato Puff—To one cupful of mashed potatoes stir in one tablespoonful of melted butter, beating until creamy; the more they are beaten the whiter and more creamy they will be; beat the whites of two eggs until stiff; add to the potato half a cup of cream, salt and pepper to season; then add the whites of the egg; turn into a buttered mould or dish and bake in a moderate oven 15 minutes; the potatoes will puff and be very light.

Wheatlet Jellied—Stir into one pint of boiling water three tablespoonfuls of wheatlet, stir constantly until it thickens; add one pint of milk, half a cup of seeded raisins, chopped; put the pan in another of boiling water, and cook half an hour; beat the yolks of two eggs until thick, add to them half a cupful of sugar and stir this into the first mixture; take from the fire, add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract; turn into small moulds and stand in a cool place; serve with cream or fruit juice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

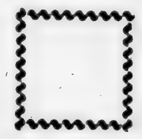
The Yellow Jacket, published biweekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

At the meeting of the populist executive committee of Chilton county on March 15, 1904, the following resolution was adopted by the committee:

"Be it resolved, That we, the people's party executive committee of Chilton county, do hereby indorse the UNION, a paper published in Clanton, Ala., as our official organ. tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?



NOTICE.

The Chilton County Farmers' Alliance will meet with the Collins Chapel Alliance on Thursday, April 7th, 1904. All old Alliance members especially invited. Each secretary of the sub-alliances will bring quarterly dues with them, also names of president and secretary.

TO OUR PATRONS.

With this issue THE UNION starts on its second year. We have done well, but we want to and can do still better. We are grateful to our people for their support, and shall continually strive to merit increased favor. Let every one of our subscribers send in an additional subscription; the UNION is "of the people, by the people, and for the people," so let our people take hold of it and "push it along." We have had to encounter a good deal of hostile criticism from those opposed to us politically, our detractors, among whom were Judge Adams, and the banner man said "it won't last three weeks." Of course, "their wish was father to their thought," but as we are still running along and increasing, why, it is safe to say that "they are neither prophets nor the sons of prophets," and their prediction as regards the UNION is about on a par with many others they have given voice to.

We are authorized by the register of the United States land office at Montgomery, the Hon. Robert Barber, to state that hereafter the UNION will be the official organ in Chilton county for the publication of such notices as have to be advertised from that office.

REGISTRARS TOOK OATH.

The board of registrars of Montgomery county yesterday took the oath of office and will begin today to transfer persons who have life certificates from other counties to the Montgomery county books and to strike off the names of those who have moved out of this county.—Montgomery Advertiser.

This should be done in Chilton county. The law was violated in the mayoralty election in Clanton on March 22d in that men were allowed to vote whose names were not on the registry book of this county.

SUCCESSFUL MERCHANTS.

In this issue appears a notice of removal of THE HARDWARE STORE of Clanton (Spigener & Jones) to larger quarters, where the immense and varied assortment of goods they handle can be seen to better advantage. It is pleasant to note the signal success this firm has scored in our town. This is the third building they have occupied, each removal being made necessary by the increase in their trade. Call on them and you will be sure to receive prompt and courteous attention.

The board to redistrict the schools of Chilton county was in session at Clanton the forepart of this week. The members are Professor J. W. Moon, Commissioner Alex Glasscock and County Surveyor R. F. Sims, and they have a difficult task before them to please everybody.

RIDERVILLE.

Editor Union—I was glad to be informed through your valuable paper as to the uniformity of our party. I am glad to see them so united and that they are going to select good, qualified men to fill the offices for us. For instance, Hon. L. H. Reynolds for probate judge is well qualified, has always been a good worker for the party and we feel sure he will have no opposition in beat 8. The democrats are of the past; let them go and stand apart, for we will beat them like a flash. We have plenty of good men to fill all our offices and we'll elect them all right. O. C. Y.

PROVIDENCE.

March 28, 1904.

Editor Union—I wish to say a few words, or rather to make a few suggestions in regard to candidates. I feel like it would be right for the old officials who have held office for so long a time to step down and hands off for this time and give room for other good and deserving men, as I feel we have plenty of new men to take the places of the old ones. As some others have made suggestions, I will make a few, as I have no ax to grind I feel free to speak. From what I can see at present, I can think of none better than L. H. Reynolds for probate judge. Rev. J. H. Thomas for tax collector. Yes, but Thomas is a preacher and it will ruin him as a minister to be tax collector. How many preachers have we ruined by putting them in office? Not one. The preachers that we've elected to office were all right as long as they stood with the people who elected them, but when they deserted their friends and joined the enemy, then they were ruined. The same thing would happen to Thomas if he should be elected and desert his friends. So enough along this line. For tax assessor, how about Professor Anderson? He is fully competent and is industrious enough to fill that position. For fear of taking too much space, I'll close, but may say more later. Success to the UNION and its people. W. H. SHAW.

MOVED.

We have moved our goods into the store recently vacated by Middleton, Chandler & Co., and wish to inform our customers that we will carry a larger and even more complete line of general HARDWARE than in the past, and are better prepared to supply your wants than before. Having received already a lot of SUMMER goods and expecting to add more to our stock we invite you to call on us for all hardware, feeling assured that you will be pleased, both in price and quality. Thanking you for your past liberal patronage and asking a continuance of the same, we are,

Yours very truly,
SPIGENER & JONES.

AN EXCURSION.

A number of our people went to Pensacola Saturday evening and spent Sunday there, visiting the war ships now at that port, returning to Clanton Monday morning. There were 111 tickets sold from Clanton office in all. A party of sixty, personally conducted by W. H. Sartor, had a coach all to themselves. In the party, among others, we noticed W. H. Sartor, E. M. Pinckard, N. A. Kicker, P. D. Wilson, J. P. Robinson, J. C. Jones, Drs. J. P. Hayes, P. I. Hopkins and A. B. Horn, J. P. Crumpton, C. R. Mullins, W. T. Callen and two sons, Professor J. W. Moore, R. L. Marcus, H. E. Culver, W. W. Gray, Joe Gray, Tom Littlejohn and E. T. Gullahorn. They all report having a good time, though some acknowledge to running short on sleep and food. The special coach was distinguished by a canvas banner bearing the weird device "WEER FROM CLANTON," which must have caused some wonderment among the inhabitants along the route as who "WEER" was.

FOR SALE.

760 acres of land, partly improved; also two sets mill rocks and fixtures. Alfred Popwell, Clanton, Alabama.

The painter Michetti, who designed the new Italian postage stamps, devised an ingenious detail for the two-centesimi stamps which are in honor of Marconi: a telegraph pole from which the wires hang down useless. All the stamps were made at the desire of the king, who had come to the conclusion that Italy's stamps were no better than those of France, England, and Germany, and did not reflect honor on a country known as the home of classical art.

King Edward of Great Britain enjoys the distinction among reigning sovereigns of being a member of the bar and would, in the event of his losing his crown, have a perfect right to don the white horsehair wig and gown of an English barrister and to practice law for a living. This fact, generally ignored, is recalled by his attendance the other night at one of the dinners at the Middle temple in London, not as a guest, but as one of the benchers; that is to say, as one of the governing body of the inn of court in question.

The literary taste of the editors of the Congressional Record is something shocking. Each day the prayers of the chaplain of the house are printed, but not one of Dr. Edward Everett Hale's petitions, has yet appeared. If published they would probably increase the circulation, suggests the Indianapolis Journal.

BURTON CONVICTED

In the Realto Grain Company Case.

Joseph Ralph Burton, senior United States senator from Kansas, was convicted by a jury in the United States district court on the charge of having accepted compensation to protect the interests of the Rialto Grain and Securities company of St. Louis before the postoffice department. The jury deliberated for forty-one hours.

For a time there threatened to be a disagreement in the jury.

A motion for a new trial was immediately filed by the counsel for the senator. Judge Adams thereupon ordered that Senator Burton appear in court either in person or by proxy at 10 o'clock from day to day until the court has heard the arguments for a new trial, and if decided against him to receive his punishment.

Senator Burton was indicted in January last. Although as a member of congress he could not be arrested until after that body had adjourned, he voluntarily surrendered himself to the prosecution authorities. He still had two years to serve in the senate. If the verdict is sustained Senator Burton will lose his seat in the senate and forever be prohibited from holding any office of public trust.

Senator Burton's recourse is an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals, which body is the final arbitrar in his case.

Members of the senate committee on privileges and elections have discussed informally the conviction of Senator Burton, but until the matter comes before the committee the members are loath to give their personal views. It will take a formal action by the senate to declare Burton's seat vacant and this will not be done until a court of last resort has passed upon it. Senators know of no precedents, as no convictions of senators are within recollection.

Peculiar Will.

Copies of a remarkable will left by Colonel C. M. Strader, U. S. A., retired, have been received by several prominent friends of the dead man.

Colonel Strader requests that his body be cremated at Philadelphia and the ashes taken to Louisville, his birthplace, there to be scattered on the waters of the Ohio river.

"If, after this process," reads the will, "the angel Gabriel, for whom I have all due respect, can with his trumpet arouse me from the dead, he is a 'darling,' and I will take off my shadowy hat to him.

"I will pass away believing in no other diety than that which is specified by Pope as being 'The First Great Cause—Least Understood,' believing that my first duty is to my fellow man, and that he who lives this life in justice to his people, and follows the precepts of Him who said 'love thy neighbor as thy self' has nothing to fear from the hereafter—no matter what it is.

"With best wishes to you all, and 'drink hearty.'"

Three of a Kind.

Court has just pronounced the Arctic explorer, Andree, to be dead in law, the legal term of disappearance having expired. It is announced that the manuscript of Milton's "Paradise Lost," which was offered for sale at public auction January 25th, but which was withdrawn because the reserve price of $25,000 was not offered, has now been sold to an American collector, whose name and the amount paid are not disclosed. IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Norah Gandy, wife of Mr. T. C. Gandy, who departed this life Tuesday morning, March 15, 1904, aged 35 years and four months, leaves a husband and nine children to mourn her loss; also mother, father, brothers and sisters, besides her other relatives and friends. She was laid to rest in Stanton cemetery Wednesday evening, March 16th. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Thomas. The bereaved have the sympathy of the entire community. The Lord has given, and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. The few lines of poetry following were written by her sister:

A FRIEND.

I

A dear one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is still;
A place is vacant in our home
That never can be filled.

II.

E'er little did we think,
When last we parted
That next we'd meet
At the grave of our dear departed.

III.

But God's ways to us are all unknown,
Although they're for the best;
It seems so hard for us to bear,
Yet He chasteneth those He loveth best.

IV.

What a consolation then it is
In this sad hour of grief,
To know there is a home above,
Where there's no cause to grieve.

V.

God knows best; it is His will;
It does no good to weep;
She's gone forever from all her ills,
Her soul in heaven sleeps.

VI.

Her task in this world of trouble
Has now forever ceased;
And how can we, though well we love her,
Wish her back when she's released.

(Miss) EULA FITTS.

UNIVERSITY SCHOOL TO RESUME.

The exercises of the university school will be resumed by me at Clanton next September. A strictly private school for fitting boys and girls for business of life, for teaching and for college and university. Will be operated on same plan as heretofore.

As cadets and alternates, to report at West Point in June, the President recently designated 19 young men, of whom 17 are sons of army officers and two sons of naval officers. Only in the army and navy is there found in this country the working of a hereditary principle. In these services the son generally follows the profession of his father, and marries the daughter of one of his father's old comrades or the sister of one of his own. Thus it happens that the navy is one great family, allied to a considerable extent by marriage with that other great family.

That the University of Pennsylvania is the oldest university in America has been established by Charles W. Dulles, a graduate of Pennsylvania, declares the Philadelphia Record. The university is not the oldest college, though it was established in 1740, but it was first to take steps toward the enlargement of the curriculum by the addition of a separate department for graduate study, the school of medicine having been founded in 1765. This was the first actual realization of the university idea in the colonies, but the idea of a university was in the minds of the founders as early as 1755, when the College of Philadelphia was given the power to grant "the usual university degree."

According to a story just dug up in Washington Admiral Dewey was not the first man to cut telegraphic communication with headquarters when about to go into action. Years ago, when Lieutenant General Chaffee was a captain in the Sixth Cavalry, he was ordered to go out and round up a lot of Apaches who had gone on the warpath. Just as he was ready to leave he called at the telegraph office. "Have you any further orders for me?" he asked. 'No sir," the operator replied. "The wires are not working very well today." "I am not surprised," said Chaffee as he turned to order his advance, "I had them cut early this morning. I don't need any humanitarian instructions from Washington.

Routine of Chinese School.

Each Chinese schoolboy must furnish his own stool and tables for school work, and the "Four Precious Articles," which are the ink slab, a cake of India ink, paper and brush for writing. With these he begins his weary task of learning to write and read the thousands of Chinese characters. These are to open the way to the Chinese classics, and a knowledge of this ancient literature and wisdom means education to the Chinese. At the opening of a Chinese school a paper on which is written the name of Confucius is pasted on the wall. Before this honored name the pupils and teachers burn paper money and joss sticks and bow their heads three times to the floor. The teacher then tells Confucius the day, the month of the year when the school is opened and begs his favor. Every morning when the pupils arrive they must bow twice, once for the teacher and once for Confucius.—Everybody's Magazine.

Assault to Murder Charged.

G. J. and B. J. Crenshaw, father and son, are held on a charge of assault with intent to murder on C. W. Graves, a brother-in-law of the son. The assault is alleged to have occurred Monday afternoon at Horse Creek, and the two men are held as fugitives from justice.

The father claims to have had nothing to do with the trouble, but the son admits that there was some trouble, but that his brother-in-law shot at him with a shot gun, but he did not return the fire.

SUMMER WOOF FOR WINTER WEAVING.

Some times, when the north wind is blowing
And we look through the pane at the snowing—
At a marble-white world out of doors—
The heart crieth out for the coming
Of blossoms and birds, for the humming
Of honey-winged bees in white-clover stores.

When violet vapors have hidden
The cold, naked hilltops, and bidden
The pale evening star as their guest,
A picture of moon-laden mountains,
Or flashing of fern-laddered fountains,
Lieth still as a garden of rest.

As we sit in the firelight's gleaming,
The sprite in the backlog brings dreaming
Of the summer's low-voiced monotone;
And we close our eyes to the dancing
Of fire-flecked figures, entrancing
Our souls with the thoughts of days that are flown.

So ever the Past doth enamour;
The sheen of its exquisite glamour
May illumine the bitterest day;
For under the frost there is breathing,
And in the dead branches is wreathing
Of hawthorn and lilacs for crowning of May.

—Ella Beardsley, in Boston Transcript.

HASHEESH.

A SHORT STORY, By BARRY PAIN.

The season was nearly at its end. On the terrace of Shepheard's were many groups—German, American and English—stopping for a few days in Cairo on their way home. In the street in front of the terrace the hawkers displayed their wares—pan pipes, fly whisks, images of the sphinx, picture post cards, matches. One offered for sale an inlaid table that he carried on his head. Another handed up an old flintlock pistol heavily mounted in silver for the inspection of a pretty girl from Cincinnati. Every now and then a carriage drove up and a party of tourists passed up the steps, followed by a dragoman laden with kodaks and dust cloaks and bazaar purchases. The bright sunlight flooded a scene of brilliant colors.

At one of the tables—next to that where the pretty girl from Cincinnati was sipping her tea—sat three men of different ages. Mr. Nathaniel Brookes, a man of some 60 years and rather distinguished appearance, was discussing total prohibitions with Dr. Henson-Blake. The doctor was a man of wiry build, with the face of a hawk and that indescribable look which comes only of strength and experience. The third man listened and fidgeted. From babyhood he had been precocious, and preferred to associate with those who were older than he was. In consequence he sometimes had to sit, as now, rather on the outside of the associations. He smoked endless cigarettes and drank something which was cold and not good for him out of a long thin glass, in which the ice tinkled pleasantly. He was a fair-haired young man whom the sun had merely freckled. He wore a single eye-glass, but did not always dare to use it. When you got to the bottom of his failings you found fundamentally by no means a bad sort of man, by name Percival Lake. This was his first year in Egypt. Both Brookes and the doctor had known Egypt for many years.

It was Brookes who was speaking. "The fellaheen should be allowed to dig," he said, "and it should be made well worth their while to dig."

"But they do," said the doctor. "They all of them do it in the summer, and they always have done."

"Yes," said Brookes. "Prohibitions which are too strict are always evaded. It's the same thing with hasheesh. But what I mean it that if we succeed in stopping the fellaheen from digging, the working European Egyptologist will find very little. The native will take care of that, and this is a case where the native has knowledge that the European can get only from him."

"That's possible," the doctor agreed.

"What's that about hasheesh?" the young man asked. "I thought it was the kind of drug that one came across frequently in stories and rarely in chemists' shops, and nowhere else."

"Nominally," said Brookes, "there is no hasheesh in Egypt. It is not allowed. It is contraband. I forget how many tons of it were seized last year, and I should be sorry to say how much managed to get through."

"Then the natives really use it?"

"Of course they do. There is a common type in all races which requires a nerve alterative and will have it. If religion or sentiment or custom shuts out alcohol, then it will be opium or hasheesh. Egypt goes for hasheesh."

"And the prohibition is of no use?" asked Lake.

"I wouldn't say that," Brookes replied grimly. "If a native has a quarrel with his neighbor he can—and sometimes does—sow cannabis indica on his neighbor's land and then report him for growing illegal stuff as soon as the crop comes up. That is useful. Speaking seriously, the prohibition may lessen the amount of hasheesh consumed, and undoubtedly had raised its price considerably—vices are the monopoly of the rich. All the same, I had a boy working on my dahabeah last year who was an excellent fellow. This year he was impossible, and I had to sack him. That was hasheesh."

"And what is the effect of it?"

"Ask the doctor."

"If you take enough and smoke it long enough," said Dr. Henson-Blake, "The effect is insanity. The given percentage in the asylums is fairly high, and should perhaps be higher. They don't admit it if they can help it, and it cannot always be spotted."

"And what is the immediate effect?"

"A sense of bien etre, of the absence of all worry. Sometimes there are delusions. The typical smoker generally gets an excessive vanity—swelled head—and becomes very quarrelsome. That is why Brookes had to sack that boy of his."

"All the same," said Lake, "I should very much like to try it."

"If I thought you meant that"—the doctor began with the suspicion of a sneer.

Lake was rather angry. "I can assure you I am not talking for effect. There are some people who don't, you know."

"All right," said the doctor, unperturbed, "keep your hair on. I've got some tobacco prepared with hasheesh up stairs. It is some that I had to confiscate. I'll give you a pipeful and you can try it after dinner. Smoke it in your own room, though—not downstairs."

"Leave it alone," growled Brookes.

"Thanks very much," said Lake to the doctor. "I'll come up with you now and get it."

The three men rose. As they did so the pretty girl from Cincinnati stepped up to the doctor. "Say, doctor, listen to me. Am I to give that man five dollars and a half for this?"

The doctor took the scarab in his hand and examined it.

"No, Miss Jocelyn," he said.

"Why not? I call that a dandy scarab. White amethyst. Genuine antique."

"It is not white amethyst and I know the man who made it—the day before yesterday. If you want it for a toy ten piastres is an outside price. The man will take that."

"My!" exclaimed Miss Jocelyn. "Thank you vurry much," and she returned to her negotiations.

The three men passed through into the hall.

II.

After dinner Brookes and Dr. Henson-Blake went off to see a friend at the Savoy. They left with grim, half-chaffing injunctions to young Lake to take care of himself. Lake, a little sulky, settled himself in one corner of the hall to smoke a cigarette before his experiment.

And suddenly Miss Jocelyn, whom he did not know, came up to him.

She was a dark girl, pale skinned and red lipped. She had a little of that jaunty, almost slangy, American air of being able to take care of herself. But she also carried the impression that this air was superficial and underneath it there might be poetry of a rather volcanic order. She sat down quietly on the other side of the table and said, "Do you not know me, Mr. Lake?"

Lake said that at any rate he was charmed to have the privilege of making her acquaintance.

"But," she went on, "I want you to behave just as if you had known me for some time. My aunt Esmeralda is watching us from away back, and she's pretty cute. Don't smile too much. Offer me a cigarette or order some coffee for me as if it were an ordinary thing that you had often done before for me. Don't look at me all the time—look away now and then. I'll tell you why I'm doing this directly."

Lake did his best to act the part and to take things more simply. He was consumed with curiosity, and for that reason he said, as he lighted her cigarette, "it is so nice of you to do this—to take pity on my loneliness—that I feel the reason why does not matter at all. I am unquestionably contented with things as they are."

"I just want to tell you. I know Dr. Henson-Blake—we were on the tourist boat together. He's playing it low down on you. That tobacco he gave you is ordinary tobacco. He wants to make you say afterward that you got a lot of funny sensations out of it, and then he'll say there was no hasheesh in it at all and just laff at you. You needn't ask me how I know, but it's the truth."

"I believe you. The possibility of it had occurred to me. Well, I have only to tell him that I got no sensations at all, and that's all over with this little joke."

"Yes," said Miss Jocelyn, "but you can get back on him. That's better."

"How?"

"Spin him a long story. Tell him you smoked it and it gave you visions. Then when he's finished with his laff, give him his tobacco back again to prove that you knew his game all the time."

"Excellent." He took from his pocket a little box in which the tobacco was placed, put it in one of the hotel envelopes, and sealed and dated it. "But the triumph must be yours," he said.

She leaned forward seriously. "Listen to me. You don't want to mention my name, you don't even know it, but I'm Irene Jocelyn. I've put confidence in you. See, he's not got to know that I've had anything to do with it. You promise me that?"

"Certainly. But I'm puzzled. Why do you come along to save me from making myself ridiculous? It's very kind of you. I'm very glad you've done it. But why?"

She hesitated and blushed slightly. "For myself, perhaps."

It seemed promising; he was emboldened. "What a pity I have wasted my time by not meeting you before? Have you been long in Cairo?"

"A few days," she said, absent mindedly. "My!" she exclaimed. "If I don't go back to my Aunt Esmeralda right now there's going to be a deal of trouble. I'll say good night to you, Mr. Lake."

He was rather staggered. "Good night," he said. "But I hope this is not the last time—"

"It depends. Mind that when he's about you don't know me."

He watched her as she went up the hall. Her bright smile came off very easily. She looked a little tired and hunted.

That night he could come to no satisfactory explanation. He could only decide to do exactly as he had been told and await events. In the meantime the girl's face haunted him, and always as it had been when she did not know that he could see her—always that tired and hunted look. What had been her story? What was inside her heart and mind? What cards was she playing? Why had she spoken to him. The questions were endless. His interest in her, strangely powerful, kept him for long awake.

III.

The little farce was played out with great success next morning. Lake told a beautiful story, and did it better because Irene Jocelyn, breakfasting alone at the next table, was listening intently. After smoking the hasheesh he had heard the sphynx talking. Then a black and limitless ocean had broken over it, and out of the ocean a strange white woman had crept and cut herself with a gold handled knife.

"Good!" said the doctor, with dry triumph. "And the more interesting because you have never had any hasheesh at all."

"No?" said Lake. "I thought that would be it." He tossed the envelope across to the doctor. "You'll find your tobacco inside. How do you give it that green color? I think the score is with me."

The doctor was angry, the more so because Brookes was undisguisedly amused at the failure. But he made one shrewd guess. "If I had mentioned the thing to a solitary soul I should have been certain that it had been given away to you. As it is, I can't see how you came to think of it for yourself. It's quite unlike you."

IV.

For the next two days Irene Jocelyn successfully avoided young Lake, and thereby drove him to the verge of madness. It even occurred to him to play a bold stroke and ask the doctor to introduce him. But he had the reasonable conviction that the introduction would do him more harm than good with this strange girl. He grew to hate Henson-Blake; it was evident that while he was there Irene would not speak. He invented excuses to get him out of the way.

On the third day she came up to him in the hall with hand outstretched. "I just want to say goodby to you, Mr. Lake," she said. "We leave this afternoon."

"Won't you tell me anything before you go? I can find no reason why you should have interested yourself in my defence. Still less can I find any reason why you should have avoided me ever since."

"But I wasn't interested in you. You're not—what do they say?—not on in this act. Didn't I tell you that I was doing it for myself?"

"Yes. You are clever—you found out the doctor's trick."

"I know him. I told you that I met him on the tourist boat. I knew what he would do."

"I am stupid, for I also knew him, and did not find out. I'm not vain enough, believe me, to suppose that you did this for love of me."

She laughed and snapped her fingers. "I wish to God you had!" he added; and the tone and simplicity of the words carried conviction. She changed her manner. She became serious.

"What was done, not for love of you, was done for hate of somebody else! Can't you imagine a woman wanting to hit back and too proud to let it be known that she wants to hit at all? Can't you imagine her hungering and thirsting to see a certain main fall, if only in some little thing, just for once? Can't you—Oh, you don't want the whole humiliating story, do you?"

"No. no. I'm sorry. Good-by."

"Goodby."

"Only you know—that is not for hate of a man. If you hated there might be a chance for those who loved."

She shook her head and turned away. A minute later he heard her laughing and talking her best American to a group of hotel acquaintances.

And this is, perhaps, the primary reason why Percival Lake did ultimately take to hasheesh in sober earnest. His friends have ceased to speak to him. Dr. Henson-Blake is interested in the case.—The Tattler.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

AN ELOQUENT DISCOURSE BY THE REV. A. B. KINSOLVING, D. D.

Subject: Presumptuous Sins—The Commonest Sin Among Men Is Sacrificing the Interests of the Spiritual and Eternal to the Carnal and Temporal.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of Christ Church, preached an excellent sermon Sunday morning, on "Presumptuous Sins." The two texts were from Matthew iv: 5 and 6: "Then the devil taketh him into the holy city and he set Him on the pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto Him, if Thou art the Son of God cast Thyself down, for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee; and on their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest haply Thou dash Thy foot against a stone. Jesus said unto him, "Again it is written, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God;" and Psalms xix: 13: "Keep back Thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright and innocent from the great transgression." Dr. Kinsolving said:

In pursuing our purpose of trying to interpret the unfolding life of the Lord Jesus and to read its lessons for ourselves, we preached last Sunday the tempted Jesus. We found in the narrative of the temptation a record of just a mental and spiritual struggle as we should have expected Him to go through at this stage of His career. It is impossible to suppose that He could have decided instantaneously and without long meditation and conflict upon the plan of His life as the "sent of God." Clearly He had a plan and adhered to it throughout life.

We remarked upon the deep interest that each one of us has in the moral struggle and victory of Jesus, and how just in proportion as we are led by the Holy Spirit to lofty and noble ideals of life, we are conscious of these subtle earthly lures which would deflect us from our truest paths.

We spoke of the fatalistic non-resistance to temptation so much in vogue nowadays as something not worth while, because in a world where the frailty of man is exposed to such overwhelming allurements of world, flesh and devil, it is certain beforehand that a vast percentage of men and women will fall. The Maker of men and not the victims of sin is the most responsible, so this school teaches, and by such doctrines the person assailed is induced to yield without a struggle. Jesus' conflict and victory teach us that this is a libel upon God. Through a putting forth of such strength as we have, through a prayerful desire to be and do what is right, our vision is cleared and our wills grow strong, and while God can never entirely shelter us from temptation He can and does defend us in temptation, and with every solicitation to wrongdoing show us the way of escape.

Then we tried to learn the lesson of Christ's first temptation. The question which first confronted Him as our representative was the old and ever-pressing question of daily bread. The tempter proceeds upon the assumption that all man needs for his sustenance is food for the physical life. You have a right to this, he says, on any terms, and there is nothing else to be considered by comparison with this. So make provision for yourself and the body's bread first. "You are to feed the hungry; feed first yourself." "If Thou art the son of God, command that these stones be made loaves—and then You may live to execute Your Father's business."

The answer of Jesus came from a Man gaunt and weary by long fasting and days of conflict. "The physical life is not man's only life, and I will not act as if it were," He says, "by exempting Myself from privations which I have come to share with My brethren. If I am hungry, that lies within the will of God for Me, and I choose hunger in that will, rather than satisfaction outside of and against that will. I will not hurt or kill My moral or spiritual life as the filial, dependent and obedient Child of God by providing on guilty terms for the feeding of My bodily life. For if, through privation, the bodily wrapping of life should perish there would still be left My essential manhood and My eternal relationship with the Father. Therefore I choose the obedient and dependent life, and will trust the care and wisdom of My Father unto the end."

Jesus there enunciated a philosophy of life which is as sane as it is lofty and spiritual. Perhaps the commonest sin among men is sacrificing the interests of the spiritual and eternal to the carnal and temporal. All about us they are prone to live as if man did live by bread alone, and where this is true they will have bread on any terms, and getting it becomes the consuming passion of life. By choosing, instead, the hunger that resulted from dwelling in the will of God, rather than the passing gratification gotten at the price of disobedience, our Master won for us the great initial victory over temptation, and by His spirit and example has been leading millions to victory along the same path ever since.

In the second temptation—I take the order given in St. Matthew as the natural order—the point of attack has changed. The tempter had sought to overthrow the obedience of Christ by an assault upon His physical appetites and faith in His Father's care. He had overcome the temptation through the strength of His trust in God. So now the attack is made upon Him through that very trust. An unswerving loyalty and confidence in the will of God has been discovered. That loving trust is was which made Him choose to suffer the pangs of hunger, rather than arbitrarily terminate them by a miracle wrought for Himself. Ah, then, here is His strength, so near by there must lurk His weakness! "Then," we read, "the devil taketh Him into the holy city and setteth Him upon that corner of the wing of the temple which overlooks from its dizzy height the priests' court below, where the thousands of Jewish pilgrims have gathered from all over the world. 'If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down.' That will be an ideal and perfect test of your filial relation and your Father's care for You. Descend, heaven-borne, into the midst of priests and people, win instantly the acclamation and popular welcome which You will else have to conquer by long years of suffering and failure. What worship and honor and homage will be Yours! How quickly You will stand at the head of believing Israel! Surely, there is nothing to fear, for it is written, 'He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee; and on their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest, haply, Thou dash Thy foot against a stone.'"

The very choice of the location of the temptation attests the subtlety of the tempter. He is taken to the Holy City and to a pinnacle, or wing, of the temple. Think what must have been Jesus' sacred love for Jerusalem and how naturally and deeply His mind would have been influenced by the surroundings. All the passionate religious patriotism of His nature, all His deepest springs of feeling would be touched by the sacred associations of the Holy City. "Beautiful for elevation, the joy of the whole earth, the city of the great king, whither the tribes of the Lord go up year by year for worship." How precious were its sights: "As the mountains lie around about Jerusalem, so encampeth the Lord about them that love Him." "If I forget thee, O, Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its cunning." If for a devout Jew there was a spot on earth which warranted the most unconditioned trust, it was the temple of Jehovah in the first religious capital of the world. Here it was, while His soul was vibrating with a triumphant sense of trust wou by overcoming the first temptation, that the insidious attack is made whose effort was to betray Him into presumption. All the wonderful past dealing of God with His covenant people would stand out in memory; all the wealth of tenderness over hopes and promises sorely and long deferred, and now on the eve of fulfillment—a tenderness which afterward came out in words wet with tears, when He cried: "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, but ye would not." It was in the heart of His own Jerusalem, and from the summit of His Father's house that He was tempted by His cunning and wily adversary to commit the plausible sin. Beside the influence of the sacred place and associations, the voice of the tempter appealed to something not less sacred—to the written word of God—as the guarantee of truth and action. The devil, too, can quote Scripture to his purpose. "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down; for it is written, 'He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee,'" etc.

First, we must have recourse to the principles of sanity and common sense; find out if what we are tempted to do is in sincere accord with what God has taught us generally in His word and in common sense, and, then decide. For Christ to have cast Himself from the wing of the temple into the abyss that yawned below would have been to tempt God. "We do not make experiments with those whom we absolutely trust." When a man begins by a prayer test, or any like thing, to make experiments with God, he shows that he lacks the subtle, spiritual quality called faith which is the only means by which he can reach God. Therefore, it is the habit of trust to calmly abide in God, —not trifle with or put Him to the test. As long as Jesus remained within the sphere of the revealed will of His Father, He could trust Him. If He should break or contravene that will, then He should no longer feel He had a right to God's care. In other words, Jesus Christ, in His second temptation, flushed with a victory which must have given an impulse to faith in the Father's power and sufficiency, declares to us that it is necessary to have a care for ourselves as well as commit ourselves into the keeping of God. Because we are God's children we may not break the laws of the world to which we belong and expect Him to miraculously interfere to prevent the consequences. Contempt for nature and practical reason is a wretched policy to begin a religious life with. We live under physical law, under moral law, under spiritual law. To fancy that because we have come to feel the power of the spiritual and even the supernatural, we are at liberty to fly in the face of known physical laws, or some and widely received moral laws, is fatal error, and for it men are always punished in the end. God is the source of all these laws and we tempt the Lord our God when we break them. We are not to rely, either, "too exclusively or presumptuously" upon the care of God. As far as our practical reason serves us, we must also take counsel of that, recognizing that faith and self help, action and patience "meet in equilibrium" and complete each other.

If Jesus, the exceptional and pre-eminent object of divine care, had yielded to this "Cast Thyself down." He would first have broken away from us, His brethren, who live under moral and physical law, and second, He would have "substituted for a life environed by nature, guarded, guided, fed by it, participant in its forces, because subject to its laws, a life divorced from nature, hostile to it, refusing to tempt God or to break away from our human lot and world, showed us the sanity and strength of a genuine trust in God. It is not nervous, fanatical or presumptuous. "It neither courts nor shuns death." It is prudent, wary, will not overstep the limits of a sober faith, and yet, when the will of God clearly demands it in the path of duty, it bravely faces death and dares all hell!

My friends, the modern sin of presumption turns up under many forms. Now it appears in the guise of religious pride, in the purblind assumption of some ecclesiastical charlatan uttering with great swelling words of vanity some ornamular opinion which he claims to be of equal authority with the teachings of the Son of God. You have it in the vaticinations of the "mother" of Christian Science with the system's slavish literalism and preposterous overclaims. The contempt for the physical that the system breathes and breeds, the refusal to give medicines out of those stores which God has laid up for us in leaf and plant and flower and mineral, and which millions of educated men have given their lives to make available, the willingness to cast themselves or a child over the precipice, claiming the sanction of certain Scriptures as their warrant for escaping destruction is, in the eyes of most men and women to-day, a sin of presumption. The system is against the corporate common sense of the race, against the proportion of faith; it discards doctrines like the blessed truths of Christ's deity and atonement, which have been held by the overwhelming majority of the members of the Christian church in every age from the beginning. "It is written," they cry. Yes, Christ teaches us to answer, and "again it is written: Thou shalt not make the trial of the Lord thy God."

You have it—one hesitates to allude in a Christian pulpit to the vulgar sect—in the sacrosanct polygamy of the Mormon, of which such an informing expose has been made by a Congressional committee during the past week. Not that the Mormon is the only adulterer; would God he were, but he is the only man now before the Christian public who claims a new revelation of later and higher authority than that made through the holy and sinless Jesus, expressly sanctioning his lustful creed.

"I as the chosen of God have had a vision which uproots and supersedes the morality taught by the Lord Jesus Christ; I like Mohammed's about the family better than Christ's, therefore I hear my preference sanctioned by a voice from heaven. Henceforth my revelation shall put me above the law of the land. Outwardly I may have to comply, but I secretly will ignore it." There is not occurred in modern times a more pestiferous example of religious hypocrisy and delusion! And when we remember that repeatedly in recent years emissaries from Utah have proclaimed this accursed system here in the East, chiefly among simple minded rustics and mountaineers, we realize the sin of permitting it thus long.

This country can never endure part polygamist and part monogamist.

But, my friends, the capital sin of presumption is committed nearer at home than this. There is self satisfied credulity which makes men fancy that they can break all manner of spiritual laws, cast themselves down all sorts of religious precipices, take all kinds of risks in the affairs of the soul at Satan's dictation, and yet that somehow at the end they will come out without loss! It is not, too, the ignorant about God, but those who have had good opportunity to know Him and obey Him who fall into this sin.

When any Christian man lets himself out easily and airily from a plain duty to God, or does a sin against light, he nears the sin of presumption. When a man of the world deliberately violates the express will of God, our Saviour, year after year, relying upon some vague hope of deliverance for which we have no divine warrant, he is approaching the sin of persumption.

Brethren, our safety lies in learning the perfect humility and simplicity of Jesus Christ.

"Keep back Thy servant also, from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright and innocent from the great transgression."

Pius Tenth has recently discovered that he is not, as supposed, the two hundred and sixty-fourth pope, but the two hundred and fifty-eighth. He has eliminated no less than six pontiffs from the list of his predecessors. In the "Gerarchia Catolica," or official annual of the holy seat, which has just appeared, he is set down as the two hundred and fifty-eighth pope. During the closing years of the reign of Leo Thirteenth the extensive researches of Mgr. Duchesne, director of the French school at Rome, brought to light the fact that six popes of the period preceding the crusades were more or less mythical, their existence being based on legend and tradition rather than on actual history. They have been eliminated, and no longer figure on the official roster of supreme pontiffs of the Roman Catholic church. At the same time Pius the Tenth has caused the urn containing the dust of the alleged martyr Fortissima to be removed from the Basilica of St. Mark. Archaeologists have all come to the conclusion that there was no foundation for the story of the alleged martyrdom of Fortissima, and that therefore there was no reason for the veneration of her remains or for regarding her either a martyr or a saint.

The standing of the three leading Japanese journals is as follows: The Jiji-Shimbun, which means literally "timely incident new-hearing," is a semi-official paper and may be regarded as the Times of Japan. The staff is composed of well-to-do men, from among whom appointments are often made to the chief posts in government departments. Rumors are never admitted to the pages of the Jiji-Shimbun, and it has a great reputation for truthfulness and sincerity. The Nichi-Nichi Shimbun—i. e., Day and Day New-hearing, or, as we should say, Daily Chronicle—is the organ of the progressive party in Japan, while the Koku-Miu Shimbun—i. e., Country People's News—which has been calling for "fearful musters and prepared defense," in its character of the nation's journal, is regarded as a less responsible paper, but is perhaps all the more interesting for that.—London Chronicle.

In modes of thought and beliefs the Koreans have no religion, properly so called. In their cities there are absolutely no religious buildings, except the churches of foreign Christian missionaries, no temples, no altars and no idols of any kind. On the outskirts of the cities may be found a few small Buddhist shrines, and in the remote mountain districts a few old Buddhist monasteries, but inside the walled cities not a single religious edifice, not even a priest or a monk. All "holy men" of the Buddhist faith are "taboo" in town. Why? Because in the invasion of 1592 the Japanese generals disguised their soldiers as monks and holy men and thus succeeded in taking many towns by strategy.

The United States furnished $80,000,000 of the $295,000,000 worth of gold which the world produced in 1902. Colorado produced $28,000,000. California $16,000,000 and Alaska $8,000,000.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Lake Baikal, with a length of 390 miles and an area of 15,000 square miles, is directly in the way of the plateau where the trans-Siberian railway reaches its highest elevation, 1,500 feet above the sea level. Hills from 3,000 to 6,000 feet high surround it, rising so abruptly from the water's edge that building along their sides without tunneling is impossible. The lake itself is too deep to be bridged, its surface is 1,561 feet above sea level, the deepest part 1,624 feet below, and it is subject to frightful storms. From November to April it is practically ice-bound. The lake begins to freeze early in November, is completely ice-bound by the middle of December and the ice does not break up until May. Its white covering reaches a thickness of nine and a half feet. To get around the end of the lake requires a detour of nearly 100 miles, and tunneling and cutting through rock under the most adverse conditions. The cost of such a railroad section conservative estimate puts at 25,000,000 rubles, or something less than $20,000,000. How long it will take can hardly be estimated—four or five years at any rate.

"The custom of taking wedding tours is a remnant of the ancient times, when men got their wives by capture," said Professor A. H. Wilde, of Northwestern university, to a class in Roman history recently. "As soon as a man captured a woman he wanted to marry," continued the professor, "the young couple ran away to avoid the wrath of the bride's relatives. Men don't get their wives by capture now, but the custom of taking wedding tours still survives, a reminder of the ancient times."

Mrs. Almira A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says:

"For twenty years I never knew what it was to have good health. Every physician consulted said I had liver trouble, but their medicines did me no good. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular, and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed 100 pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

A free trial of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Jackson will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price 50 cents per box.

"Commercial Korea in 1904" is the title of a monograph just issued by the department of commerce and labor. It discusses commercial and other conditions in Korea, showing area, population, transportation facilities, railways, telegraphs, postal service and foreign commerce, including imports and the countries from which they are drawn, and exports and the countries to which they are sent. The population of Korea the monograph in question puts at about 15,000,000 in round numbers, the area at about equal to that of the state of Kansas, and the foreign commerce at about $12,000,000, of which imports form about $7,500,000.

By R. L. McCardell.

YOU think you'll stay home to-day? Well, it's about time you got acquainted with your wife and children. I suppose I ought to be thankful for the compliment, but you know I'm going to clean house to-day, and so I suppose you, not content with the way you act toward me, have taken a day off to worry me just when I am busy.

"Yes, I have often said that I would like you to stay home once in a while, but I know you are not doing it to please me. There's something suspicious about it. You have some scheme on foot, but you can't fool me, Mr. Nagg. Not saying a word? Oh, of course you're not saying a word. You are the martyr who never says a word, but you are killing me by your neglect and fault-finding.

"Not neglecting me? Now, please, please do not be sarcastic. Yes, I have begged you time and again to stay home, but you never would give me even one day. You couldn't? Oh, yes, you could. And now you come when it is too late, and tell me you are staying home to please me.

"Other men seem to like to stay in their homes. I do everything in the world to make you comfortable. There! Look at the ashes off your cigar! How can I keep the house clean and attractive if you lay around messing it up? Please don't crush those pillows. They cost me ninety-eight cents apiece, and you are ruining them!"

"Now you are going to swear! I know you are going to swear. Oh, I am used to it. Don't mind me. Why don't you sit down in that Morris chair? Watch out! you are scratching the wall with it.

"Please put your feet on that other chair; it looks so sprawly and vulgar. There! you have taken the varnish off the chair with your shoe heels. Oh, I see you haven't put on your slippers. Now I see it all, Mr. Nagg! Now I see it all! You never intended to stay home, except to bicker with me and get me nervous, and then you will rush out and leave me here while you enjoy yourself around town.

"You couldn't find your slippers? Now, please don't tell me that. One of them was burnt the other day by accident. The baby carried it out and put it in the coal scuttle and Delia thought I wanted it burned. And the other slipper has been knocking around the house for a week. The children have been putting their small dolls in it.

"Why it is you never said a word if you were loooking for your slippers? you didn't want to start any row? How kind you are! What are you doing now but snarling and sneering because the children played with your cheap old slippers? You didn't say a word? Ah, but you were going to, Mr. Nagg, you were going to!

"Of course, you expect that I can watch everything and look after everything. And so I could, perhaps, if you ever said a kind word to encourage me. But from day to day, from hour to hour, it is nothing but fault finding when you are in the house, which is but seldom, and not content with this you take a day to stay home, when you know I have my housecleaning to look after, to quarrel about a pair of old slippers that only cost forty-nine cents two years ago.

"I would sooner buy a dozen pairs of slippers than to have you make such a row about them. I know what's passing through your mind. You get me all worked up and nervous, and then you slam out of the house and say it is my fault.

"But you have done that so much that the novelty has worn out. Come out and be frank with me. You know you didn't mean to stay home to-day. You know you are only trying to pick a quarrel, and about a pair of old slippers, too. Instead of trying to give me some happiness and instead of trying to take some pleasure out of your home you sit around scowling and muttering. Now, look how you have that rug, and look how you have the place all littered up with your newspapers.

"Instead of sitting down and having a nice comfortable chat with your wife on such few occasions as you are home, you sit with a frown on your face reading the newspapers and spilling cigar ashes all over the carpet and smoking up my lace curtains.

"Other men talk with their wives. But you don't. Here I have been talking to you agreeably, paying no attention to your scowls, and I can't get a word out of you.

"Probably you do not think I am intelligent enough to talk to you. Is that it? Please tell me the truth. What did you stay home to-day for?

"To please me? To please me, indeed! Does it please a woman to have her husband making a pig pen of the house and scowling and fussing over an old slipper?

"I can't watch everything. By the time I get the children off to school and have picked up after you, my day is gone. And here you are home in my way, and interrupting my work, and next I suppose you will be quarrelling because the house isn't neat.

"You'll go out if I don't shut up? I knew it! I knew it! I can see through your schemes, Mr. Nagg.

"Here I have been like a fool trying to smile and look happy and interest you, and feeling so glad because you sat home one day, and all the while you were quarrelling and fussing about an old slipper to make an excuse to go out among your friends.

"Who are your friends? I am sure I don't know. They are not of the kind you can introduce to your wife. But you are happier with them, of course.

"But why use me so shamefully? Why not be manly and say you stayed from the office to-day to go somewhere you didn't want me along, instead of pretending you wanted to stay home once?

"I will not stand in the way of your enjoyment. But please don't quarrel with me. I have had that so much.

"There he goes! Slams the door as usual. Well, anyway, he didn't fool me. And to carry on so shamefully about an old pair of forty-nine-cent slippers!"—New York Evening World.

Peripatetic Coin Merchant.

A street peddler who sells old coins is one of the characters of the down-town business streets in Manhattan. He usually gets permission to spread a rubber cloth over a railing in front of a shop window and lays his wares upon it. The man is quite deaf. If you desire to purchase you must make known your wants on a pad. The coins he has for sale range in price from six cents to $3. Collectors know him as a man of long experience and sound judgment in the trade. When they want any particular coin and have an hour to spare they go looking for him in his down-town haunts.

One day he will be seen in Beaver street and the next day he is likely to be found in Barclay street. He goes where fancy dictates and where, in his judgment, is the best chance for a good day's business. He has customers now who used to deal with him when he kept a little shop in Broadway, near Duane street. When the shop was torn down to make way for a sky-scraper he decided that he would never open another one, but became a peripatetic salesman. In summer he is often seen at Saratoga or Long Branch. A New Yorker who went to St. Augustine last winter saw him there close to the walls of old Fort Marion. He comes back to Broadway as mysteriously as he disappears and declines to give any account of his wanderings. He will talk for an hour about coins if you care to listen, but never about himself or his changed circumstances. —New York Press.

Operating With Radium.

The announcement made recently by a New York physician, Dr. W. J. Morton, that he had employed radium in his practice and had effected cures in the case of cancer, has attracted general attention to this much discussed substance, and especially to its value as a therapeutic agent. During the fall and winter various experiments to determine the effect of radium on various plant and animal organisms have been carried on. Its curative value in such diseases as cancer has also been investigated, and in a report made to the Vienna Academy of Sciences by Dr. Exner, the conclusion is reached that while an operation is preferable, yet the radium treatment is advisable where this is not possible. In nine cases of cancer which had been under radium treatment it was found that there had been considerable abatement in the cancerous swelling, and in two of these it had not appeared after five months. In one case there had been considerable improvement, due to the radium treatment, which was the more interesting, as it was impossible to operate on the patient.—Harper's Weekly.

Fed on Roses and Currency.

A lion cub which has been on exhibition in former Alderman Dan Cole's flower store in Newark avenue, Jersey City, N. J., escaped from the store window yesterday and rubbed against Cole's left leg. The florist paid no attention to it, thinking it was the cat, until the cub began to claw his trousers. Then he gave a vicious kick and sprinted for the stairway, with the cub close astern. He slammed the door shut, and the baby lion began to get busy.

"He ran around the place several times," said Mr. Cole, "and broke a jardiniere on each lap. Then he quieted down somewhat and tackled a big bunch of American Beauty roses. He ate a dozen or more as if he liked them and then tackled a pocketbook which he found on the counter. He pawed it open and chewed up eight $10 bills.

"Then he walked into a ice box where I keep cut flowers. That was my chance. I ran from my hiding place and shut the door. I kept the cub in cold storage several minutes. Then his keeper took charge of him and thawed him out. I fear I'll never get those bills back, as they are not indigestible securities."—New York Sun.

SELF-STOPPING BOTTLE

Receptacle For Liquids Which Closes Its Mouth Automatically.

Any one who has lost the stopper of a bottle which it was very necessary should be kept well corked when not in use will appreciate an idea of a Massachusetts man upon which a patent has just been granted. This affair consists of a bottle that not only carries its stopper with it, but automatically closes itself when set down.

The attractiveness of the thing is further enhanced by the fact that the bottle is a self-opener, as well as a self-closer. All that is necessary for the person who desires to use some of the contents of the vessel is that he should invert the bottle. In so doing he causes the stopper to slide up into a cylindrical head extending above the bottle's top. This uncovers the holes through which the liquid flows. Having drawn sufficient of the latter, the bottle is righted, and this brings the sliding valve back into place, covering the holes which form the mouth of the ingenious contrivance.

The idea is clearly illustrated in the accompanying picture. A permanently fitted arrangement in the place of the ordinary cork or stopper is fitted in the neck of the bottle and carries the extension head, which is hollow. Near the base of the head, however, are the apertures designed for the egress of the liquid contents. Within the hollow head is the sliding head, which fits over the apertures when the bottle sits in its normal position. The act of inverting the bottle causes the valve to slide up into the extension, and thus uncovers the holes, which are left free for the passage of the contents as long as the receptacle is held in this position.

OIL FIREBRICK.

A Self-Feeding Contrivance Designed to Assist the Housewife.

When the people of many parts of the country were driven to their own devices in many instances last winter in contriving for the heating of their homes and the cooking of their meals on account of the scarcity of coal in consequence of the miners' strike, a great number of new and sometimes valuable suggestions were made to help them out of their difficulties.

Oil played a most prominent part in a majority of these emergency schemes, and in consequence the bright brains of the land have been figuring on how to turn the lessons learned at that time to good account. A porous brick saturated with oil and placed in the stove was found to be an excellent substitute for the ordinary fuel, and porous bricks had a good sale in many localities. Another scheme was the employing of an oil burner in the stove fed by means of a tube connecting with a tank placed at a higher level.

Now comes a combination of the two schemes that have been referred to. The inventor presents as the result of his investigation into the subject an appropriately shaped porous brick, to which is attached a tube whose other end is connected with a tank of oil situated at a greater elevation, so that the oil is fed regularly to the brick, the amount of flow being regulated by a stop-cock conveniently placed within reach of the person who tends the stove.

Strange Case of Money Lending.

In a money lending case heard in London it was stated that a clerk borrowed $100 from a money lender in 1886, that he had paid $500 by way of interest, and was now sued for $750, said to be due to the lender. The judge said if these were the facts he could not make a higher order than the payment at the rate of one farthing a month against the defendant. The debt would then take 12,000 years to pay off.

Latest War Items.

The Russians have taken the most remarkable secret precautions for the provisioning of their troops. At intervals of about a quarter of a mile along the greater part of the entire length of the Siberian railway stores of concentrated proteid food have been buried on each side of the line, each deposit being enough to maintain a company—said to be 290 men—for a week. The position of these provisions is not known to the sergeants or captains, but only to the commandants, who have the information in cipher.—London Chronicle.

According to the latest information from the pension commissioner there are 996,545 pensioners on the rolls, to pay whom $133,029,090 was paid out in pensions last year. Other expenses incident to the business raised the total cost of pensions for the year to $137,759,653. The average amount paid to each pensioner is $133.49 a year. This government has disbursed over $3,000,000,000 in pensions as a result of the several wars in which the country has been engaged, distributed as follows:

Revolution	$ 70,000,000 00
War of 1812	45,186,197 22

Bessemer's Plans.

The secretary of the committee on entertainment of the Alabama Press Association has received sixty answers to the invitations he sent out a week ago to the editors of the state, inviting them to attend the meeting of the association. From the present prospects it looks as if the association this year will break all former ones from the standpoint of attendance.

Elaborate arrangements have already been made to entertain the visitors and the people will see to it that the stay of the editors in this city is absolutely without expense.

More Coal.

The Pratt Coal Company will increase the capacity of their mines from 4,000 to 6,000 tons per day as soon as the Cane Creek branch of the Louisville and Nashville railroad is completed. The extension is better known as the North Alabama railroad. The company owns extensive properties along the line, which will probably be completed April 15. The work of laying rail is being rushed about one-half mile of steel per day being laid.

Lumber Yard Damaged.

Saturday the yards of the Pratt City Lumber company were partially destroyed by fire and the loss was estimated by the proprietors at about $8,000 fully covered by insurance. Only the Kansas City sheds and the office were burned.

The origin of the fire is thought to have been the careless use of matches by tramps along the railroads, as the flames were first seen along that side of the yard.

Crushed by Falling Stone.

One man killed, another seriously injured and a third slightly injured is the result of an accident in the Sayreton mines, a few miles from North Birmingham, Friday morning. T. L. Smith was killed and W. T. Smith seriously injured.

Emmet Roberts, of Bessemer, is one of the largest young men in the country. He weighs 314 pounds and is seven feet ten inches high. During the past six weeks he has grown one and a quarter inches. He was eighteen years old last July.

A pen factory is a new industry proposed for Anniston.

The working crew of the Memphis division of the Southern railway is drawing near to Scottsboro, going in a western direction, with new steel rails which will take the place of the old iron rails.

It is said that the receivership of the Tennessee Central will be of brief duration.

Selma papers report that the Alabama river has been lower for the past three or four months than ever before recorded in the history of the weather bureau for this season of the year.

Dr. J. M. Lindsley, president of the International Quarantine board, is serving a ten days' sentence in the Mobile county jail for criminal libel against the Mobile quarantine authorities.

It is reported in Anniston that the local plant of the Southern Car and Foundry Company will resume operations about April 1 under the management of Captain James Elliott.

A real estate and building boom is reported in Mobile.

The East Lake election, which was being held on the issuance of $13,500 of bonds for the erection of an electric light plant, was called off on account of an error in the ballot.

Governor Jelks has named a board of managers for the old soldiers' home at Mountain Creek and has called a meeting of the board for next Friday at noon in his office.

A $100,000, six-story hotel is to be erected opposite the Birmingham postoffice.

APRIL 1ST.

[illegible] Friday was devoted by the sen[illegible] almost continuous discussion of [illegible] questions. The time until 2 [illegible] was devoted mainly to the [illegible] resolution proposing an in[illegible] into the legality of the recent [illegible] old age pension order. Mr. [illegible] was the principal speaker. [illegible] was frequently interrupted by [illegible] senators. He contended [illegible] Secretary Hitchcock had tran[illegible] the limits of executive author[illegible] issuing the order.

[illegible] latter half of the day was de[illegible] to the postoffice appropriation [illegible] no appreciable progress was [illegible] with that measure, the speeches [illegible] being in the main political and of [illegible] character.

The re[illegible] of the day was devoted to [illegible] of the conference report on [illegible] appropriation bill. With the [illegible] of the amendment providing [illegible] increases in the signal corps, [illegible] disagreed to all other im[illegible] Senate amendments, and the [illegible] final recall to the conference.

[illegible] Warren occupied the greater [illegible] the senate's time with a [illegible] attacking the Gibson bill to [illegible] most of the existing land laws. [illegible] tended that the land laws were [illegible] sent, and in the main honestly [illegible] administered, and urged that there [illegible] be a demand for repeal. Mr. Mal[illegible] concluded his speech on the old [illegible] disability pension order of the [illegible] secretary of the interior. The post[illegible] bill was completely sidetracked [illegible] the day.

[illegible] one hundred and nineteen pension [illegible] were passed by the house in two [illegible] minutes. An hour was devoted to rapid [illegible] consideration by unanimous consent, [illegible] a large number of bridge bills [illegible] other matters of minor importance [illegible] were disposed of. At the expiration [illegible] of time Mr. Maddox, of Georgia, [illegible] had threatened to stop the pro[illegible] by a point of "no quorum," [illegible] the pension legislation was fin[illegible] insisted on the point, and as [illegible] there few members present, the [illegible] house adjourned.

APRIL 4TH.

[illegible] Although the postoffice appropriation [illegible] was before the senate almost the [illegible] whole day, the early debate on the [illegible] bill was in relation to general [illegible] matters. Considerable progress was [illegible] made with the postoffice appropriation [illegible] bill, both provisions of the bill re[illegible] lating to sites for postoffices purposes [illegible] and to New York city, as amended by the [illegible] committee were agreed to.

[illegible] Several important amendments agreed [illegible] to provide for the retransfer of the [illegible] rural delivery service from the office [illegible] of the fourth assistant postmaster [illegible] general to the office of the first as[illegible] sistant postmaster general, struck out [illegible] the limit for cars on the railway [illegible] mail service and eliminated the re[illegible] quirements placed on first and second [illegible] class postmasters in the matter of [illegible] free service.

The military academy appropriation bill was taken up, and after Mr. Parker, in charge of the bill, had explained its features briefly, Mr. Goldfogle, of New York, spoke in behalf of the Jews of the United States, for whom he asked equal treatment and protection while traveling in Russia. Mr. Livernash, of California, made an attack on President Roosevelt and Mr. Merrill, of Pennsylvania discussed the negro question. Consideration of the bill was not concluded when the house adjourned.

The District of Colombia appropriation bill was sent to conference.

APRIL 5TH.

The senate listened to a two-hour speech by Mr. Morgan on the Panama canal question and then took up the postoffice appropriation bill, but adjourned without completing its consideration. Some important amendments aside from those suggested by the committee were agreed to, among them one increasing from two to four ounces the size of franked letters. Mr. Morgan's speech was in especial advocacy of his resolution requesting information from the attorney general concerning concessions to the original Panama canal company, and was in the main an arraignment of the new Panama company.

Mr. Fairbanks suggested an amendment appropriating $20,000 for experimental telephone delivery of special delivery mail in connection with the rural free mail service. He said the intention was to give country people the benefit of the special delivery service and he added that the amendment would in many cases expedite delivery to the extent of twenty-four hours. He also said that the telephone was becoming so general as to render the plan feasible.

The proceedings in the house were enlivened by speeches by Mr. DeArmond and Mr. Grosvenor, the former attacking the republicans for failure to order an investigation into the postoffice charges and to revise the tariff, and the latter vigorously defending the republican party and lauding President Roosevelt for the part he played in the postal investigation, the passage of the Cuban reciprocity law and the treaty with Panama for the construction of an isthmian canal.

The military academy bill was passed without amendment.

Kidnap'ng Charge Dismissed.

It is asserted by the attorneys for Harding that Mrs. Harding and a friend of Harding's from Brooksville, Fla., will be at the trial and that by means of these witnesses it will be proved that Harding is not the man wanted in Ohio.

The requisition papers from the governor of Ohio call for a man by the name of Blaser. Detective Callahan says he is positive that Harding is the man wanted. Harding says he is not Blaser, but that Blaser is still in Florida. The warrant charging Detective Callahan with kidnaping was dismissed.

Railroad Sold.

By a decree of fthe chancery court of Jackson county, rendered several days ago, the Gurley and Paint Rock Valley railway, together with all of its belongings, was sold at public outcry and was bought in by Colonel M. A. Clay, a citizen of Princeton. The sum paid was $18,000. It is now thought Colonel Clay will sell the property, which is quite valuable to the Southern railway.

Fell from the Steeple.

S. O. Snow, of Ensley, was killed at Dothan Tuesday by falling from the steeple of the new Methodist church. He was at work on the roofing when the scaffolding gave way and he fell to the ground, a distance of fifty or sixty feet. He was dead when picked up.

Port Arthur is imperiled by the proximity of the Russian volunteer ships which are loaded with 250 torpedoes, each containing 240 pounds of terrible explosive pyroxoline. The ship is anchored behind Electric hill. The Japanese, it continues, appear to have been informed by spies that the vessel is situated here and have been instructed to aim shells in this direction. Should a shell strike this ship it would annihilate the whole town.

The report is confirmed that the Japanese have entered Wiju, on the southern bank of the Yalu river. Koreans residing in Wiju informed the Japanese that the Russians on the upper reaches of the Yalu consist of but small parties. This tends to confirm the report that the Russians have left Korean soil and returned across the Yalu into Manchuria.

Tuesday the battle ship Virginia was launched.

Iron Ore Output Doubled.

The iron ore output of the United States has doubled in quantity during the past six years, according to the report of the geological survey. During 1902 the United States produced 35,554,415 long tons of iron ore, valued at $65,412,950, an increase of 23 per cent over the production of 1901, and of 103 per cent over 1897. The most significant feature is that 10,277,780 tons of iron came from eighteen mines, the shipping operations of all of which, with two exceptions, are limited by climatic conditions to about 200 days annually. One hundred and twenty-six operators produced 88 per cent of the product of the country.

Against the Coal Barons.

The case of the interstate commerce commission vs. Baird, commonly known as the anthracite coal case, was decided by the supreme court of the United States in favor of the contentions of the commission, the decision of the United States circuit court for the southern district of New York being reversed. This is the case instituted before the commission by W. R. Hearst, who alleged discrimination by the railroad company which reached the anthracite coal mines in Pennsylvania.

Last year the total product of pig iron in Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee amounted to 3,337,079 tons. In 1902 it was 3,934,124 tons, and in 1901 2,578,864.

A modern train of eighty cars will move 3,000 tons of freight, as against the 945 tons of a thirty-five car train of a decade ago.

FACTS VS. RAILROAD SLANDER.

In their efforts to defeat Mr. B. B. Comer and elect the railroads' representative, Mr. John V. Smith, the railroads have left unanswered the fact that local freight rates in Alabama are higher than in any adjoining state, and have resorted to vicious personal abuse of the people's candidate.

These slanders are a warning to the citizens of Alabama that both now and in the future any one sufficiently courageous to oppose the railroads' policies by endeavoring to protect the people's interests will be vilified by paid advertisements in the public press and by placards posted in the railroad depots of Alabama.

The railroads and their candidate, Mr. John V. Smith, are unable to give a satisfactory reason why Alabama local freight rates should be so much higher than the rates in our neighboring state, Georgia, and have therefore restorted to a campaign of slander that the people's attention may be taken from the real issue at stake.

Mr. Comer's platform is such a reduction in local freight rates as will enable the Alabama farmer to reach the consuming centers of the state with all farm products, and permit the manufacturing and distributing towns to return to the country dry goods, hardware, furniture, farming implements, fertilizers and all manufactured articles.

When a Tennessee farmer can ship corn from Nashville, Tenn., to Montgomery, Ala., 300 miles, for 13 cents per hundred pounds, and the farmer in Alabama is charged 17 cents per hundred pounds for shipping corn one-half the distance on the same railroad, there is little inducement to raise corn in Alabama.

When cotton can be shipped from central Alabama to Charlotte, N. C., 550 miles, cheaper than it can be shipped from the same point 150 miles to Alabama mills, there is little encouragement to build cotton mills in Alabama. When stoves made of Alabama iron in the Birmingham district pay a higher rate to south Alabama than is charged from St. Louis, Mo., and Louisville, Ky., for a haul of over 500 miles to the same point, stove making will not flourish in Alabama.

Below is a comparison of local freight rates as charged on the Southern railroad for a distance of 41 miles in Georgia and in Alabama. The figures given speak for themselves:

RATES PER HUNDRED POUNDS IN CENTS.

	Georgia	Alabama
Meats	13 1-2	19
Grain	7 1-2	12
Bagging	13 1-2	19
Boxes	34	44
Broom corn	7 1-2	29
Butter	20	44
Canned goods	25	32
Coffee	15	29
Cotton	17	26
Flour, per barrel	16 1-2	26
Fruits	15	20
Machinery	15	20
Mattresses	27 1-2	36
Meat	13 1-2	19
Syrup	9	29
Domestic	15	29
Harness and saddlery	30	38
Agricultural implements	15	20
Hay	7 1-2	12
Cotton ties	9	19

The southern railroad filed a statement January 18, 1904, before the South Carolina railroad commission showing comparison of local freight rates in six southern states, as charged by the Southern railway for distances from five to three hundred miles. This statement proved that Carolina fared well in comparison with other states, and that Alabama paid higher local freight rates on the Southern railway than any one of the six southern states in which that railroad operates.

In the face of this evidence introduced by the Southern railway in a sister state, the Southern railway and their candidate, Mr. John V. Smith, say to the people of Alabama that rates here are as low as they should be. Mr. Comer says such discrimination is unfair to Alabama, and local rates here should be reduced. What do you say?

We ask you to support for president of the railroad commission Mr. B. B. Comer, a man who for fifteen years has consistently contended for equitable freight conditions in Alabama; who has earnestly worked to make the position elective; who has come to the people with a statement of facts and who is a business man and the candidate of the shippers and consumers of the state.

The railroads desire to perpetuate the present excessive local rates and ask you to support Mr. John V. Smith, who has corrected none of the existing abuses, and who opposed the elective railroad commission.

If you believe the railroads should charge the people of Alabama for local freight service more than they charge the people of any other southern state, and that the railroads should dominate Alabama politics, vote for John V. Smith.

If the railroads should give to Alabama local rates equal to those enjoyed by our neighboring states; if the people of Alabama should dictate the policies and control the politics of our state, vote for B. B. Comer.

Bald Mountain, a small steep hill in the Tiboque valley, Maine, has disappeared. In its place a small lake exists. It is believed the mountain dropped out of sight during the earthquake of March 24th and that the tremor which then shook New England really had its birth in the Maine woods. Bald Mountain was an odd-shaped cone with extremely steep sides and was seldom explored. The general belief is that it was the crater of an extinct volcano. Around the base of the mountain small hot springs once existed, and the rock formation in the neighborhood bears evidence of volcanic origin.

THE LAKE ISLE OF INNISFRAE.

I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfrae,
And a small cabin build there, of clay and wattles made;
Nine bean rows will I have there, a hive for the honey bee,
And live alone in the bee-loud glade.

And I shall have some peace there, for peace comes dropping slow
Dropping from the veils of the morning to where the cricket sings;
There midnight's all a glimmer, and noon a purple glow,
And evening full of the linnet's wings.

I will arise and go now, for always night and day
I hear lake water lapping the low sounds by the shore;
While I stand on the roadway, or on the pavements gray,
I hear it in the deep heart's core.

THE PRICE OF FAME

By VIOLA LINDHOLM

Copyrighted, 1903, by The Authors Publishing Company.

This was Elizabeth Neilsen's first opportunity to hear a symphony concert. She was an observing young woman, and it was with an eager eye that she noticed the effect of the high vaulted ceiling from the center of which was suspended great circles of light which seemed like golden crowns for that surging mass of human faces everywhere about her.

It was the vista of trees that one saw just back of the stage, that caught Elizabeth's eye. It seemed as if she could hear the winds murmuring sweet sounds through those moving branches, or the twitter of birds darting here and there, and feel the warm sunlight casting long arrows of light through the green leaves. But her imaginative play of fancy was disturbed by the musicians coming in by twos and threes, and taking their accustomed places in the long rows of chairs arranged in a semicircle.

All was forgotten in the masterful program.

The concert leader followed, bowing and smiling to the continued applause, until Elizabeth felt sure his back would break.

But all was forgotten in the masterful program. The musicians responded to the baton of the director, as if he controlled them by some subtle power.

The climaxes of harmonious sound seemed to float upwards past the circles of light to part from the sympathetic strings from which they came.

Such magnificent tones as came from the throat of the soloist were a revelation to Elizabeth, and instinctively spurred her ambition to attain loftier heights. Had not her teacher that very day, spoken encouraging words, and told her there was a fortune in her voice, if she would but endure the years of technical study?

She was determined to be a great singer; one who would sing to human hearts and make them all better for having heard her. To the realization of her dream, there was but one obstacle, and her face grew serious as she thought of the unanswered letter—the last letter that was so full of tender pathos, urging her to remember that fame was not what the world required of her; and that she need not give up her heart and soul to her unrelentless ambition, when there was already a heart beating in unison with her own.

Elizabeth longed to be free and not be bound by any attachment except to her one theme—music. Yet, Stephen Strong had so often pointed out that she would tire of the long years of waiting and working before the plaudits of the world would crown her efforts.

She admired Stephen—yes, he was her ideal of manhood. At times she felt that the sun was shining all the brighter because of his love for her. Again, her heart was bitter toward him for being so unresponsive to her musical soul. He had often told her there was an ever-widening gulf between them, and that it was caused by her ambitions.

On one occasion he astonished her by saying he almost hated music, for the simple reason that Elizabeth seemed lost to him. And once, when she was playing the entrancing measures of "Weber's Invitation to the Dance," he had suddenly taken the music away and closed the piano. This incident was a shock to Elizabeth's sensitive nature, and she never could quite forget; neither could she quite understand his aversion to her music.

If either had only cultivated a better self-denial and patience, these virtues would have made each stronger and better able to understand the other's innermost soul.

For the next two or three days she practiced incessantly, singing her exercises with such fervor that a mocking bird, from his station in the large elm tree, which stood near Elizabeth's window, eyed her with such interest, and, as if in approval of her efforts, burst forth into joyful song.

The song of happiness from the bird acted as a stimulant to Elizabeth's hope, and she felt a joyous sense of her freedom.

It was all over between them, and she was glad she had no one to interfere with her plans. And he did not care so much after all, judging from the very cool and formal note in answer to her wish to cancel all relations between them.

It took years of unremitting work. Her daily routine was of the simplest nature, with so many self-denials and sacrifices never dreamed of, on the long road to fame. Oftentimes she was faint-hearted and weary of the struggle for success, and would fain have given up the goal for the sound of a tender voice, or the touch of an absent hand; but lacking this, she clung persistently to her faith in her own self to conquer, and yet be a great singer.

Six years had passed, and this was to be the night of her debut. The wintry air was piercing. Overhead the blue ether was studded with scintillating stars, which sang a measure of harmonious spheres.

Waves of pulsating music came from everywhere. Even the man with the street-piano, who took his stand near the crossing, had caught the vibrating waves of higher spheres and was playing in unusually sweet and measured time. One block further north from where the street musician held his court, there arose a massive stone building silhouetting its turrets and sharp pinnacles against the jewel-studded curtain of night. Its noble facade seemed to recede from the broad street, which was so wide that it gave one the impression of stretching far to the right, joining hands with the park. One's vision was broken, however, by the line of street cars, cabs and carriages, which poured forth increasing throngs who wended their way across the wide esplanade and up the terraced steps of the music hall.

Elizabeth's success was immediate and sure, for her singing and acting made a marked sensation. She infused her own intense personality into the character she was portraying.

In looking at her, one never seemed to remember anything of her face, except those eyes, which varied in expression, according to the intensity of her feeling.

Her sensitive mouth and broad chin indicated delicacy as well as determination. At times people had called her beautiful.

But what was it he was saying.

This was one of her inspired moments, for she not only looked radiant, but her singing was an inspiration to her audience, who were loth to leave, even after the last encore had been granted.

Back in her dressing room, where were large, fragrant bouquets for the evening's success, she would commune with her own heart for a few moments. Why this unsatisfied longing for something, she could not tell—surely her triumph had been glorious. She would whisper her heart-beats to the roses—perhaps they would understand.

Why did La France roses always recall, with a swift flight of memory, the evening when she had bade Stephen good-bye, and had given him, for dear remembrance sake, a pink rose? She wondered if he ever thought of the crushed rose, or if he ever thought of her.

Perhaps it was the scent of the roses, or was she dreaming? It could not be a fancy, for there in flesh and blood stood Stephen—his face a trifle grave, but still lit with the happiness of her grand achievement.

With a glad cry of joy, Elizabeth extended both hands, and felt the firm grasp of Stephen's hand, while he was congratulating her upon her grand success.

How infinitely happy she felt! But what was it he was saying? Wanted her to meet his Margaret! Had just arrived from a trip out West, and reached the city just in time for her debut!

Elizabeth felt her heart stop its wild beating—was she turning to stone?

He could not have felt her sense of weakness and utter helplessness, for he was still talking, in a far-off voice, and faintly she heard him tell her how proud they all were that she had attained her heart's desire.

With rare self-possession Elizabeth smiled, but in the depths of her heart she knew that love was the sweetest thing in all the world.

LEGACY NOT ALL A BLESSING.

Italian Inherits Thirty-four Cents and Pays Six Dollars in Fees.

In Italy it appears to be a somewhat expensive affair to inherit money, that is, if it be a small sum. Not long ago a young man died in the little town of Romagna, who left one lira fifty-eight centesimi, or not quite thirty-four cents. This sum, which had been deposited in the Postoffice Savings Bank, became the property of the young man's father. As the amount was so small the father thought it unnecessary to make a declaration of the legacy as the law prescribes, especially as the stamped paper on which the declaration must be made would cost about twenty-two centesimi more than the money involved.

Three months afterward he received a demand from the local state treasury for the payment of fourteen lire forty-eight centesimi—nearly three dollars. Thinking a mistake had been made, he took no notice of this demand, with the result that later an official called upon him and demanded the immediate payment of eighteen lire—three dollars and a half. The father had not sufficient money in hand so the official took possession of the man's furniture. The cost of this seizure brought the total sum to thirty lire, over six dollars, which the poor man had to pay that same evening to avoid the sale of his goods by auction.

WHERE HE DREW THE LINE.

Was Willing to Send Enemy Away, But Would Not Help Him Back.

Here is a good story told of the late United States Senator Sewell and Col. "Jim" Scovel. The colonel, who was a stirring orator, but very erratic, had been for years a thorn in Sewell's side when Sewell was commander-in-chief of the Republican forces of the state. They did not even know each other when they met on the streets. In time Scovel joined the Salvation Army and mellowed toward the senator enough to feel encouraged to ask Sewell for a pass to Chicago.

"I'll send it to you," the General said, and the next morning there was a letter in Scovel's mail from Sewell's West Jersey Railroad office.

Scovel dashed out the moment he broke the envelope seal.

"See here, General!" he exclaimed, as he rushed into the Senator's presence, "I have the pass to Chicago, but there is no return coupon to it."

"I am willing, sir," the Senator returned with freezing dignity, "I am willing, sir, to send you to Chicago. But I'm not —— fool enough to help you get back."

The old-time coolness was on again at once.—New York Times.

A Confession.

I've been down to the city, an' I've seen the 'lectric lights.
The twenty-story buildin's an' the other stunnin' sights;
I've seen th' trolley cars a-rushin' madly down the street,
An' all the place a-lookin' like a fairy-land complete.
But I'd rather see the big trees that's a-growin' up to home,
An' watch the stars a-twinklin' in the blue an' lofty dome;
An' I'd rather hear the wind that goes a-singin' past the door
Than the traffic of the city, with its bustle an' its roar.

I reckon I'm peculiar, an' my tastes is kind o' low;
But what's the use denyin' things that certainly is so?
I went up to a concert, an' I heard the music there;
It sounded like angelic harps a floatin' through the air.
Yet spite of all its glory an' the gladness an' acclaim,
If I stopped to think a minute, I was homesick jes' the same;
An' I couldn't help confessin', though it seems a curious thing,
That I'd rather hear a robin sweetly pipin' in the spring.
—Washington Star.

He Chose the Tombs.

Bishop E. S. Lines of Newark, while a guest of the Church club of this city, told this story to illustrate, as he said, the effort on the part of the clergy to keep the bishops humble.

"I was over to New York the other day," said the bishop, "and met on the street a young clergyman whom I had known in New England some time ago—a most estimable young man, but one who is inclined to take life very seriously. 'How do you do, J——,' said I. 'I am very glad to see you. Where are you located now?'

"'I am in the Tombs,' replied J——.

"'How fortunate it is that they let you out for a day so that I could have the pleasure of seeing you.'

"'Oh, not exactly that, you know. I had the choice of the chaplaincy of the Tombs or a parish in Newark, and I chose the Tombs.'"—New York Times.

ALL IN THE SAME BOX.

Little Juror's Appeal for Escape Was of No Avail.

The judge had his patience sorely tried by lawyers who wished to talk and by men who tried to evade jury service. Between hypothetical questions and excuses it seemed as if they never would get to the actual trial of the case. So when the puzzled little German who had been accepted by both sides jumped up the judge was exasperated.

"Shudge!" cried the German.

"What is it?" demanded the judge.

"I t'ink I like to go home to my vife," said the German.

"You can't," retorted the judge. "Sit down,"

"But, Shudge," persisted the German, "I don't t'ink I make a good shuror."

"You're the best in the box," said the judge. "Sit down."

"What box?" asked the German.

"The jury box," said the judge.

"Oh, I 'tought it vas a bad box that people gets in somedimes."

"No," said the judge; "the bad box is the prisoner's box."

"But, Shudge," persisted the little German, "I don't speak goot English."

"You won't have to speak at all," said the judge. "Sit down!"

The little German pointed at the lawyers to make his last desperate plea.

"Shudge," he said, "I can't make nodings out of what those fellers say."

It was the Judge's chance to get even for many annoyances.

"Neither can any one else," he said. "Sit down."

With a sigh the little German sat down.

The Deserted Cottage.

What do I see as I stand, in the sunshine, alone,
The door ajar in my hand, my foot on the threshold stone?
What do I hear in the wind, whispering under the eaves?
What do I hope to find—blossom, or fallen leaves?
Here, where the dulled, dim square of a window, long since blind,
Registers, unaware, the desoluate void behind;
Here, where a tangled rose, trailing across the latch,
Tenderly clings and grows up to the crumbling thatch.

Nay! but I see, but I hear, all that the years have wrought,
Laughter and smile, and tear; intimate jest and thought;
Voices of those long dead, footsteps of those afar,
Words that were left unsaid, kisses no time can mar.
If I should venture in, I, from the threshold stone,
Say, should I find the thin ghost of my youth alone?
Grasping at joys long fled, would not the silence be Sinister, mocking, grim—crushingly near to me?
Whisper thy sighs, O wind, Roses, thy door defend;
I, on the road of Life, I will go on—to the end.
All that we hold we lose, all that we give is given;
We shall find our own Beyond, and the finding will be—Heaven.

Good and Sufficient Reason.

Senator Joseph Bailey of Texas was stopped by a Texan in his daily walk down Pennsylvania avenue:

"Senator, I'd like a little chat with you," said he.

"I do not know you. What can I do?" was the reply.

"I am one of your constituents, and I want a consular job. I've written you to send me a Moji—"

"Indeed. That's thoughtful of you. Why didn't you say Szze-Chu-un?"

"I—I would have, Senator," came the faltering reply, "if I'd only known how to spell it!"—New York Times.

William Parker of Whitman, Mass., spent a day on Hobart pond, near the pumping station, and caught something like half a ton of hornpouts. Four large barrels of the fish were sent by freight that night to a Boston dealer. Parish Without an Inhabitant.

There is in London a parish that does not contain a single inhabitant. This is the parish of St. Christopher le Stock, which extends over the open space in front of the Mansion house and the Royal exchange, and includes the corner of the Bank of England. Its electoral lists and valuation lists have to be made up and duly signed, just as in the case of other parishes.

Another Plagiarism.

"That was a pleasant afterthought of yours," remarked the old preacher who had listened to a sermon by one of his younger brethren, "when you drew upon the analogies of nature to prove the immortality of the soul."

"An afterthought?" said the younger clergyman, in some perplexity.

"Yes. You thought of it about 2400 years after Socrates."

Is Your Diamond Real?

"This is an age of imitations, particularly of gems, and the amount of imitation precious stones on the market is enormous," I am told by W. A. Gill, the well-known jeweler, "and the assertion is continually made by dealers in these commodities that it would require the services of an expert to determine the real from the false. With regard to diamonds, the belief is general that this is entirely true, but never did the general public entertain a greater error.

"There are certain simple tests to which anyone may submit a stone alleged to be a genuine diamond and determine almost instantly the truth or falsity of the claim made for it. A real diamond will not be acted on by acids or alkalis in the least and may be placed in a liquid containing these substances without injury to it. There are other simpler and easier tests, however, which require nothing in the way of testing materials that a person cannot find in any household without the need of a visit to the druggist. These, too, are practically infallible, for I have never heard of an imitation that would answer to them.

"In the first just take a small of silk and rub the alleged di vigorously for a moment and acquire a sufficient amount of electricity to attract bits of wood ton or paper, exactly as a magn attract particles of metal.

"In the second test place th mond in a position where it is ex to the sun's rays for a while and remove it to a dark room. If diamond is genuine it will gl the darkness with a distinct phorescence, but if it is imitat will have no phosphorescent qua whatever—will look in the dar just like a piece of glass.

"The third test is undoubtedly best of the three. A diamond only single refraction; that is, it but a single image of any object through it. When the diamond is before a candle or bright light the one light will be visible to th through its substance. An imit diamond, no matter how cunning has been contrived, will give a m of images, just like a piece of glass."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Inns Many Years Old

Somehow one always hears with regret that one of England's famous old moss-grown, ivy-clad inns is about to be demolished. The Old King of Prussia hostelry is the latest to pass into the housebreaker's hands. This old inn is in Finchley, and from 1757, when the place was built, until the present day the license has been in the keeping of one family—perhaps a record in the licensing annals of England.

The Old King of Prussia is a picturesque half-timbered house, and many a noted highwayman has partaken of its hospitality. The grandfather of the present proprietor was quite a noted character, having vanquished several notorious highwaymen on Finchley Common. It is on record that he once had an encounter with Dick Turpin.

Round and about London and its ever extending suburbs there may still be seen inns and taverns of great age and interesting associations.

The Angel Inn, Highgate hill, dates back to the time of the Reformation. Originally it was called the Salutation Inn. It is built entirely Another famous inn, is the Raced Stag, at Edgware. No knows when it was originally and it would seem as though each cessive proprietor has endeavore place his mark on its architec aspect, for many parts of it have dently at different times been re In the stables, it is alleged, Dick pin had his horse's shoes turned as to make his pursuers imagine had gone in an opposite direction.

Among the very oldest of subsistence London inns are the Plough, at K bury Green, and the King James Tinker Inn, at Enfield. The first said to be 850 years old, and the la was reputed to have been first as an inn and under another name years ago.

Its present name is derived from encounter which King James I. is to have had with a tinker at door of the inn. The tinker's con sation so pleased the king that made the mender of kettles "a kn with five hundred a year," the rec of Enfield inform us.

Youth's Pride and Joy

In these days of great achievements heroes are as thick as bees
Buzzing in the springtime sweetness of the flowering locust trees,
And upon their telltale faces we can note a look of pride
Which their sense of innate modesty is powerless to hide.
But there's not a look of triumph glinting from a hero eye
That in gleaming satisfaction tinged with soulful pride can vie
With the self-important glances of a fellow when they flash
Down along his nasal annex at his first mustache.

Never was a newborn infant watched by loving mother's eyes
With more tender apprehension than this capillary prize
When it timidly is peeping from the nudeness of a dip.
As if fearful it could never hold its infant downy grip.

And the author of its being, how joicingly he stares
At the silky down that cannot yet dignified as hairs,
And he wouldn't swap position with bloted man of cash
As he watches the accouchement of first mustache.

Half a dozen times a minute you see his fingers glide
To caress the downy softness he has most glorified.
And he tenderly will smooth it and pull it to and fro
As if he by loving fondles would en age it to grow.
All the well-earned pride of heroes of men in lofty sphere
Must get out of the procession and up the straggling rear
When compared with pride that's ing in a fellow when the gash
In his features is upholstered with first mustache!

HIS ARTISTIC SOUL SHOCKED.

Theater Manager's Rebuke More Humorous Than Pathetic.

A theatrical manager who has acquired some notoriety by reason of his pugilistic tenedencies met Arnold Daly on Broadway shortly before the first production of "Candida" and made some inquiries regarding the young actor's contemplated venture.

"I say," was his inquiry, "what's this 'Candida' that they say you're going to appear in?"

Daly, who had a complete knowledge of this manager's unfamiliarity with matters relating to that sort of drama that is ordinarily described as art, replied glibly:

"Well, I'll tell you, but please don't give it away. 'Candida' is the name of a new breakfast food that is to be put on the market. The firm that is going to manufacture it is paying me a lot of money to do the piece in order to familiarize the public with name of its product. See?"

The manager's brow contracted.

"Um, yes," he said, finally. "I pose there is money in it for you. say, the idea doesn't strike me as ing very artistic."—New York Tim

A new box shown in the figure holds a little more than a bushel. A special feature is the panel ends. These make the package lighter and stronger than if the ends were of one solid thick piece, the panels acting as braces and making handles. The best way to get these boxes is in the form of shooks. They are easily put together by any one who can handle hammer and nails.

Making boxes is entirely different from putting barrels together. We never recommend any one to attempt this unless he has had some experience at cooperage business, as barrel staves are as contrary things as one can imagine. Box shooks may be stored in some clean place and take but little room. Now that Eastern manufacturers are getting into the apple box business we expect to see the odd size mongrel boxes displaced by something nearer uniform, though it may take several seasons to learn just what size and form are best adapted to our needs. The form must be governed by convenience in storage, handling and shipment and the size by the demand of the trade, which we believe is best satisfied by a bushel or a little over. The chances at present are that it will pay to hold the best of the apples and box them for winter shipment. It will never do to put inferior apples in boxes. This is a new package in most markets, and more than one season may be required to make buyers familiar with it. The "bulk" shipment of fruit is rarely satisfactory in the long run. If a man has a good lot of choice apples we should advise him to try the box shipment. There may not be much in it the first season, but this package is sure to come into use, concludes Rural New Yorker in giving the foregoing advice.

Poultry Notes.

Prevention is better than physics, especially in the poultry yard.

Keep plenty of grit where the fowls can eat what they want at any time.

The small poultry yards and houses need more attention than the larger ones.

Many of the poultry diseases are the result of crowding and unclean surroundings.

Lazy men make bad poultry men. Only hustling, busy, wide-awake men ever succeed.

All fowls that you do not intend to winter should be sold before cold weather sets in.

Theory works very poorly in the poultry yard. You need good, sound sense, coupled with experience.

Do not imagine that you know all about the poultry business. It takes years of experience to insure success.

Be kind to the poultry and teach every hen to love and know you. Results will tell of every little favor shown.

Dark skin fowls are just as sweet and juicy as the yellow. 'Tis not the color that makes the favorite fowl for the table.

Charcoal is very beneficial to the fowls, and you never see a case of indigestion where the fowls are given access to it.

A Culinary Problem.

In a co-educational college, near Chicago, the senior class recently decided to give an old-fashioned "sociable" for which the girls of the class should provide the supper. To two of them was assigned the task of bringing doughnuts of their own manufacture.

For several days they went about with puckered foreheads, evidently wrestling with some mighty problem. Their study, which had been a haven of peace, resounded through long evenings with argument and expostulation.

At last, when their relations were somewhat strained, they applied to a court of arbitration to settle their differences. Mrs. Smith, wife of one of the professors, was taken into their confidence.

"Mrs. Smith," begged one of them, "won't you settle a dispute for us? It's about doughnuts, and I can't convince Anna that I'm right. She thinks they ought to be fried in milk!"

"And what would you do with them?"

"Why, I know just what to do. I've been in the kitchen and seen Imogene cook them. You fry them in water, of course, in a whole kettleful."

Woman's Realm

Notes by a Woman.

There are lots of people of ability and ambition who complain that every field is overcrowded, and there seems to be no way of breaking in. Everybody has to hustle and make his or her own little corner in the world. The first thing to do is to prove one's right to do it. Then work, work, work. The best paintings are yet to be painted; the best books are yet to be written; the sweetest song yet to be composed. Perhaps it is not one's destiny to be the greatest, but there are modest successes well worth having. One's best is the least one can give. Don't be limited in what you do by the work of even the greatest. They were but men and women, and I warrant you hard workers. Claim your own place in the world and don't allow yourself to be dispossessed if you've won fairly.

The busiest person in the world, and the person who gets the least credit for industry, is the woman who is trying to keep up with the fashions.

Womankind has but a short space in which to enjoy the interval between paying for the last of her winter's finery and the first of the spring ones.

An auction of unmarried ladies used to take place annually in Babylon. In every district they assembled on a certain day of every year all the virgins of marriageable age. The most remarkable was first put up, and the man who bid the largest sum of money gained possession of her. The second in personal appearance followed, and the bidders gratified themselves with handsome wives according to the depth of their purses. But, alas! it seems that there were in Babylon some ladies for whom no money was likely to be offered, yet these also were disposed of, so provident were the Babylonians. When all the beautiful virgins were sold, the cried ordered the most deformed to stand up; and after he had openly demanded who would marry her with a small sum, she was at length adjudged to the man who would be satisfied with the least, and in this manner the money arising from the sale of the handsome served either as a portion to those who were either of disagreeable looks, or that had any other imperfections. This custom prevailed about 500 years before Christ.

Through English Eyes.

In the vernacular of the day, we are "it," dear girls, for here is an English paper doing us, after the following fashion: "As to the analysis of her charm, it lies partly in the American girl's 'curious independence of personality' and partly in her 'supreme unconsciousness.'" Apropos of the latter quality, the article in question continues: "She takes the attention of men for granted, as her natural woman's right; she asks not for admission to equality; she neither demands nor maneuvers for their notice; she simply takes their respect and homage for granted, and by her very fearlessness and trust secures their admiration and their fealty, and so a man can show his pleasure in her society and seek it and enjoy it in the perfect confidence that she will not think she is the object of his special regard. Englishmen seek out girls only when they are in love with them; American men seek out girls for the pleasure of their company.

"But there is a reverse side to the picture; and we see it when the girl has left her throne of girlhood and stepped down into the hustling throng of women. The bright activity of mind grows into restlessness; her social instincts lead her to become gregarious in excess; and she flocks to the countless women's clubs that overrun America to such an extent that it would seem as if an American woman cannot cook a dinner, rear a child or read a book unless she joins a society to help her do it!

"And yet the amazing fact remains that, from the nervous, club-rushed American mother the spoilt, precocious child is born, who shoots up into her heritage of royalty and becomes again—the American Girl."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Paris Tea Rooms.

For the ordinary person who is not given over heart and soul either to milliners or to museums, who does not conceive Paris to be solely the apothesis either of chiffon or of culture, perhaps the most perfect consolation to be found in winter is in the tea-rooms. All the more important hotels boast a tea-room, that of the Elysee Palace being notable for its elegance and enormous extent. Almost the whole of the ground floor of this great caravansary is set with tea-tables arranged among a forest of palms and exotic plants. An agreeable orchestra discourses light music which invariably includes, with thoughtful regard for the American numbers—that is to say, a coon song and a Sousa march. Everywhere the Old World conception of what Americans value in art is as painful to our vanity as it is the contrary to the truth.

One would believe that literally tout le monde goes to the Elysee Palace for tea, such crowds of well-turned-out men and women gather there. But this is cosmopolis, and it is to a smaller, less ornate resort that the vraie Parisienne will conduct you—to Columbin's, a patisserie just off the Rue de Rivoli. Ravishing toilettes, beauties that, after the French fashion, are both fearfully and wonderfully made, personages distinguished in the social world—all this is to be seen at Columbin's under conditions of a peculiar sort of intimacy.—Harper's Bazar.

The First Riding Lesson.

The pupil of a good riding master is usually disappointed at not being allowed to do more in the first lesson. She expects to mount the horse at once, start off with a trot and wind up with a canter. She is a little annoyed upon finding that the first lesson consists almost wholly of oral instruction and a great part of it on foot at that. If the master is conscientious he will not permit the anxiety to be off and doing to interfere with a proper understanding of the A B C of the art. Should the beginner apply at one of the big riding academies in New York for instruction, the first lesson will begin with the leading by a groom of a horse, bridled and saddled, into the center of the ring. The riding master and the pupil take their stand close by, and the former begins to explain painstakingly the various parts of the saddle and bridle and their purposes. Before anything further is attempted, the pupil must be able to answer simple questions in regard to the pommel and the cantle, the curb and the snaffle, and to know the uses of the two bits.

The American Woman.

The impression made upon visiting foreigners by a certain phase of social life in America finds interesting expression in an article by Henry W. Lucy ("Toby, N. P.") in Harper's Weekly. "There is nothing in London society," he notes, "equal to the tremenduous efforts the American woman of recognized position puts into a day's work. New York society women are more in evidence than their London sisters, more self-reliant. They are, save in respect of funds, less dependent upon fathers and husbands. They pitch their voices higher in conversation, and they are not so studious in the effort to obtain quiet effect in dress." "Toby" sees no reason why, although they are not men, women should not wear men's hats, sailor-knotted neckties, horsey breastpins, gay waistcoats and cut-away coats; he also implies, quite plainly, that he does not see why they should wear these things.

About Eyelashes.

Nature must feel somewhat cheap when she sees how she is outwitted by modern science. Beauty-making is certainly entitled to be reckoned among the sciences.

The happy time has not yet arrived when we can go into a shop and buy ourselves a new face, as we can for the dollies. But such a possibility is, perhaps, not far off.

In the meantime, there are beauty scientists to offer every solace where nature has been faulty. The latest thing is the false eyelashes.

It seems it is no longer necessary for a lady to dye and coax her lashes into luxuriant growth; she has only to buy new ones and add them to her own.

They are quite effective, and warranted "to give a most brilliant lustre to the eye by their backward curl."

FASHIONS OF THE DAY

Shepherd plaids in velvet appears for spring wear.

The fair Parisian is wearing mitts with her dinner toilet.

Now and then a really smart little stock is to be picked up for a quarter.

As a consequence of the full skirt vogues the waistline must move higher up.

Some of the new French organdies look like misty, delicate pictures of rose gardens.

Pelerines of heavy venise or Irish lace over white chiffon and brocade are elegant accessories.

Among all the variety of pocket handkerchiefs in the shops it would be hard to find an ugly one.

Knitted waistcoats with lined and padded sleeves of taffeta in the same color are useful accessories.

To get the most approved effect from your long fur stole, curl the ends in two soft loops about the wrists.

Very smart little hats are the Napoleon shapes of white felt or angora with just a touch of gilt in the trimming.

The cotton and silk mixtures continue to come in. Among them flecked tissue de soleil silk gauzes, satin lisse and pointille cotton are familiar in name, but are much more beautiful this year than before.

A light mode brown satin straw turban to sit well over the face has a rolling brim wider in the back than in the front and flattened against the crown in the back. A fold of brown chiffon velvet fills the space between the brim and crown, and a fold of velvet helps to hold the flatness in the back.

POPULAR SCIENCE

The shark holds the record for long distance swimming. A shark has been known to cover 800 miles in three days.

A sealed bottle containing four pints of liquid air was sent from Berlin to Geneva, but on arrival it was found that three and a half pints had evaporated.

Heart disease and nervous prostration are almost unknown among the Japanese. This immunity is attributed to the equanimity and cheerfulness of the Japanese.

Electric incandescent lamps have been supposed to be perfectly safe in surgical operations, but a reeent explosion of ether vapor was traced to the spark made at contact in turning on the light.

With the aid of a strong electric light Louis Bonjon, of Paris, has succeeded in taking photographs 140 feet below the surface of the ocean. With improved apparatus he expects to be able to take pictures 300 feet below the surface, or 100 feet deeper than divers go.

A reddish ring inclosing a whitish glare was seen around the sun after the Krakatoa eruption of 1883, and has been named Bishop's ring. Keen observers have noted a similar appearance in recent months. This ring had a diameter of seventy degrees in August, 1902, but had diminished to twenty degrees in December, 1903.

WOOD WORKERS.

The Primitive Way of Lumber Reduction in the Philippines.

In the big lumber mills of America they think nothing of reducing great pine sticks to kindling wood in a few minutes, and the millman is merely required to see that the stick is secured straight in the carriage. Such a man, says a writer in Everybody's Magazine, would be bewildered if compelled suddenly to follow the Philippine method of lumber reduction. There the largest sticks are sawed by hand.

Even woods as hard as teak are set upon a frame, and two laborers monotonously pull a big saw through its tough length for days and days, until they have produced the slabs of which Eastern furniture is made. Yet, in spite of the length of time necessary to achieve such a result, these woods are exported to civilized countries at good profit.

After the lumber is cut into comparatively small pieces, it is sold to the native carpenters and builders to be erected into houses. But the native carpenter has a task before him that calls for the exercise of greater skill than is required of his fellow craftsman in the United States. The modern carpenter is little more than a joiner of parts. The intricate moldings and beadings used in our houses are made in mills by machinery, and come ready finished to the joiner's hand. All he has to do is to put them together.

The carpenter of the far East receives the wood in the rough, exactly as it is left by the sawyer. He, or a fellow tradesman, must carve his moldings before they can be placed in the houses. In India, China, Syria and adjacent countries these clever artisans may be seen working with tools as primitive almost as those used in the days before America was discovered. Occasionally an enterprising native will introduce a small piece of Western-made machinery, but not often. Lathes are everywhere employed, but they are not the steel article exported from the United States. The wood to be turned is secured in a spindle; a cord attached to a flexible stick is given a turn or two around it; the other end of the cord is drawn taut, and the resulting bow is worked backward and forward. The effect of this is to whirl the wood rapidly, when it may be easily shaped by means of knives and chisels.

Sanitation of an Ant City.

Insects are scrupulously clean in their personal toilet, and often brush, comb and wash themselves—a service for which they are admirable adapted with natural implements. This habit is transferred to communal affairs. The streets within the city bounds and the gates and external plaza and "country roads" leading into the foraging fields—as with agricultural ants—are kept free from filth and obstructions that might gather filth. The constant washings and combings of baby ants by the nurses would satisfy the most fastidious maternal taste. One may not say that sanitation is an exact emmetonian science, but it certainly is an art thoroughly practiced in every department of the formicary, and brought to perfection as far as natural conditions will permit. Every insect citizen takes part in this service. All ants unite to keep their civic precincts clean.—Harper's Magazine.

Fate of Five Deserters.

Five deserters from the German army who were recently arrested at Ostrowo, near the Russian frontier, have had singular experiences. Nearly seven years ago they deserted from their regiment and made their way across the frontier to Siberia. After bearing the rigors of Siberian prison life for four years they managed to escape, and after a year of incredible hardships and singular adventures they struggled back to the German frontier and made their way to Ostrowo, where they were promptly arrested. Their appearance is that of broken-down old men.

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?

IMPORTANT

THE PEOPLE'S PRIMARY WILL BE HELD ON TUESDAY, JULY 26th, 1904.

FLAP-DOODLE.

What is flap-doodle? The stuff they feed fools on. And what made us think of that stuff was the reading of the address from the county democratic committee issued last week. It is composed of the veriest rhodomontade, clap-trap all the way through. "Passing down the highway of time"—isn't that too sweet for anything? But it don't eut any ice. There isn't anything the matter with Chilton county, except that there are a couple of "risings" in the court house which the people will lance in the November election. Chilton has "home rule" and intends to continue in that way. True, there are few counties with her in this state, but there would be many more if it had not been for the outrageous robberies committed by the democrats in past years. Not being able to scare or cheat Chilton, the democrats are trying to coax her into their web: "Come into my parlor, said the spider to the fly; its's the prettiest little parlor that ever you did spy" Yes, and when Mr. Fly is fool enough to listen to the siren song and walks into the trap, the bloated old villain of a spider soon has him securely bounds in the toils. No, not any for us, thank you. The democratic party in this state will soon fall apart; their national organization is rent with factional fights; there is the Bryan faction, the Cleveland faction, the reorganizers' faction, and so forth and so on. The party in Alabama will (if the signs don't fail) get a facer before the ides of November that will stagger it. The independent voters of Chilton will continue on their straight path (even if it is a little narrow) and will elect their own officials, only taking care this year to elect those that are SOUND ALL THROUGH, not like some in the past with a little peoples' varnish on a "doty" democratic body.

DON'T.

Don't allow any one to talk you into participating in the democratic primady on next Monday. Stay away from the polls on that day and the PEOPLE will have their primary on July 26th. Don't forget.

JEMISON.

Editor Union—I see an appeal from the democratic executive committee begging populists to participate in the democratic primary, and before they get through they get very sympathetic, wind up with the Lord's prayer. They set themselves up as great political advisers for the populists. Don't think they are capable of advising for themselves. Now, if the democrats are sincere in wanting to unite the two parties in Chilton, why did they not meet the populist committee and offer some kind of a union? But far from it; they have never said one word to the populist committee, and if the populist committee was to meet and decide to go in their primary they would at once set about to get them out, just as they did in 1892. Look! the other day the populists had a meeting advertised for weeks and see how the democrats did: got out a circular the night before for a democratic rally to unite the people, etc. Your committee met and not a single democrat went before them nor sent any kind of a proposition by any member of the committee. No, populists, they have shown clearly that they don't want you as a party, but only want enough to confuse and destroy your party and to elect their ticket. They speak of General Lee when he was whipped etc., but he did not join the enemy and go to shooting back at the old confederates. They ought to have spoken of Benedict Arnold. They say we populists can help elect president of the railroad commission. Yes, they would like to get you bound hand and foot to support a railroad lawyer. They say political parties should not be governed by prejudice, but by principle. Where is the principle in the democratic party? One year they curse and abuse an idea or a man and the next year take them up. Just two years ago they had a great deal to say about the negro; said the opposition would put him on juries, etc. Now look down in Dallas county, just below us, and in the heart of the black belt, they have put negroes on every panel of their juries. Yes, the democrats have tried hard to fool the people of Chilton county and destroy their organization, but so far they've been foiled. In conclusion I will say there are more men going to help elect the people's ticket this year than have helped in years; fact is, I don't know of a single one that has left our party and gone to the democrats, except they had tried to get an office with the populists and failed, or wanted an office and knew they could not get it in the populist party. And when the democrats are begging you to vote for them in their primary, ask them if they will vote for you and see how bad they want to harmonize. Yes, they want the harmony that gives them all the offices. All the people have to do is to stand together and go out in the JULY PRIMARY and nominate a good ticket, and they will elect it. Populists, what could you get out of a democratic primary? Could you nominate a single populist? No, not one. You could help nominate a democrat and throw up your hat for the nominees and hurrah a little, but when it came to getting an office you would get left. I would like to know when and where did the democrats ever offer to divide the offices with the populists. All I've ever heard is they are perfectly willing for the populists to vote for their men, but they must have the offices. They are frank enough to admit they can't elect their ticket without populist help, but the democrats have great hopes that there will be two tickets in the field against them, and they are certainly doing all they can to get out two. But I think there will be only one ticket, as I am sure that the people of Chilton are too anxious to defeat them to put out two tickets. Yours respectfully,

L. H. REYNOLDS.

Thorsby, Ala., April 4, '04.

Editor Union:

Don't it tickle you? Why, it's enough to tickle any one, about the demmies wanting the pops to go in with them and have a mess of harmony, and aren't they having it, though, such as cats and dogs have in the back yard! Think of Smith challenging Adams to a discussion of which of the two has the best right to be probate judge! Why, I would not give either of them a red copper for their chance, to say nothing of their right. You know the story of the cats that stole the cheese—well, now, since the demmies say they want harmony and are unable to have it among themselves, tell them to come over with the people, i. e., all but some demmies, and we will show them how to harmonize, for there never was greater harmony among the people. Everybody is waking up and enthusiasm is prevalent, and they are all united and every man to his post, and I think the woods will be full of candidates after a while and the people can have their choice in the primary, and the longest pole will get the persimmon, so hurry on, boys, and name your man for what you want him to have. But ho! what's that I hear? Why, some fellow said there would be a straight republican ticket put out soon. Now, that is all bosh, and if you hear anything like that tell those fellows that to look on the inside of it and they will find a democratic trick.

X-RAY.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Editor Union:

I noticed in the Banner a few weeks ago a letter written from Lily and signed "Old Confederate Soldier," in which he said "he could not see how any one could vote a republican ticket who knew what republicanism meant," and to go "with him across Mason and Dixon's line and he would show us that it meant riding in the passenger coach with the negro, and eating at the same table in the hotel, and mixed schools, etc." I think that if he has not got more knowledge about where Mason and Dixon's line is at than most democrats have about political affairs, he would not know when he got there if we were to go with him. He seems to think the republican is the only party that has any social communication with the negro, so I expect it would add to his knowledge to read the following article cut from a North Carolina paper:

"Thomas E. Watson, the historian and ex-member of congress, who, because of his retirement from active political life, possesses unusual influence among the people of the south, in an open letter to the Atlanta News declared that Cleveland was worse than Roosevelt on the negro question. Mr. Watson's letter in part is as follows:

"'Mr. Cleveland denies that C. H. J. Taylor lunched or dined at his table. Certain newspapers devoted to Mr. Cleveland print his letter under scare headlines which announce that "No negro ever ate at Cleveland's tables." In saying this they unwittingly go too far, and they make trouble for their oracle. He did not say that "No negro ever ate at my table." He confined his denial strictly to Taylor.

"'It might not be fair to recall instances where colored congressmen dined at the white house, at state dinners, but it is perfectly fair to remind Mr. Cleveland of Fred Douglas. This negro, who had married a white woman (of a certain sort), was not only treated with official consideration, but when Mr. Cleveland (with extreme delicacy) had his bride come to the white house that he might wed her there, he invited Fred Douglas and his wife to attend the reception. This reception was not a state function. It was social, purely. No one had the right to be present save those invited, and surely Mr. Cleveland must have respected his lovely and accomplished bride too much to have summoned any man or woman he did not consider his or her social equal. It does not appear that he invited either his coachman or his cook.

"'Fred Douglas, whose color proclaimed the African, was present among the guests, and with him came his white wife.

"'Not only did Mr. Cleveland do this kind of thing in Washington, but when governor of New York he signed the bill providing for mixed schools. Owing to this system, which he thus approved, negro children have been injected into the white schools, and white children have been compelled to submit to negro teachers.

"'If this is not social equality, what is it?

"'What does that system of co-education lead to inevitably?

"'To the southern white people nothing could be more odious than this forcible bringing together, on terms of absolute equality, little white girls and little negro boys.'"

"Where rolls the Oregon" and hears above his own dashings the hum of industry an exposition is to be held in 1905 to celebrate the centenary of the Lewis and Clark expedition. It was this expedition, sent out by President Jefferson in 1803 and reaching the mouth of the Columbia two years later, which blazed a way for the great tide of transcontinental travel. Capts. Lewis and Clark were the first Americans to penetrate overland to the point in the far northwest reached by the adventurous Yankee skipper by rounding Cape Horn some 13 years previous. They added to the national domain an area now comprising Oregon, Washington and Idaho and parts of Montana and Wyoming. Oregon alone now buys from New York and the tributary manufacturing region goods to the value of $75,000,000 annually. Portland, where the exposition will be held, has a population of 90,000, and the state of 413,000, as against 13,000 in 1850.

Mr. B. B. Comer, who is flooding the State with circulars in advocacy of his candidacy for President of the Railroad Commission, will be either a very dangerous man (as Mr. Vandiver of Montgomery characterizes him) in that position or a veritable demagogue.

He is either making promises to oppress the railroads for the purpose of catching the votes of the uninformed or he will hurt the State and every interest in it if he should be elected. He is too extreme, too radical to make a good officer for the people. We need the railroads to better enable us to develop the great resources of our State. We can not find where their property in this State has paid any fair dividends, and we do want them to prosper. We do want better tracks, better service. We do want the probability of disastrous accidents reduced to a minimum, but we can not have all these things if they are forced to put down their rates to a point where there is no returns for betterment(interest on bonds and current expenses.

How can we induce capital to come into our State and build railroads for us if we have a Commission that will not allow them to make a living, so to speak?

Wilcox Progressive Era.

The people of Alabama are fair-minded and just. They will not be swayed by blind prejudice and lose their heads at a time when our State needs deliberation wisdom and prudence. The question now is not shall freight rates be reduced? But shall justice and reason be set aside and the interests of the railroads that enter the State be arraigned before a tribunal that convenes to convict. Men of Alabama, beware, your interests are at stake.

Georgiana Enterprise

The facts are clear, a vote for B. B. Comer means a vote against the progress and development of our State.

Hartford Times-Herald.

The railroads are not asking that the people elect a man to the position of president of the Railroad Commission who will not look after the people's interest, they are simply asking that B. B. Comer, a man whose proven character as an extremist and as an enemy to the railroads, is not elected. This position can only be filled by one who can make fair and impartial decisions between the rights of the railroads and the rights of the people. The railroads have done too much towards the development of our State for us to requite them by placing B. B. Comer in this responsible position.

Besides the fact that Mr. Comer has [illegible] on record as an [illegible] in the growth and prosperity of the State, for a complete suspension of railroad building in the State, and to force the railroads to take part in the election of the law-making powers of the State and the practical control of future Legislatures. The voter should think well ere he makes his choice for the latter condition.

Is Our Friend Comer Sincere in His Arbitrary Position?

The Labor Advocate, Birmingham, Ala., March 19, 1904.

The Campaign Committee of our friend B. B. Comer is yet flooding the country with literature that makes the bold statement that a vote for Comer is a vote for lower freight rates. This statement is as arbitrary as has been the actions of the aforesaid, "our friend" B. B. Comer, during his business career in Birmingham.

We would first consider the question of whether or not a vote for Comer is a vote for lower freight rates. The laws on this question are definite and the President of the Commission can have a vote only in the case of a tie, and it would be impossible for him to become a Czar and rule absolute, as he does the Avondale Mills, as in Alabama we are not looking for Czars, political bosses or "turn everything upside down" people. Would it be a reasonable proposition for the railroads who employ thousands of men to have their incomes so decreased that they could not modernize their lines and maintain living wages for their employes and give to the public that efficient service that should be expected? As an organ of working men it is of course to our interest to look out for their interests, and their interests are certainly in having the best possible wage and the safest working conditions to be obtained. So much for the arbitrary proposition of reducing rates, or rule or ruin policy, that our friend Comer is making a slogan.

From best facts obtainable Comer goes on the theory that meat on one day a week is enough for any worker. In the enterprises of which he has had the controlling hand, the lowest possible wage to sustain life in his serfs is paid. These facts should and will be presented to the voters of Alabama. We have no partisan interest in this question and there are not in Birmingham any more willing than ourselves to have the freight rates properly adjusted, so that the consumer as well as the jobber, wholesaler and the shipper from our territory will be benefited. We are as unwilling to see a man placed in this office whose record for fairness towards the mass of the people has placed him in an unenviable position in the eyes of our wage-workers.

Is he sincere, and if sincere, how could the greatest benefit be derived from one who is so arbitrary as is shown in his utterances in this campaign?

Children work for 10 cents a day or 60 cents a week (66 hours per week) in the Avondale Cotton Mills, of which B. B. Comer is President and High Mogul, and 10 cents a day will not purchase the necessaries of life for any healthy child, much less dressing them in a raiment that would fit them to attend a Sunday School. Yet this same man, only a short while back—not far enough back for it not to be fresh in the memory of those who love the cause of humanity—proposed to endow a Chinese Sunday School, or to fit up a room for our fair women who from a mistaken idea of duty, would go and sit in the same seat and try to instill Christianity into the head of the heathen who has his own idol and is the greatest peril known today to the Caucasian race in the world. This is our friend Comer. It should be easy to draw your own conclusions.

"Broad Guaged, Unbiased, Conservative"

Bessemer Weekly.

Are the terms used by the Democratic Conservative Club of Montgomery in expressing its views as to a proper man for President of the State Railroad Commission. We believe that all good, fair-minded citizens can conscientiously subscribe to the necessity of such qualifications for that very important and responsible position.

It would be an ignoble and a suicidal policy for the people of this State to war against railroads or to take any action that would prejudice their proper interest. Railroads should have nothing to fear from the people of Alabama. They are the strongest supporters of our progress—the very instigators of advancement and development. We cannot afford to treat them other than justly.

Hence in the administration of mutual interests of the people's and the railroads' road-gauged unbiased and conservative instrumentalities only should be utilized. A biased, prejudiced, vindictive man is utterly unfit for any judicial or administrative position. The

In the matter of selecting the personnel of the Railroad Commission the voter should be guided by the highest sense of fairness to every interest. We are not a special pleader for any corporate interest against individual interest, or vice versa, because in equity and morals each possess equal rights and one cannot be infringed by the other rightfully. No man who has personal interests to serve, we hold, is a proper person to serve on the Commission, hence Mr. B. B. Comer should not be elected to the Presidency of the Commission. Alabama cannot afford in any way to injure the railroads just now when the doors of development are being thrown open. For the position of President or member of the body men who are interested in conserving the best interests of all alike should be selected, and we know of no better man to succeed President Smith than President Smith himself.

Sylacauga Progress.

The Progress would like to ask Mr. Comer if he was not benefited by the perpetration of the fraud. Why he took so much trouble to gather up meal sacks and pay freight on them to Carters Creek to be filled with flour and sent back to him? Is it not the custom of millers to mark each and every sack of flour in large letters, for advertising purposes; and if he was not benefited by the saving of 8c per barrel on the flour, how could he have undersold his competitors, and forced them to report his fraud in order to save their trade? In all offices of a judicial character the people of Alabama should demand absolute honesty on the part of the aspirant, and for the position of President of the Railroad Commission, the man whose hands will be placed in power to clog the wheels of progress in the State for years to come no semblage of dishonesty or sharp practices should be tolerated for a single moment. The people of Alabama should think well before they place such power in the hands of a man who would resort to fraud and misrepresentation for the sake of the paltry saving of 4c per hundred pounds, even if it was a corporation that he sought to defraud. Let us put in office men whose ideas of honor are above any such thing as fraud, misrepresentation or sharp practices.

SUPPORT A CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE, AND THUS NOT DISTURB THE DEVELOPMENT AND PROSPERITY OF OUR STATE.

To the Democratic Voters of Alabama:

A thorough canvass of every county in the State has increased our membership beyond our most sanguine hopes.

We are now prepared to state emphatically that the voters of Alabama are going to select a CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE for President of the Railroad Commission at the primaries on April 11th, and thus repudiate COMERISM for the following good and sufficient reasons:

Because, The people of Alabama are now enjoying an era of railroad development and of commercial prosperity that has not been equalled in the history of the State;

Because, the interests of the railroads and the interests of the people are mutual, and inter-dependent, and any agitation which is calculated to arouse the prejudices and passions of the people or to array one class of our citizens against another, or which is calculated to discourage railroad development, is to be deprecated and should be condemned by all who have Alabama's material welfare at heart;

Because, Any radical action looking toward a readjustment of freight rates at this time, would inevitably result in breaking down all existing trade arrangements, necessarily resulting in a retrograde movement and irreparable injury;

Because, Very serious wrong would be wrought to elect [illegible] quasi-judicial position, one who has prejudged a case which will come before him in his official capacity; or who is a partisan for or against the railroads of Alabama;

Because, The Commercial, Industrial and Agricultural interests demand JUSTICE, EQUITY AND CONSERVATISM, which could not exist under the radical rule and extreme ideas of MR. B. B. COMER.

Hence, we appeal to every member of this Club, and to every other honest, fair-minded man to go to the polls on April 11th, and there cast his vote for a CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE, and thus lend his support to the continuance of the prosperity now enjoyed by ALL THE PEOPLE OF ALABAMA.

His Claim That a Dollar of Georgia Money is Worth One Dollar and Eighty Cents of Alabama Money Shown to be Utterly Without Foundation.

It is interesting to read below a comparison of prices actually paid for the necessities of life, such as meat, lard, meal and flour, by consumers at local points equi-distant from jobbing centers in Georgia and Alabama, during the months of December, 1903, and January and February, 1904. These figures are taken from the books of merchants and represent actual transactions:

	Prices paid by Consumers in Georgia, at Barnesville.	Prices paid by consumers in Alabama, at Greenville.
MEATS.
On December 15, 1903..	..10 c. per pound.	8 c. per pound.
On January 15, 1904..	..10 c. per pound.	7 3-4c. per pound.
On February 15, 1904..	..10 c. per pound.	9 c. per pound.
LARD
On December 15, 1903..	..12 1-2c. per pound.	7 1-2c. per pound.
On January 15, 1904...	..12 1-2c. per pound.	7 1-2c. per pound.
On February 15, 1904..	..12 1-2c. per pound.	7 1-2c. per pound.
MEAL.
On December 15, 1903	..75 c. per bush'l.	70 c. per bush'l.
On January 15, 1904..	..75 c. per bush'l.	70 c. per bush'l.
On February 15, 1904..	..75 c. per bush'l.	70 c. per bush'l.
FLOUR.
On December 15, 1903..	..$5.50 per barrel.	$5.00 per barrel.
On January 15, 1904.	... 5.75 per barrel.	5.10 per barrel.
On February 15, 1904..	... 6.00 per barrel.	5.75 per barrel.

Barnesville, Ga. ,and Greenville, Ala., are towns of practically the same size, having each a population of about 3,000. They are substantially similarly located with reference to jobbing centers, Barnesville being forty-two miles from Macon and sixty-one miles from Atlanta, while Greenville is forty-four miles from Montgomery and 136 miles from Mobile; and they can, therefore, be considered a fair index of the prevailing conditions in the respective States of Georgia and Alabama.

Mr. Comer may be able to "fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time," but the "sop" he is attempting to throw to the farmers and consumers in Alabama is demonstrated to be demagoguery of the very worst type by a careful analysis of the foregoing figures.

The people of Alabama will not elect to the important judicial position of President of the Railroad Commission, a man who will undertake to deceive the people as Mr. Comer and his clique of followers in Birmingham, known as his "Campaign Committee," are attempting to do. The people of Alabama have a pride in their State, and in the character of the men who are to fill such important offices.—t.

The Great Developers.

Birmingham Age Herald.

Of the many facts and signs pointing to the rapid material development of Alabama, few perhaps are more significant than the data just compiled by the immigration and industrial department of the Louisville and Nashville railroad.

The railroads have been great developers all along, but never were they so much in evidence in this respect as in recent years. The millions they spend in wealth of the communities, but after all it is the work which the railroads do in including homeseekers to settle in hitherto sparsely populated sections and in fostering innumerable industries—large and small—that counts for the most in the long run. This work is far-reaching and its value can not be overstated.

The statistics furnished by the Louisville and Nashville's immigration and industrial agent appear in another column. Out of 226 industries located by the Louisville and Nashville last year 88 were established in Alabama. The capital stock of these companies aggregate nearly $11,000,000. In 1903 nearly 600 families settled on the line of the Louisville and Nashville in Alabama and these figures represent two-thirds of the entire number of homeseekers locating at all points on that system. These are facts that tell, for they show that Alabama leads in solid progress.

Rates in Georgia and Alabama.

Mobile Register.

A circular, just published, in answer to the assertion of Mr. B. B. Comer that freight rates in Alabama are 40 per cent higher than rates in Georgia, says that while that purely local rates in Georgia are in some instances some lower than in Alabama, yet the combined interstate and local rate on commodities shipped into Georgia is invariably higher in Georgia than in Alabama. This combined local and interstate rate represents the cost of transportation to the consumer and is the actual rate which he has to pay, and is the rate applied to all shipments of sugar, flour, meal, corn, bacon, salt meats, hay, bran, oats and products of grain, there being virtually no purely local shipments of these commodities. Even the local mileage rates, however, are as low on classes C, D and F, (flour, bran, meal, grain and hay) as in adjacent States on the average. Take the average rate in Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and Florida and we have the following:

	C.	D.	F.
Average 13 1-4	9 1-2	22 1-2
Alabama 11	9 1-2	22

How are the farmers and other consumers of Alabama interested in this clamor for the application of the Georgia standard rates in Alabama.

It has been clearly demonstrated that the farmer and other consumers in Alabama pay a less rate of freight in the aggregate upon all the necessities of life than the farmer and other consumers in Georgia pay on the same articles.

Questions and Answers.

Q. Is Mr. Comer right when he says Georgia is more prosperous than Alabama?

A. No. He is entirely wrong. Alabama is as progressive and prosperous as any State in the South and has increased more rapidly than Georgia.

Q. What does he propose to do if elected Railroad Commissioner?

A. Bankrupt nearly every railroad in Alabama unless it can increase interstate rates to make up the loss.

Q. Will this help the farmer, laboring man and consumer?

A. No, it will hurt them and will hurt the State in every direction except possibly some special business interests.

Alabama Leads.

From Editorial in Montgomery Advertiser.

The Advertiser a few days ago alluded to the vast amount of money invested in new industries along the line of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in the State of Alabama, as compared with such industries in all other States through which the Louisville and Nashville System runs. The editorial in question alluded to the annual report of the General Immigration and Industrial Department of the Louisville and Nashville System for the year 1903.

The Traffic Department of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad has within the past few days compiled a supplementary statement from the General Immigration Department, showing industries located, and families and persons settled, along the line of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad for the period, January 1, 1904, to March 10, 1904. The result shows that during that period there were eighty-two industries established along the system, with capital stock of $3,454,500. Of these, forty-four were established in Alabama with capital stock of $2,061,100, considerably over half in number and nearly two-thirds in point of capital stock being in Alabama. Alabama leads in cotton and woolen industries, woodworking plants, fertilizer factories, car works, lime works, cotton seed products, marble and other quarries and miscellaneous plants. There were settled on the system 244 families, or 902 persons, of which 147 families, or 521 persons, settled in Alabama.

This is only cumulative evidence that Alabama leads, and does not follow Georgia or any other State in the race for commercial supremacy.—t.

Though nearly 300,000 Americans were enlisted in the army during the five years of the American Revolution, there were never more than 80,000 in the field at one time.

"JIM DANDY" DEAL

Flour Shipped as Meal to Save About Ten Cents Per Barrel Freight.

Q. Did not Mr. Comer, in order to derive an advantage over his competitors in the flour market of Birmingham, ship empty meal sacks branded "Jim Dandy Meal" to Carter's Creek, Tennessee, and have these meal sacks filled with the flour which he had purchased at Carter's Creek, Tennessee, and shipped to him at Birmingham as meal, at the meal weight and meal rate, thus giving him an advantage over his competitors in the Birmingham flour market of over ten cents per barrel?

A. See the following affidavit:

State of Tennessee,
County of Maury.

Personally appeared before me, a Notary Public in and for the said State and County, J. M. Hunter, who states that in the year 1892, he was a partner in the Maury Mills at Carter's Creek, Tennessee; that in August, 1892, he sold, in the office of the Maury Mills at Carter's Creek, to B. B. Comer, of Birmingham, Alabama who came there for the purpose of purchasing flour, nine cars of flour; that arrangements were made by said B. B. Comer whereby the flour was to be shipped in meal sacks to be furnished by said B. B. Comer; that said sacks were furnished by B. B. Comer and shipped by him from Birmingham to Carter's Creek, said sacks being branded "Jim Dandy Meal;" that said flour was shipped as meal on orders from said B. B. Comer to do so; that in making the shipment of flour as meal, it was as per said B. B. Comer's order. Deponent states he made no suggestion concerning the misclassification or under-billing, but simply carried out the instructions which he had from the purchaser, B. B. Comer; that the flour was sold f. o. b. cars at the mill, and therefore any benefits that might have accrued by reason of misclassification and under-billing were in favor of the purchaser, and of no benefit whatever to the seller.

Q. Was not this false classification and false billing a direct violation of the interstate commerce law?

A. It was, most emphatically.

Q. Do you not think that Mr. Comer by this process, showed a great deal of originality in the matter of reducing freight rates? Is not this method of reducing freight rates unique? Would Mr. Comer, if elected President of the Railroad Commission, resort to such questionable methods in behalf of his individual enterprises?

A. The people of Alabama will answer that question at the polls on April 11.—t.

It is up to Mr. Comer.

Montgomery Times.

Mr. Comer has all on his hands that he can attend to well just at this juncture of his canvass. If he would maintain the hold he was supposed to have had at the beginning of his campaign, he must explain away this charge at his doors which commits him to a w[illegible] misclassification [illegible] freight [illegible] [illegible]s it does the [illegible]m to fitness and qualifications. It [illegible]ers little how convincing Mr. Comer's arguments against the railroads, if he cannot as a sine qua non to his own right to correct the evils of which he indignantly complains, furnish positive and elementary proof of his qualification to act in the capacity he seeks. When Mr. Comer has explained his "Jim Dandy" affair to our perfect satisfaction, he will have earned his perfect right to resume where he left off in his canvass when this loaded bomb was exploded in his camp.

Has Not Accepted the Offer.

Mr. B. B. Comer has not availed himself of the kind offer of these columns to correct that report that he shipped "Jim Dandy Meal" sacks to Carter's Creek, Tenn., and flour was shipped as meal in them, when the freight rate on flour was 4 cents per 100 higher than on meal and that he received the flour as meal, paid the rate on meal and said nothing about it.—Free Lance.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Will Be Retarded by the Selection of an Extremist on the Commission.

Louisville, Ky., March 21, 1904.

Prof. P. L. Hobbs, Cleveland, O.:

My Dear Professor—In your letter of last month you advised me as follows:

"I spent the day with Mr. Ev[illegible] yesterday, and went into the cement matter extensively. I am glad to say he has not lost his interest, and he also said it is Mr. Wade's intention to give attention as soon as he returns from Europe, and the canal question is settled."

I understand there is now no doubt of the canal being built, and work will shortly begin. I would like very much to see the cement mill at Sparta under operation. I hope you can give me favorable and inside information as to what is to be done, and when.

Yours very truly,
(Signed.) G. A. Park.

Cleveland, O., March 24, 1904.

Mr. G. A. Park, Louisville, Ky.:

Dear Sir—In reply to your inquiry regarding the prospect of the Cement Industry in Alabama, with which I have been connected, I can only say that the plant will ship approximately 2,000 barrels per day, or about 20 cars, and will employ about 350 men in the works.

There is one thing which we have been noticing and which I would like some information regarding, and that is, the agitation in Alabama regarding freight rates, and especially the interstate rates, which are the only ones which affect us much. When we purchased our property in Alabama, we had no idea that there would be any tampering with the interstate rates, and that it was firmly fixed, and the one thing that we could be sure of, but I see from recent publications that that is not so.

Will you please inform me as to what extent the views of Mr. B. B. Comer, who has been so active in this movement, are accepted by the general public, as we are little interested in the rates in the State itself, as they do not affect us but to a minor degree? In fact, it is only the effect upon the outside shipments which are of any importance whatever, as they are, by far, the great bulk of the shipping business.

It seems very surprising to us that the people of your great State of Alabama would accede at all to the views of a man who is seeking an office of that quasi-judicial position of President of its Railroad Commission, and pre-judges the merits of the case before hearing the entire testimony, and another matter which is of great surprise to us, is that the good people of the State do not realize the tremendous factor of prosperity that the railroads are, in building up the communities with which they come in contact. The entire success of a locality, such as you have there, depends upon the railroads and they are as much interested in establishing industries along their lines and fostering them, as the people can possibly be who locate within their territory. If the local rates are reduced, will not the loss be attached to the interstate rates over which the State politicians have no control whatever, and if so, will not the interstate shipper simply add this to his commodity as far as he can, and will not the burden of this fall on the consumer in the State of Alabama, for here he can be assured of no competition as far as rates go, and thus the people of the State will eventually bear the burden entirely; but aside from this, we are extremely sorry to see the matter presented in this light and for political purposes solely, and an interest of this paramount importance to the State should be removed beyond the realm of politics entirely, and placed in hands which will deal with the railroads as well as the people,—fairly, and to the greatest good of all concerned.

We feel that it is working against the best interests of the State to have this agitation brought up in this way, and purely in a political way, and that it is working [illegible] in investi[illegible] it will have [illegible] equity demand[illegible] Very truly yours,

(Signed.) P. L. H[illegible]

MR. KNOX ASKS COM[illegible] SOME INTEREST[illegible] POINTED

Mr. W. E. Knox of Anniston w[illegible] city last night and upon being shown afternoon papers containing an affidavit from C. A. Tyson, stating that he, Tyson, during 1892 was broker for Maury Mills, Carter's Creek, Tenn., and as such had sold "considerable" flour to B. B. Comer, delivered at Birmingham, and that any underbilling or misclassification on the same would have accrued to the benefit of the shipper, stated that Mr. Tyson's affidavit was indefinite and skilfully drawn for the purpose of deceiving the honest voter, for whose eye it was evidently intended. He further said:

"A careful reading of Mr. Tyson's affidavit and his failure to say that he sold the nine cars of flour referred to in Mr. Hunter's affidavit, dated March 22, 1904, is too potent to need comment. I am informed that Mr. Tyson did sell B. B. Comer or the Birmingham mills for B. B. Comer, in July, 1892, some 500 barrels of flour, some few cars of bran and probably a car or two of corn, to be delivered during the months of July and August. I have no information as to whether this particular flour, etc., was sold delivered at Birmingham and I construe the word 'considerable' in this affidavit to refer to the shipments sold prior to August 31, 1892.

"Now, in order to convince the people that he did not refer to shipments prior to August 31, 1892, let Mr. Comer get Mr. Tyson to make an affidavit that he sold the identical nine cars of flour, referred to by date, initial and car number in my letter addressed to E. Wilkinson, dated March 21, 1904, and published in The Age-Herald March 24, and that said nine cars of flour were sold by him delivered at Birmingham, Ala. Nothing short of a positive affidavit to this effect will in my humble opinion satisfy the people that Mr. Comer did not reap pecuniary benefit from these fraudulent transactions.

"I am advised that Mr. C. A. Tyson informed Mr. deFuniak, general agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company on October 24, 1892, and has recently confirmed same, that this sale of nine car loads of flour was made by the Maury Mills to Mr. B. B. Comer direct and over his (Tyson's) head, as broker for said mills and without his knowledge, consent or allowance for his brokerage commission, and that he (Tyson), as soon as he learned of the sale in question made a demand, both in person and by correspondence for the commission or brokerage claimed by him under his agreement, or contract, with the Maury Mills and that he (Tyson), had to threaten suit to recover his brokerage charge before the Maury Mills would pay same.

"If Mr. Comer did not reap the pecuniary benefit of these fraudulent transactions why did he permit them?

"If Mr. Comer did not reap the pecuniary benefit of these fraudulent transactions how was he able to undersell his competitors?—t.

GOOD COMMON SENSE.

Prominent Alabama Weekly Has a Word to Say.

Abbeville News.

The Supplement to this issue of The News, while along political lines and on the subject of electing President of the railroad Commission, ought to be of interest to and carefully read by every voter. The railroads are not going to do business for amusement, but want some profit on their investment as they go along, and every fair minded person is willing for the roads to do this, even should it require the raising of rates. The supplement deals with live issues and the methods of men asking for your vote, and one of the means taken by one of the candidates to lower freight rates. And you should not vote for a man who says, before he is elected, that he will do certain things before he finds out whether or not it is right to do it. Comer's chances a few weeks ago seemed to be good, but he is losing ground as the people become informed on the subject, and by the date for the primary there will no doubt be a landslide which will completely knock him out and elect a man who will deal fair with the roads and the shippers. A man of this kind will please everybody. Read these articles closely, get the facts and then you can vote right.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

The county commissioners were in session Monday. Present Commissioners W. H. Conway, Alex Glasscock, R. C. Riggins and W. A. Green. The usual routine business of the court was transacted.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The circuit court convened Monday at 11:15 a. m. Hon. Terry Richardson, presiding. The grand jury is as follows: Foreman, John A. Strock; M. T. Cox, J. H. Vinson, J. L. Williams, J. P. Stonecipher, John W. Foshee, J. T. Mims, J. M. Robinson, Sr., W. F. Roebuck, Alex Boutwell, James Nix, W. M. Aldridge, Felix Elland, E. W. Bailey, D. C. Honeycutt, Dudley Smith, George W. Pate, A. J. Glasscock, J. T. Abernathy and W. A. Sims. Petit jurors for the first week were: W. D. O'Neal, Joseph Headley, D. B. Oden, Jeff Jones, R. A. Miller, T. J. Billingsley, John Buck Baker, James Killingsworth, E. Driver, W. F. Lembrich, J. E. Littlejohn, W. C. Roper, S. E. Waldrup, R. J. Mitchell, William Bearden, Joseph Littleton, John Gore, I. M. Ratliff. The judge's charge to the grand jury was very elaborate in some respects, and great stress was laid upon the oath they had taken. Circuit Solicitor F. L. Tate is in attendance. The civil suit docket was called and the judge continued the whole batch (except the case of Campbell vs. Smith, which was tried Monday afternoon, the verdict being for Campbell), and announced that he would call a special term of court in about three weeks. Judge Richardson announced that he took this action so as not to hamper Colonel Collier in his race for circuit judge. All petit jurors were paid for two days and mileage and the greater part of them went home Monday evening. It is unfortunate for the county finances that our court term should come in conflict with the democratic primary

A few words from this neck of the woods. The health of our community is tolerably good, but Mrs. C. L. Langston has been on the sick list for a few days, though we hope to see her up again soon. BEAT 10.

Editor Union:

April 4, 1904.

I saw a piece in the UNION of March 31st from W. H. Shaw, in which he mentioned Professor Anderson for our next tax assessor. I've known Professor Anderson for twelve years. He is, strictly speaking, a self-made man in its fullest sense. He has had his own battles to fight from youth, and from the support that he is receiving it seems that he has fought them well. By hard work he has managed to obtain a very good education, and he is continually striving to fit himself for better work, and is thoroughly qualified to fill the position.

It seems to be the opinion of the people of beat 10 that we would do well to re-elect Professor Moore as superintendent of education.

Success to the Union and its readers.

COURTING AND THE COURTS

How Easy It is to Be Made Liable in a Breach of Promise Case. :-:

EVER since Margaret Gardyner and her daughter Alice brought what is reputed to have been the first breach of promise suit against John Keche, of Yppswych, showing that he, the said John Keche, had received a sum of money on condition of his marrying the aforesaid Alice, and that he had married Joan Bloys, "ageyne all good reason and conscience," breach of promise suits have been recognized among all English speaking peoples. Lord Holt enforced it at common law, holding that "the wounded spirit, the unmerited disgrace and the solitude which would be the probable consequence of desertion after a long courtship, were considered as legitimate claims for pecuniary damages as the loss of reputation by slander or the wounded pride in slight assaults and batteries."

These matrimonial contracts are sui generis. No grim-visaged lawyer draws up a formal contract to be executed; no notary pries into the intents and purposes of the parties and certifies the same under his official seal; no go-between Pandarus is present to hold the hands of Troilus and Cressida and solemnly pronounce:

"A bargain made; seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness."

No—in the vine-clad arbor, or behind the protecting screens of parlor walls, in some shady nook, or in the dim moonlight deep down some lonely dell, "far sunken from the healthy breath of morn and eve's one star," there these engagements are softly whispered and the contract sealed with a kiss.

For these reasons, while the making of the contract is a question of proof, if need not be proved in totidem verbis, and is often inferred from the actions, language and conduct of the parties, and it is difficult to tell under what circumstances the court would be justified in finding that a promise had been made. Many a young man, not fatally bent on matrimony, would sometimes be surprised to find that his language, intended only as a compliment to some charming damsel, or his conduct, meant solely as an act of gallantry, is sufficient in the eyes of the law to support proof of a promise to marry.

A gentleman once concluded that it would be a very elegant and a very funny thing to send to his dulcinea a newspaper article entitled, "Love, the Conqueror," marking it: "Read this," The lady did read it, and when the funny gentleman declined to marry her, she brought suit against him and read the article to the jury, who gave her $4000 damages. The Supreme Court of Illinois, sustaining the verdict, said: "The article may be regarded as the defendant's own letter. It doubtless contained sentiment which he sanctioned, couched in language more choice than he could compose. It was his appeal for marriage—it foretold in clear and emphatic language his object and intent in his courtship with her. She doubtless placed this construction upon it, as she well might do, and laid it aside as a rare treasure."

In a New York case it was shown on the trial that a widower, a pious elder of fifty-three years of age, soon after the death of his wife, visited the plaintiff, a maiden lady of thirty, and taking out a memorandum book, from which he read, or pretended to read, stated in a confidential way, that he had noted down some requests made by his wife four days before her death; that it was something he "could not tell her now," but that she (the maiden lady) "would know some day," darkly hinting, so the lady took it, that the deceased wife had requested the forlorn widower to lighten his grief by marrying the plaintiff. It was proved that after this confidential talk there were rides and drives together, frequent visits extending till late in the evening, and, to cap the climax, the widower told the plaintiff that after the lapse of a year from the death of his wife (the widower's quarantine, it seems), he intended to marry, and he then entered into a minute description of the lady he wanted to marry, which description was an exact photograph of the plaintiff. While we cannot but admire the shrewd diplomacy of this wily widower, courting by dark insinuations and covert suggestions, and not committing himself by an open avowal, yet, as the sequel shows, he ran amuck of the doctrine of estoppel.

The sanctimonious Proteus forgot his Julia and found him another sweetheart, and, knowing that he had become somewhat involved in his affair with the plaintiff, he diplomatically undertook to checkmate the lady. He told her that he did not want her people to think that he was paying her the attentions of a lover so soon after the death of his wife, and, in order to allay that suspicion, he drew up a note, in which the plaintiff was made to say that she regarded his visits as "simply evidences of friendship and nothing more," and got her to sign it. The jury found in her favor and the Court of Appeals of New York upheld the verdict.

In a Connecticut case the defendant had been heard to remark on his happiness when in plaintiff's company and his utter misery unless in her society. The parties had exchanged daguerreotypes, the defendant had taught the plaintiff's nephew to call him uncle, and had told the plaintiff's brother-in-law that "all the courting was done," little suspecting that the plaintiff would take a hand at "courting" in the presence of judge and jury.

The defendant afterward went on a voyage, and while on the sea he indited effusive love letters to the plaintiff, telling her how constantly he thought of her while awake, and how he dreamed of her while asleep, touchingly adding: "While I am tossed to and fro on this wide ocean, I love thee still."

Yet, notwithstanding all this, the mad lover broke off the engagement.

The plaintiff's "courting" was fully as successful as had been that of the defendant, for she recovered a judgment for $1500.

In a Vermont case the plaintiff and defendant were neighbors, and the defendant paid neighborly visits to the plaintiff's family. It was shown that these visits were at first to the entire family, and that they were gradually narrowed until they were confined to the plaintiff alone. This fact, together with the proof that during the periods of the defendant's visits lights were frequently seen burning in the parlor on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and some other circumstances, led the jury to find for the plaintiff.

A very cruel case occurred in Michigan. A man, who, strange to relate, bore the name of Constant, while engaged in courting had his financial eye open and borrowed money from the lady. On his last visit to her he renewed his notes for one and two years, and then went off and married the other girl. The court held that it was proper to allow proof of this money transaction, holding that "an engagement broken off suddenly and without warning would very naturally create more pain and mortification than if ended under any other circumstances, and if a jury were to regard this conduct concerning money matters as calculated, under the circumstances, to have caused additional grounds of pain or grievance to the defendant in error, we think they would not be violating ordinary probabilities."

Where the defendant asked the hand of the lady in the presence of the latter's mother, who consented, and the lady said nothing, and the defendant thereupon gently took the hand of the mother and touchingly said: "Henceforth consider me as your son," it was held sufficient proof of the lady's consent; and in a New York case the lady was permitted to show that she had procured a wedding dress and had gone so far as to get a wedding cake, as showing her acceptance, while in Iowa the plaintiff was allowed to prove in support of her acceptance that she was making preparation for her marriage "piecing quilts and doing fancy work," and that when she heard of defendant's marriage, "she hated it awful bad."

While the law makes it easy to prove a proposal by the gentleman and equally easy to show that the lady accepted, when it comes to evidence showing a release on the part of the lady, then the proof must be strong to sustain the defense.

In one case a bachelor of fifty-three had been paying his respects to a maiden of forty-three summers for the unlucky period of thirteen years. During all this time she declared to others that she would never marry him and spoke of him in terms of derision and contempt. After thirteen years of courtship the bachelor summoned sufficient courage to propose and was promptly accepted. After the engagement he heard of the double dealings of the maid and refused to marry her. The court held that it was no defense to the action, although it might go to mitigate the damages.

In a Pennsylvania case the lady wrote the defendant a letter in which she said: "I don't want you, for I know that I would have a devil's life of it: If you were any kind of a gentleman you would not act as you have. I pray night and day that you may never prosper in this world. I just pray for every hair in your head to come out." And yet she recovered a judgment for $2000.

In looking beneath the surface for the reason for this verdict it is quite evident that the jury believed that the lady was goaded to desperation by the attentions of her fiance to her rival, and that she did not, in fact, mean to say that she did not want to marry him, and did not really desire that he lose all his hair, for in her letter she says cruelly of her rival: "Well, if I am poor, I do not wear the one hat for five or six years like she does, and turn it hind part before, like she does."

Under the weight of authority, then, if a party does not want to find himself, in the eyes of the law, an engaged man, he must look well to his daily walk and conversation; for, if he has so conducted himself as to be estopped from denying the engagement, he will have a difficult problem to convince a judge and jury that the lady has duly released him.—From the Green Bag.

Success Easier Than Failure.

The principles that win success are very simple and few in number. They are easily remembered. Here they are: First, industry, but not overwork; second, willingness to profit by the experience of others; third, ability, coupled with modesty; fourth, simple and correct habits; fifth, honesty, politeness and fairness. Any one of ordinary ability who practices these rules cannot avoid success. Success is easier than failure.—Atchison Globe.

Menu Names.

Our grandmothers would probably not be any more at sea with the phrases of our modern cook book than we are with the unpronounceable names that are given to the sauces and relishes we read about in magazines. Here is a list which will help you to enjoy these dishes when you know what you are eating:

Au Bleu, a French term applied to fish boiled in flavored white wine.

Au Gras, dressed with meat gravy.

Au Jus, in the natural juice or gravy.

Bain-amrie is either a bath of wine, spices and vinegar (English ferm), or a French double-boiler for keeping sauces hot.

Bechamel, a sauce to serve hot with meats, made of butter (or dripping, our, white stock and herbs.

Blazier, a dish under which is a receptacle for coals to keep it hot.

Bordelaise, a sauce similar to Bechamel, with the addition of a half glass of claret.

Braised meat is meat stewed in a closely covered pan, with bacon, herbs or spices.

Canapes are strips of stale bread fried and spread with seasoned fish or meat paste.

Casserole is a baking dish, though sometimes a form of potatoes or rice surrounding a meat or oyster stew is termed a casserole.

Croustades, fried forms of bread to serve minced meat or eggs on.

Croutons, stale bread in one-half inch cubes, browned in a slow oven for use in soup.

Living No Longer Cheap in Asia.

During a recent tour in Asia of nearly sixteen months, from February, 1901, to June, 1902, in which I visited Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, Cochin China, Siam and Laos, the Straits Settlements, Burmah, India, Syria and Palestine, I found everywhere a deep interest in the changing economic conditions. The common people in Asia care little for politics, but the price of food and raiment touches every man, woman and child at a sensitive point.

Almost everywhere the old days of cheap living are passing away. Steamers, railways, telegraphs, newspapers, labor saving machinery and the introduction of Western ideas are slowly but surely revolutionizing the Orient. Shantung wheat, which formerly had no market beyond a radius of a few dozen miles from the wheat field, can now be shipped by railway and steamship to any part of the world, and in consequence every Chinese buyer has to pay more for it. In like manner new facilities for export have doubled, trebled, and in some places quadrupled the price of rice in China, Siam and Japan.—Century Magazine.

Birds From Barnacles.

Old-time naturalists thought that a kind of geese were hatched from barnacles. Giraldus Cambrensis, in his "Topographia Hibernise" (1154-1189), tells of birds called "Bernacae," which are produced in a marvelous way from "fir timber tossed along the sea." Surrounded by shells, they hang beak downward; then, becoming coated with feathers, they fall into the water as birds, or fly away into the air. In Munster's "Cosmography" (1550), and in Gerard's "Herball" (1597), appears an illustration of the 'barnacle tree." Geese are seen protruding from some of the fruits of this marvellous plant, while others, set free, are disporting themselves in the water below. Sir Robert Moray, before the Royal Society of Edinburgh (1677-78), actually described his having seen little shells growing on a fir tree cast up by the waves on the island of Uist, the shells "having within them little birds perfectly shaped, supposed to be barnacles."

Not only is the British shoe made chiefly of American leather and by American machinery, but even the metal hooks and eyelets are practically all imported from the United States.

Trolley Car's Advantage.

If only boys were trolley cars
How splendid it would be!
No one expects them to "keep still,"
For trolleys, don't you see,
Must clang and rush and clang all day
To do their full duty.

A Paper Doll House.

Lots of children are getting fun making a doll house out of a scrap album. A large album is bought for 25 cents, and then the fun begins of fixing up the home. The book is spread open and on the two pages a piece of colored paper four inches deep is pasted for a carpet. Arranged on the rest of the pages are different articles of furniture cut from the house furnishing books or advertisements. Every room, from garret to cellar, is suitably furnished in this way. Not only chairs, tables and necessary things are included, but the rooms are made beautiful with all kinds of ornaments and pictures.

Moderation in Exercise.

The Japanese use practically no gymnasium apparatus, yet they show greater excellence of strength and endurance than do any other people in the world. While some of their exercises may seem violent, they take them with great moderation. At the outset of a course in jiujitsu the student is rarely upon the floor more than half an hour and three quarters of this time is devoted to walking and breathing between exercises. As the student becomes more proficient, he spends three quarters of an hour on the floor, then an hour, and so on, by degrees, until he is able to give two hours a day to the work. Yet three quarters of his time, or nearly that amount, is spent walking back and forth and in breathing.—H. Irving Hancock, in St. Nicholas Magazine.

A Mimic Senate.

The young pages in the senate, it is said, like nothing better than to set up a miniature senate just after an adjournment or when the senators are late in assembling. One of the older boys seats himself in the chair of the presiding officer, while the others take the seats of the members, and a surprisingly clever burlesque on the senatorial doings follows. One morning, during an especially noisy session of this mock congress, a bright-eyed page, who was then posing as "The gentleman from Kansas," pulled a five-dollar bill from his pocket, mounted a chair, and, waving it, yelled, "The gentleman from Arkansas wishes to introduce this bill." No sooner had he made this speech than the boys made a wild break for him, vaulting over desks in their mad pursuit after "The gentleman from Arkansas," who had made his escape out of the senate chamber and was speeding down the corridor.

Cold and Insect Tissues.

A naturalist once, after experiments in freezing insects and finding that those that had not laid their eggs nor completed their natural term of life always revived, finally cut off the head of a fly and quickly subjected the body to a low temperature. To all appearances it died, as any decapitated fly would have done sooner or later; but upon bringing it to the warmth, the body, much to his surprise, revived and resumed its struggles, until it finally died from the effects of the knife. This shows to what extent the cold acts on insect tissues. They are simply coagulated, and life does not cease, but is only suspended; for when this coagulation or congestion ends, the vital energies resume their normal conditions. If, however, an insect has nearly completed its natural term of life, it will be killed by freezing; it would continue to live for only a short time under favorable conditions in any temperature. The life of most adult insects is at best exceedingly short.—St. Nicholas Magazine.

The Largest Pet in the World.

Probably the only man in the world who has a pet whale lives on a small island in the South Pacific. He is a planter and is the only white inhabitant of his island. He has many brown-skinned assistants who cut and dry the cocoanut rinds that he sells to trading vessels. The planter makes plenty of money in his peculiar trade, but he used to be worried to provide entertainment for the visitors who bought his product. One stormy day, however, a small whale floated through the narrow entrance to the harbor, which is walled in by a coral reef. The whale appeared satisfied with its new home, and remained. As the years passed by, the baby whale proceeded to grow and to wax fat and become tame, for the planter fed it occasionally with a bushel or so of chopped meat. Now the whale is seventy feet long, and is the curiosity of the island. When a trader's boat slips into the harbor the planter gives the officers and crew a banquet under the palms, and then takes them to see the pet whale. At such times a barrel of chopped meat is rolled down to the water side and the planter stands on the shore and blows a horn. Almost instantly the water will begin to churn in the direction of the planter, and the huge whale will run its nose into the sand in its effort to get the barrel of meat in haste. After having eaten the meat, the creature leaps and rolls about gleefully, often tossing its body nearly out of the water.

Some ten or a dozen years ago a whale floundered into Oyster Bay, just north of the Columbia River mouth, and in the state of Washington. The bay is shallow and there is a sand bar at the entrance to it; but the whale must have ridden in on a big wave. At any rate the next morning perhaps the maddest whale in the world was charging up and down the bay, running its nose into the sand furiously, spouting water and mud like a geyser, and evidently determined to get back to the Pacific at any cost. For weeks the gigantic creature raged up and down the bay like a big fish in a small tub of water. The railroads ran excursions to the scene, and the captive animal drew a larger crowd than a whole circus. At last a great storm came, and when it departed the whale went with it. So the railroad declared an extra dividend, and the people about the bay went back to work or play, as suited their tastes or necessities.

The Giant of Cloudland.

Did you ever hear of the Giant of Cloudland? He owns all the clouds, and has a magnificent palace made of moss agate and turquoise. He also has a temper, and at times, spells of the blues.

In one of these blue spells, he became angry at his brother, the Sun, because he thought the Sun came too near his abode for comfort. In fact, he thought the Sun was trying to spoil his beautiful palace by scorching it with his hot rays until it turned purple and red. Cloud Giant decided he would go to the Sun and expostulate with him, so he immediately began making preparations and was soon on his way. The nearer he came to the Sun's home the warmer he became, and when his face began to blister, he thought it would be a wise idea to sit down and try to cool off, and send a wireless telegram by a fast-speeding wind. He told the Sun in his message that he must stop scorching his palace and that he preferred not to have the Sun come near him at all.

The jolly, fat Sun only smiled when he received this message, and bidding the wind depart, sent a return message by a sunbeam.

"Dear Brother Cloud Giant—You are cross and crabbed and take life too seriously. You should smile upon the world. What's the use of getting angry with me? I am only doing my duty as our Mother Nature taught me to do, and were I to change my course, or do anything out of the ordinary, I should create great disturbance both in our country and the world below. Your palace is not hurt by my close contact. My turning in into purple and gold in the evening, only intensified its beauty, and varies its monotony of color. If I stay away you will have a dull, dark, dreary-looking home.

"Now, my brother, look up, smile and drive the vapor away. Yours merrily,

"SUN."

When the Cloud Giant read this message he was angrier than ever and went into a rage, storming around fearfully and bursting into tears, so great was his wrath.

The Sun, who was coming to meet the Cloud Giant, was surprised at this great display of temper and chided him for deluging the earth below so as to cause much havoc. He implored his weeping brother to stop his tears and laugh and be happy for a little while at least. "You see, dear Cloud Giant, when you weep so copiously you cause others to be unhappy, and when you laugh and are bright and gay, all the world laughs and is gay with you. Come, let us make up and be friends, smile upon each other and upon the world, and all will be the better for it."

The Cloud Giant became quieter though not entirely consoled, and replied querulously: "You should not always be so happy, Mr. Sun; I am not the only one who causes disturbances and sorrows. Only yesterday, besides scorching my palace, you killed 50 people and 300 horses in the world below, by your red hot breath. You burn houses and wheat fields often and only laugh at the desolation you cause."

"Oh, now really, Cloud Giant, I do not laugh because I have done harm to the people. You see none can avoid doing harm at times, and when I do harmful things, I am always very sorry, but knowing it can not be avoided, I laugh to keep myself from getting morose and melancholy. It is my nature, too, you know, to laugh. The people forgive my faults because they know I do not hurt them intentionally. When I smile upon them too warmly, they know I mean to be kind. I only wish to ripen their grain and help them gain a livelihood, so they pardon me when I am overzealous."

"Well, you know, Sun, that I have a melancholy, tearful nature and I can not always be smiling."

"Yes, that is true, brother, but I tell you what let us do. We will strive from this moment to do our duty as Mother Nature has taught us, and we will try to be happy each in his own way, and that way is in doing good to others. Let us try to be kind to all, and try not to hurt anybody, so that if we do, accidentally, as all are liable to, we will be forgiven, and then we will strive harder in the right way."

The Cloud Giant was now completely pacified and began to smile.

"All right, brother Sun, here is my hand on it. We will try to do our duty, and attend to our own affairs in future."

The two brothers embraced and went their separate ways, each bent upon living in future as their beautiful mother had taught them.

A Wonderful Motor.

Details are published of a wonderful new motor invented by Peter Tait, an English engineer. The invention is considered of such importance that its development may result in electric railway engines running twice the present speed at only half the cost, and in Atlantic liners crossing from Liverpool to New York in three days.

It is almost small enough to be carried in a typewriter case. The motor is capable of developing 1,000 revolutions a minute, giving 1 horse-power under a boiler pressure of 100 pounds to the square inch.

In even the best railway locomotive the steam is admitted after the piston has moved from five to eight inches along the cylinder. Mr. Thornycroft has devised a valve which will admit a given quantity of steam at every commencement of the stroke and so adjusted that the expansive force of the steam admitted is just sufficient to drive the piston at the end of its journey.

By the most modest estimate a saving in coal is 25 per cent, while the simplicity of the motor is such that the initial cost is much cheaper than existing types.—New York Commercial.

[illegible] the west, in topography it is gently undulating and covered throughout its entire length by the rankest tropical vegetation, valuable teakwood being found extensively throughout the entire district. Nowhere in the world are more luscious fruits produced. Among those peculiar to this belt is the durian, which is about the size of a muskmelon. Its exterior presents somewhat the appearance of a large nut burr, being prickly and woody, but within, the fruit is white and custard like, and owing to this peculiarity the American soldiers dubbed it the "ice cream table limburger." The mangosteen is another of the rare fruits. It is about the size of an average orange, chocolate colored, and has a very brittle shell. Inside, four white sections contain a colorless liquid. This is the most delicate fruit known, and the only one, it is claimed, that Queen Victoria has never tasted, there being no way of preserving this fruit for a sufficient period after plucking to permit of shipping to any distance.

CONSTIPATION

For nine years I suffered with chronic constipation; during this time I had to take an enema of warm water once every 24 hours before I could get an action on my bowels. Happily I found Cascarets, and today I am a well man. For years before I used Cascarets I endured misery with internal piles. Thanks to Cascarets, I am free from all that this morning. You may use this on behalf of suffering humanity."

A Wonderful Motor.

Details are published of a wond new motor invented by Peter Th an English engineer. The inve is considered of such importance its development may result in ex railway engines running twice present speed at only half the co in Atlantic liners crossing from pool to New York in three days.

It is almost small enough to be ried in a typewriter case. The motor is capable of developing revolutions a minute, giving 18- power under a boiler pressure pounds to the square inch.

In even the best railway locom the steam is admitted after the has moved from five to eight along the cylinder. Mr. Thornly devised a valve which will adm given quantity of steam at every mencement of the stroke and so adjusted that the expansive for the steam admitted is just sufficie drive the piston at the end of its ney.

SYMPATHY.

I chanced to see the other day
A rosy little chap,
A boy from school, released to play.
He wore a nice warm cap,
An overcoat, new rubber shoes—
A better garb no man might choose.

I also saw—and he saw, too—
A fine deep, muddy pool.
The sight attracted others who
Were newly come from school.
A puddle is a thing of joy
To any well-constructed boy.

The lad I marked did straightway dash,
All with a joyous whoop,
Into that pool; he went ker-splash,
Ker-chug, ker-slop, ker-scloop.
He paddled in that lovely slime;
You bet he had a royal time.

And soon his nice, warm overcoat
Was soaked with muddy slop.
His cap did on the water float
Where it had chanced to drop.
His hose were drenched, his knickers wet
And muddy as they well could get.

I watched that youngster with a smile
Of kindly sympathy,
And as I watched I thought the while,
"I would that boy were I."
But had he been my boy I tell
You I'd have caught and spanked him well.

London in Moscow.

The continued activity with which the searching of refuse heaps in quest of treasure is being prosecuted makes it interesting to remember that the sifters and sorts of London were once wealthy and organized. A case is on record of one woman who in eight years was able to build house property out of the profits of her grubbing and gleaning. It seems scarcely credible that Moscow is built upon London rubbish. Such, however, is the case. An enormous heap of refuse at the Battle bridge end of what is now Caledonian road, which was "the grand center of dustmen, scavengers, horse and dog dealers, knackermen, brick makers, and other low but necessary professionalists," had lain in that position since the great fire. After the destruction of Moscow upon the visit of Napoleon, the Russians, by some means, came to hear of this dust heap. They bought it, bricks, bones, rubbish and all, shipped it off to Moscow, and upon it founded the resurrected city which travelers know today.—St. James' Gazette.

Jefferson Davis' Secretary Dead.

Burton Norvillie Harrison, a lawyer of New York, and husband of Mrs. Burton Harrison, the authoress, and father of Congressman Harrison, of New York city, is dead, aged 63 years.

Death resulted from a general breakdown due partially to old age. During the war Mr. Harrison was private secretary to Jefferson Davis, the president of the southern confederacy, remaining with him in the relation of almost a son, as well as secretary to the end of the war. He shared in the capture of Mr. Davis, rather than forsake his fortunes at their fall.

When Mr. Davis was carried to Fort Monroe for imprisonment, Mr. Harrison was sent to prison in Washington, and finally sent to Fort Delaware, where he remained in solitary confinement until 1866, when he was released.

There are no rich men in Japan, as judged by the standards of the United States. There are only two men in the empire who pay an income tax on over $125,000 a year. More astonishing still to American eyes are the statements that there are only thirteen men in the empire who pay on $20,000 a year; thirty-seven on $12,000; ninety-three on $8,500 and 140 on $5,500. Out of every 1,000 in the empire there are only seven who have incomes which equal $1,350 a year. Yet the 44,000,000 people of this comparatively poor little country buy from the outside world goods to the yearly average of $7 each. The total wealth of the empire of Japan has been estimated as follows:

Lands	$3,500,000,000
Mines	250,000,000
Live stock	40,000,000
Buildings	950,000,000

"It might be well for the Japanese sympathizers in this country to consider what effect a complete triumph for Japan in the present war may have on the far east," writes a prominent diplomat. "With the Philippines offering thousands of miles of unprotected coast line, and with the Hawaiian islands in a similar condition, it is well for the United States to consider what will happen if a great power should make up its mind to become master of the east. American army officers have repeatedly called attention to the impossibility of defending the Philippines and the Hawaiian islands under present conditions."

Dr. Reaume, member for Windsor, in the provincial legislature of Canada, has introduced a bill to amend the marriage act by inserting a clause that when parties desiring to wed reside outside the Dominion of Canada, their application for marriage license shall be accompanied by an affidavit stating that the notice of their proposed marriage has been published for seven days in two newspapers of the town where the license was issued. If the bill is passed it will cause Windsor to lose its reputation for Gretna Green affairs.

REACH THE SPOT.

To cure an aching back,
The pains of rheumatism,
The tired-out feelings,
You must reach the spot—get at the cause.
In most cases 'tis the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys.

Charles Bierbach, stone contractor, living at 2625 Chestnut St., Erie, Pa., says: "For two years I had kidney trouble, and there was such a severe pain through my loins and limbs that I could not stoop or straighten up without great pain, had difficulty in getting about and was unable to rest at night, arising in the morning tired and worn out. The kidney secretions were irregular and deposited a heavy sediment. Doctors treated me for rheumatism, but failed to help me. I lost all confidence in medicine, and began to feel as if life were not worth living. Doan's Kidney Pills, however, relieved me so quickly and so thoroughly that I gladly made a statement to that effect for publication. This was in 1898, and during the six years which have elapsed I have never known Doan's Kidney Pills to fail. They cured my wife of a severe case of backache in the same thorough manner."

A free trial of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Bierbach will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price 50 cents per box.

A prominent club woman, Mrs. Danforth, of St. Joseph, Mich., tells how she was cured of falling of the womb and its accompanying pains and misery by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Life looks dark indeed when a woman feels that her strength is fading away and she has no hopes of ever being restored. Such was my feeling a few months ago when I was advised that my poor health was caused by prolapsus or falling of the womb. The words sounded like a knell to me, I felt that my sun had set; but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound came to me as an elixir of life; it restored the lost forces and built me up until my good health returned to me. For four months I took the medicine daily and each dose added health and strength. I am so thankful for the help I obtained through its use."—MRS. FLORENCE DANFORTH, 1007 Miles Ave., St. Joseph, Mich.

A medicine that has restored so many women to health and can produce proof of the fact must be regarded with respect. This is the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which cannot be equalled by any other medicine the world has ever produced. Here is another case:—

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For years I was troubled with falling of the womb, irregular and painful menstruation, leucorrhœa, bearing-down pains, backache, headache, dizzy and fainting spells, and stomach trouble.

"I doctored for about five years but did not seem to improve. I began the use of your medicine, and have taken seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, three of Blood Purifier, and also used the Sanative Wash and Liver Pills, and am now enjoying good health, and have gained in flesh. I thank you very much for what you have done for me, and heartily recommend your medicine to all suffering women."—MISS EMMA SNYDER, 218 East Center St., Marion, Ohio.

"FREE MEDICAL ADVICE TO WOMEN."

Women would save time and much sickness if they would write to Mrs. Pinkham for advice as soon as any distressing symptoms appear. It is free, and has put thousands of women on the right road to recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham never violates the confidence thus entrusted to her, and although she publishes thousands of testimonials from women who have been benefited by her advice and medicine, never in all her experience has she published such a letter without the full consent, and often by special request of the writer.

COURTING AND THE COURTS

How Easy It is to Be Made Liable in a Breach of Promise Case. :-:

EVER since Margaret Gardyner and her daughter Alice brought what is reputed to have been the first breach of promise suit against John Keche, of Ypswych, showing that he, the said John Keche, had received a sum of money on condition of his marrying the aforesaid Alice, and that he had married Joan Bloys, "ageyne all good reason and conscience," breach of promise suits have been recognized among all English speaking peoples. Lord Holt enforced it at common law, holding that "the wounded spirit, the unmerited disgrace and the solitude which would be the probable consequence of desertion after a long courtship, were considered as legitimate claims for pecuniary damages as the loss of reputation by slander or the wounded pride in slight assaults and batteries."

These matrimonial contracts are sui generis. No grim-visaged lawyer draws up a formal contract to be executed; no notary pries into the intents and purposes of the parties and certifies the same under his official seal; no go-between Pandarus is present to hold the hands of Troilus and Cressida and solemnly pronounce:

"A bargain made; seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness."

No—in the vine-clad arbor, or behind the protecting screens of parlor walls, in some shady nook, or in the dim moonlight deep down some lonely dell, "far sunken from the healthy breath of morn and eve's one star," there these engagements are softly whispered and the contract sealed with a kiss.

For these reasons, while the making of the contract is a question of proof, if need not be proved in totidem verbis, and is often inferred from the actions, language and conduct of the parties, and it is difficult to tell under what circumstances the court would be justified in finding that a promise had been made. Many a young man, not fatally bent on matrimony, would sometimes be surprised to find that his language, intended only as a compliment to some charming damsel, or his conduct, meant solely as an act of gallantry, is sufficient in the eyes of the law to support proof of a promise to marry.

A gentleman once concluded that it would be a very elegant and a very funny thing to send to his dulcinea a newspaper article entitled, "Love, the Conqueror," marking it: "Read this." The lady did read it, and when the funny gentleman declined—to marry her, she brought suit against him and read the article to the jury, who gave her $4000 damages. The Supreme Court of Illinois, sustaining the verdict, said: "The article may be regarded as the defendant's own letter. It doubtless contained sentiment which he sanctioned, couched in language more choice than he could compose. It was his appeal for marriage—it foretold in clear and emphatic language his object and intent in his courtship with her. She doubtless placed this construction upon it, as she well might do, and laid it aside as a rare treasure."

In a New York case it was shown on the trial that a widower, a pious elder of fifty-three years of age, soon after the death of his wife, visited the plaintiff, a maiden lady of thirty, and taking out a memorandum book, from which he read, or pretended to read, stated in a confidential way, that he had noted down some requests made by his wife four days before her death; that it was something he "could not tell her now," but that she (the maiden lady) "would know some day," darkly hinting, so the lady took it, that the deceased wife had requested the forlorn widower to lighten his grief by marrying the plaintiff. It was proved that after this confidential talk there were rides and drives together, frequent visits extending till late in the evening, and, to cap the climax, the widower told the plaintiff that after the lapse of a year from the death of his wife (the widower's quarantine, it seems), he intended to marry, and he then entered into a minute description of the lady he wanted to marry, which description was an exact photograph of the plaintiff. While we cannot but admire the shrewd diplomacy of this wily widower, courting by dark insinuations and covert suggestions, and not committing himself by an open avowal, yet, as the sequel shows, he ran amuck of the doctrine of estoppel.

The sanctimonious Proteus forgot his Julia and found him another sweetheart, and, knowing that he had become somewhat involved in his affair with the plaintiff, he diplomatically undertook to checkmate the lady. He told her that he did not want her people to think that he was paying her the attentions of a lover so soon after the death of his wife, and, in order to allay that suspicion, he drew up a note, in which the plaintiff was made to say that she regarded his visits as "simply evidences of friendship and nothing more," and got her to sign it. The jury found in her favor and the Court of Appeals of New York upheld the verdict.

In a Connecticut case the defendant had been heard to remark on his happiness when in plaintiff's company and his utter misery unless in her society. The parties had exchanged daguerreotypes, the defendant had taught the plaintiff's nephew to call him uncle, and had told the plaintiff's brother-in-law that "all the courting was done," little suspecting that the plaintiff would take a hand at "courting" in the presence of judge and jury.

The defendant afterward went on a voyage, and while on the sea he indited effusive love letters to the plaintiff, telling her how constantly he thought of her while awake, and how he dreamed of her while asleep, touchingly adding: "While I am tossed to and fro on this wide ocean, I love thee still."

Yet, notwithstanding all this, the mad lover broke off the engagement.

The plaintiff's "courting" was fully as successful as had been that of the defendant, for she recovered a judgment for $1500.

In a Vermont case the plaintiff and defendant were neighbors, and the defendant paid neighborly visits to the plaintiff's family. It was shown that these visits were at first to the entire family, and that they were gradually narrowed until they were confined to the plaintiff alone. This fact, together with the proof that during the periods of the defendant's visits lights were frequently seen burning in the parlor on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and some other circumstances, led the jury to find for the plaintiff.

A very cruel case occurred in Michigan. A man, who, strange to relate, bore the name of Constant, while engaged in courting had his financial eye open and borrowed money from the lady. On his last visit to her he renewed his notes for one and two years, and then went off and married the other girl. The court held that it was proper to allow proof of this money transaction, holding that "an engagement broken off suddenly and without warning would very naturally create more pain and mortification than if ended under any other circumstances, and if a jury were to regard this conduct concerning money matters as calculated, under the circumstances, to have caused additional grounds of pain or grievance to the defendant in error, we think they would not be violating ordinary probabilities."

Where the defendant asked the hand of the lady in the presence of the latter's mother, who consented, and the lady said nothing, and the defendant thereupon gently took the hand of the mother and touchingly said: "Henceforth consider me as your son," it was held sufficient proof of the lady's consent; and in a New York case the lady was permitted to show that she had procured a wedding dress and had gone so far as to get a wedding cake, as showing her acceptance, while in Iowa the plaintiff was allowed to prove in support of her acceptance that she was making preparation for her marriage "piecing quilts and doing fancy work," and that when she heard of defendant's marriage, "she hated it awful bad."

While the law makes it easy to prove a proposal by the gentleman and equally easy to show that the lady accepted, when it comes to evidence showing a release on the part of the lady, then the proof must be strong to sustain the defense.

In one case a bachelor of fifty-three had been paying his respects to a maiden of forty-three summers for the unlucky period of thirteen years. During all this time she declared to others that she would never marry him and spoke of him in terms of derision and contempt. After thirteen years of courtship the bachelor summoned sufficient courage to propose and was promptly accepted. After the engagement he heard of the double dealings of the maid and refused to marry her. The court held that it was no defense to the action, although it might go to mitigate the damages.

In a Pennsylvania case the lady wrote the defendant a letter in which she said: "I don't want you, for I know that I would have a devil's life of it. If you were any kind of a gentleman you would not act as you have. I pray night and day that you may never prosper in this world. I just pray for every hair in your head to come out." And yet she recovered a judgment for $2000.

In looking beneath the surface for the reason for this verdict it is quite evident that the jury believed that the lady was goaded to desperation by the attentions of her fiance to her rival, and that she did not, in fact, mean to say that she did not want to marry him, and did not really desire that he lose all his hair, for in her letter she says cruelly of her rival: "Well, if I am poor, I do not wear the one hat for five or six years like she does, and turn it hind part before, like she does."

Under the weight of authority, then, if a party does not want to find himself, in the eyes of the law, an engaged man, he must look well to his daily walk and conversation; for, if he has so conducted himself as to be estopped from denying the engagement, he will have a difficult problem to convince a judge and jury that the lady has duly released him.—From the Green Bag.

Success Easier Than Failure.

The principles that win success are very simple and few in number. They are easily remembered. Here they are: First, industry, but not overwork; second, willingness to profit by the experience of others; third, ability, coupled with modesty; fourth, simple and correct habits; fifth, honesty, politeness and fairness. Any one of ordinary ability who practices these rules cannot avoid success. Success is easier than failure.—Atchison Globe.

LITTLE THINGS Worth Knowing

Rain has never been known to fall in Iquique, Peru. The place contains 14,000 inhabitants.

Much amusement is being caused in South Africa by the adoption by ladies of young calves as pets.

An orange measuring twelve inches in diameter and weighing nine pounds has been grown by F. Gerber, of Braam River, Kouga, South Africa.

The number of stars visible to the naked eye is fewer than 6000. The number of stars visible through the largest telescope is probably not fewer than 100,000,000.

Joseph Ganion, of Colebrook, N. H., recently trapped a silver gray fox in the Colebrook district. He values the skin of the animal at $200, and refused an offer of $125 for it.

The heaviest man in the British Empire is dead from a cancer. He was Thomas Longley, of Dover. His weight exceeded 600 pounds, while he was six feet one inch in height, and had a chest measurement of seventy inches.

Charles Gorsuch, of Martinsburg, Pa., who calls himself a scientific horseshoer, is in the habit of forging on his anvil miniature horseshoes, five-eighth of an inch long by one-half an inch wide, which he gives to some favored persons as emblems of good luck.

Menu Names.

Our grandmothers would probably not be any more at sea with the phrases of our modern cook book than we are with the unpronounceable names that are given to the sauces and relishes we read about in magazines. Here is a list which will help you to enjoy these dishes when you know what you are eating:

Au Bleu, a French term applied to fish boiled in flavored white wine.

Au Gras, dressed with meat gravy.

Au Jus, in the natural juice or gravy.

Bain-amrie is either a bath of wine, spices and vinegar (English term), or a French double-boiler for keeping sauces hot.

Bechamel, a sauce to serve hot with meats, made of butter (or dripping, our, white stock and herbs.

Blazier, a dish under which is a receptacle for coals to keep it hot.

Bordelaise, a sauce similar to Bechamel, with the addition of a half glass of claret.

Braised meat is meat stewed in a closely covered pan, with bacon, herbs or spices.

Canapes are strips of stale bread fried and spread with seasoned fish or meat paste.

Casserole is a baking dish, though sometimes a form of potatoes or rice surrounding a meat or oyster stew is termed a casserole.

Croustades, fried forms of bread to serve minced meat or eggs on.

Croutons, stale bread in one-half inch cubes, browned in a slow oven for use in soup.

Living No Longer Cheap in Asia.

During a recent tour in Asia of nearly sixteen months, from February, 1901, to June, 1902, in which I visited Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, Cochin China, Siam and Laos, the Straits Settlements, Burmah, India, Syria and Palestine, I found everywhere a deep interest in the changing economic conditions. The common people in Asia care little for politics, but the price of food and raiment touches every man, woman and child at a sensitive point.

Almost everywhere the old days of cheap living are passing away. Steamers, railways, telegraphs, newspapers, labor saving machinery and the introduction of Western ideas are slowly but surely revolutionizing the Orient. Shantung wheat, which formerly had no market beyond a radius of a few dozen miles from the wheat field, can now be shipped by railway and steamship to any part of the world, and in consequence every Chinese buyer has to pay more for it. In like manner new facilities for export have doubled, trebled, and in some places quadrupled the price of rice in China, Siam and Japan.—Century Magazine.

Birds From Barnacles.

Old-time naturalists thought that a kind of geese were hatched from barnacles. Giraldus Cambrensis, in his "Topographia Hibernise" (1154-1189), tells of birds called "Bernacae," which are produced in a marvelous way from "fir timber tossed along the sea." Surrounded by shells, they hang beak downward; then, becoming coated with feathers, they fall into the water as birds, or fly away into the air. In Munster's "Cosmography" (1550), and in Gerard's "Herball" (1597), appears an illustration of the 'barnacle tree." Geese are seen protruding from some of the fruits of this marvellous plant, while others, set free, are disporting themselves in the water below. Sir Robert Moray, before the Royal Society of Edinburgh (1677-78), actually described his having seen little shells growing on a fir tree cast up by the waves on the island of Uist, the shells "having within them little birds perfectly shaped, supposed to be barnacles."

Trolley Car's Advantage.

If only boys were trolley cars
How splendid it would be!
No one expects them to "keep still,"
For trolleys, don't you see,

To do their full duty.

A Paper Doll House.

Lots of children are getting fun making a doll house out of a scrap album. A large album is bought for 25 cents, and then the fun begins of fixing up the home. The book is spread open and on the two pages a piece of colored paper four inches deep is pasted for a carpet. Arranged on the rest of the pages are different articles of furniture cut from the house furnishing books or advertisements. Every room, from garret to cellar, is suitably furnished in this way. Not only chairs, tables and necessary things are included, but the rooms are made beautiful with all kinds of ornaments and pictures.

Moderation in Exercise.

The Japanese use practically no gymnasium apparatus, yet they show greater excellence of strength and endurance than do any other people in the world. While some of their exercises may seem violent, they take them with great moderation. At the outset of a course in jiujitsu the student is rarely upon the floor more than half an hour and three quarters of this time is devoted to walking and breathing between exercises. As the student becomes more proficient, he spends three quarters of an hour on the floor, then an hour, and so on, by degrees, until he is able to give two hours a day to the work. Yet three quarters of his time, or nearly that amount, is spent walking back and forth and in breathing.—H. Irving Hancock, in St. Nicholas Magazine.

A Mimic Senate.

The young pages in the senate, it is said, like nothing better than to set up a miniature senate just after an adjournment or when the senators are late in assembling. One of the older boys seats himself in the chair of the presiding officer, while the others take the seats of the members, and a surprisingly clever burlesque on the senatorial doings follows. One morning, during an especially noisy session of this mock congress, a bright-eyed page, who was then posing as "The gentleman from Kansas," pulled a five-dollar bill from his pocket, mounted a chair, and, waving it, yelled, "The gentleman from Arkansas wishes to introduce this bill." No sooner had he made this speech than the boys made a wild break for him, vaulting over desks in their mad pursuit after "The gentleman from Arkansas," who had made his escape out of the senate chamber and was speeding down the corridor.

Cold and Insect Tissues.

A naturalist once, after experiments in freezing insects and finding that those that had not laid their eggs nor completed their natural term of life always revived, finally cut off the head of a fly and quickly subjected the body to a low temperature. To all appearances it died, as any decapitated fly would have done sooner or later; but upon bringing it to the warmth, the body, much to his surprise, revived and resumed its struggles, until it finally died from the effects of the knife. This shows to what extent the cold acts on insect tissues. They are simply coagulated, and life does not cease, but is only suspended; for when this coagulation or congestion ends, the vital energies resume their normal conditions. If, however, an insect has nearly completed its natural term of life, it will be killed by freezing; it would continue to live for only a short time under favorable conditions in any temperature. The life of most adult insects is at best exceedingly short.—St. Nicholas Magazine.

The Largest Pet in the World.

Probably the only man in the world who has a pet whale lives on a small island in the South Pacific. He is a planter and is the only white inhabitant of his island. He has many brown-skinned assistants who cut and dry the cocoanut rinds that he sells to trading vessels. The planter makes plenty of money in his peculiar trade, but he used to be worried to provide entertainment for the visitors who bought his product. One stormy day, however, a small whale floated through the narrow entrance to the harbor, which is walled in by a coral reef. The whale appeared satisfied with its new home, and remained. As the years passed by, the baby whale proceeded to grow and to wax fat and become tame, for the planter fed it occasionally with a bushel or so of chopped meat. Now the whale is seventy feet long, and is the curiosity of the island. When a trader's boat slips into the harbor the planter gives the officers and crew a banquet under the palms, and then takes them to see the pet whale. At such times a barrel of chopped meat is rolled down to the water side and the planter stands on the shore and blows a horn. Almost instantly the water will begin to churn in the direction of the planter, and the huge whale will run its nose into the sand in its effort to get the barrel of meat in haste. After having eaten the meat, the creature leaps and rolls about gleefully, often tossing its body nearly out of the water.

Some ten or a dozen years ago a whale floundered into Oyster Bay, just north of the Columbia River mouth, and in the state of Washington. The bay is shallow and there is a sand bar at the entrance to it; but the whale must have ridden in on a big wave. At any rate the next morning perhaps the maddest whale in the world was charging up and down the bay, running its nose into the sand furiously, spouting water and mud like a geyser, and evidently determined to get back to the Pacific at any cost. For weeks the gigantic creature raged up and down the bay like a big fish in a small tub of water. The railroads ran excursions to the scene, and the captive animal drew a larger crowd than a whole circus. At last a great storm came, and when it departed the whale went with it. So the railroad declared an extra dividend, and the people about the bay went back to work or play, as suited their tastes or necessities.

The Giant of Cloudland.

Did you ever hear of the Giant of Cloudland? He owns all the clouds, and has a magnificent palace made of moss agate and turquoise. He also has a temper, and at times, spells of the blues.

In one of these blue spells, he became angry at his brother, the Sun, because he thought the Sun came too near his abode for comfort. In fact, he thought the Sun was trying to spoil his beautiful palace by scorching it with his hot rays until it turned purple and red. Cloud Giant decided he would go to the Sun and expostulate with him, so he immediately began making preparations and was soon on his way. The nearer he came to the Sun's home the warmer he became, and when his face began to blister, he thought it would be a wise idea to sit down and try to cool off, and send a wireless telegram by a fast-speeding wind. He told the Sun in his message that he must stop scorching his palace and that he preferred not to have the Sun come near him at all.

The jolly, fat Sun only smiled when he received this message, and bidding the wind depart, sent a return message by a sunbeam.

"Dear Brother Cloud Giant—You are cross and crabbed and take life too seriously. You should smile upon the world. What's the use of getting angry with me? I am only doing my duty as our Mother Nature taught me to do, and were I to change my course, or do anything out of the ordinary, I should create great disturbance both in our country and the world below. Your palace is not hurt by my close contact. My turning in into purple and gold in the evening, only intensified its beauty, and varies its monotony of color. If I stay away you will have a dull, dark, dreary-looking home.

"Now, my brother, look up, smile and drive the vapor away. Yours merrily,

"SUN."

When the Cloud Giant read this message he was angrier than ever and went into a rage, storming around fearfully and bursting into tears, so great was his wrath.

The Sun, who was coming to meet the Cloud Giant, was surprised at this great display of temper and chided him for deluging the earth below so as to cause much havoc. He implored his weeping brother to stop his tears and laugh and be happy for a little while at least. "You see, dear Cloud Giant, when you weep so copiously you cause others to be unhappy, and when you laugh and are bright and gay, all the world laughs and is gay with you. Come, let us make up and be friends, smile upon each other and upon the world, and all will be the better for it."

The Cloud Giant became quieter though not entirely consoled, and replied querulously: "You should not always be so happy, Mr. Sun; I am not the only one who causes disturbances and sorrows. Only yesterday, besides scorching my palace, you killed 50 people and 300 horses in the world below, by your red hot breath. You burn houses and wheat fields often and only laugh at the desolation you cause."

"Oh, now really, Cloud Giant, I do not laugh because I have done harm to the people. You see none can avoid doing harm at times, and when I do harmful things, I am always very sorry, but knowing it can not be avoided, I laugh to keep myself from getting morose and melancholy. It is my nature, too, you know, to laugh. The people forgive my faults because they know I do not hurt them intentionally. When I smile upon them too warmly, they know I mean to be kind. I only wish to ripen their grain and help them gain a livelihood, so they pardon me when I am overzealous."

"Well, you know, Sun, that I have a melancholy, tearful nature and I can not always be smiling."

"Yes, that is true, brother, but I tell you what let us do. We will strive from this moment to do our duty as Mother Nature has taught us, and we will try to be happy each in his own way, and that way is in doing good to others. Let us try to be kind to all, and try not to hurt anybody, so that if we do, accidentally, as all are liable to, we will be forgiven, and then we will strive harder in the right way."

The Cloud Giant was now completely pacified and began to smile.

"All right, brother Sun, here is my hand on it. We will try to do our duty, and attend to our own affairs in future."

The two brothers embraced and went their separate ways, each bent upon living in future as their beautiful mother had taught them.

A Wonderful Motor.

Details are published of a wond new motor invented by Peter Th an English engineer. The inve is considered of such importance its development may result in ex railway engines running twice present speed at only half the co in Atlantic liners crossing from l pool to New York in three days.

It is almost small enough to b ried in a typewriter case. The motor is capable of developing revolutions a minute, giving 15 power under a boiler pressure pounds to the square inch.

In even the best railway locom the steam is admitted after the has moved from five to eight i along the cylinder. Mr. Thornl devised a valve which will ad seven quantity of steam at every nencement of the stroke and so a ranged that the expansive for the steam admitted is just sufficie drive the piston at the end of its ney.

By the most modest estimate saving in coal is 25 per cent, the simplicity of the motor is far the initial cost is much ch than existing types.—New York mercial.

SYMPATHY.

I chanced to see the other day
A rosy little chap,
A boy from school, released to play.
He wore a nice warm cap,
An overcoat, new rubber shoes—
A better garb no man might choose.

I also saw—and he saw, too—
A fine deep, muddy pool.
The sight attracted others who
Were newly come from school.
A puddle is a thing of joy
To any well-constructed boy.

The lad I marked did straightway dash,
All with a joyous whoop,
Into that pool; he went ker-splash,
Ker-chug, ker-slop, ker-scloop.
He paddled in that lovely slime;
You bet he had a royal time.

And soon his nice, warm overcoat
Was soaked with muddy slop.
His cap did on the water float
Where it had chanced to drop.
His hose were drenched, his knickers wet
And muddy as they well could get.

I watched that youngster with a smile
Of kindly sympathy.
And as I watched I thought the while,
"I would that boy were I."
But had he been my boy I tell
You I'd have caught and spanked him well.

London in Moscow.

The continued activity with which the searching of refuse heaps in quest of treasure is being prosecuted makes it interesting to remember that the sifters and sorts of London were once wealthy and organized. A case is on record of one woman who in eight years was able to build house property out of the profits of her grubbing and gleaning. It seems scarcely credible that Moscow is built upon London rubbish. Such, however, is the case. An enormous heap of refuse at the Battle bridge end of what is now Caledonian road, which was "the grand center of dustmen, scavengers, horse and dog dealers, knackermen, brick makers, and other low but necessary professionalists," had lain in that position since the great fire. After the destruction of Moscow upon the visit of Napoleon, the Russians, by some means, came to hear of this dust heap. They bought it, bricks, bones, rubbish and all, shipped it off to Moscow, and upon it founded the resurrected city which travelers know today.—St. James' Gazette.

Jefferson Davis' Secretary Dead.

Burton Norvilie Harrison, a lawyer of New York, and husband of Mrs. Burton Harrison, the authoress, and father of Congressman Harrison, of New York city, is dead, aged 65 years.

Death resulted from a general breakdown due partially to old age. During the war Mr. Harrison was private secretary to Jefferson Davis, the president of the southern confederacy, remaining with him in the relation of almost a son, as well as secretary to the end of the war. He shared in the capture of Mr. Davis, rather than forsake his fortunes at their fall.

When Mr. Davis was carried to Fort Monroe for imprisonment, Mr. Harrison was sent to prison in Washington, and finally sent to Fort Delaware, where he remained in solitary confinement until 1866, when he was released.

There are no rich men in Japan, as judged by the standards of the United States. There are only two men in the empire who pay an income tax on over $125,000 a year. More astonishing still to American eyes are the statements that there are only thirteen men in the empire who pay on $20,000 a year; thirty-seven on $12,000; ninety-three on $8,500 and 140 on $5,500. Out of every 1,000 in the empire there are only seven who have incomes which equal $1,350 a year. Yet the 44,000,000 people of this comparatively poor little country buy from the outside world goods to the yearly average of $7 each. The total wealth of the empire of Japan has been estimated as follows:

Lands	$3,500,000,000
Mines	250,000,000
Live stock	40,000,000
Buildings	950,000,000

"It might be well for the Japanese sympathizers in this country to consider what effect a complete triumph for Japan in the present war may have on the far east," writes a prominent diplomat. "With the Philippines offering thousands of miles of unprotected coast line, and with the Hawaiian islands in a similar condition, it is well for the United States to consider what will happen if a great power should make up its mind to become master of the east. American army officers have repeatedly called attention to the impossibility of defending the Philippines and the Hawaiian islands under present conditions."

Dr. Reaume, member for Windsor, in the provincial legislature of Canada, has introduced a bill to amend the marriage act by inserting a clause that when parties desiring to wed reside outside the Dominion of Canada, their application for marriage license shall be accompanied by an affidavit stating that the notice of their proposed marriage has been published for seven days in two newspapers of the town where the license was issued. If the bill is passed it will cause Windsor to lose its reputation for Gretna Green affairs.

REACH THE SPOT.

To cure an aching back,
The pains of rheumatism,
The tired-out feelings,
You must reach the spot—get at the cause.
In most cases 'tis the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys.

Charles Bierbach, stone contractor, living at 2625 Chestnut St., Erie, Pa., says: "For two years I had kidney trouble, and there was such a severe pain through my loins and limbs that I could not stoop or straighten up without great pain, had difficulty in getting about and was unable to rest at night, arising in the morning tired and worn out. The kidney secretions were irregular and deposited a heavy sediment. Doctors treated me for rheumatism, but failed to help me. I lost all confidence in medicine, and began to feel as if life were not worth living. Doan's Kidney Pills, however, relieved me so quickly and so thoroughly that I gladly made a statement to that effect for publication. This was in 1898, and during the six years which have elapsed I have never known Doan's Kidney Pills to fail. They cured my wife of a severe case of backache in the same thorough manner."

A free trial of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Bierbach will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price 50 cents per box.

A prominent club woman, Mrs. Danforth, of St. Joseph, Mich., tells how she was cured of falling of the womb and its accompanying pains and misery by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Life looks dark indeed when a woman feels that her strength is fading away and she has no hopes of ever being restored. Such was my feeling a few months ago when I was advised that my poor health was caused by prolapsus or falling of the womb. The words sounded like a knell to me, I felt that my sun had set; but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound came to me as an elixir of life; it restored the lost forces and built me up until my good health returned to me. For four months I took the medicine daily and each dose added health and strength. I am so thankful for the help I obtained through its use."—MRS. FLORENCE DANFORTH, 1007 Miles Ave., St. Joseph, Mich.

A medicine that has restored so many women to health and can produce proof of the fact must be regarded with respect. This is the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which cannot be equalled by any other medicine the world has ever produced. Here is another case:—

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For years I was troubled with falling of the womb, irregular and painful menstruation, leucorrhœa, bearing-down pains, backache, headache, dizzy and fainting spells, and stomach trouble.

"I doctored for about five years but did not seem to improve. I began the use of your medicine, and have taken seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, three of Blood Purifier, and also used the Sanative Wash and Liver Pills, and am now enjoying good health, and have gained in flesh. I thank you very much for what you have done for me, and heartily recommend your medicine to all suffering women."—MISS EMMA SNYDER, 218 East Center St., Marion, Ohio.

The council is willing to act, it is said, but is delaying over a question of whether the money should come from taxation or be taken from a bequest long ago made for the purpose, the validity of which is undecided.

PANAMA'S $10,000,000

Is Not Yet Paid But Title is Now Considered Perfect

A report from Colon says:

"Great surprise is manifested in all circles here over the alleged non-fulfillment by the United States of the agreement on the exchange of ratifications of the canal treaty, the United States to pay the new republic the sum of $10,000,000. It is said the delay of the United States to make the payment has forced the government of Panama to float a loan in New York."

And this comes from Washington:

"The reason for the non-payment to Panama up to the present time of the $10,000,000 on account of acquisition of the canal territory doubtless is to be found in the fact that title can not be taken to the canal and the rights therein until after certain necessary formalities in Paris, whither two law officers of the department of justice have gone to see that the Panama Canal company regularly conveys its rights and title to the canal property, has been carried out."

Colombia Must Pay the Costs.

The first civil tribunal of the Seine has decided the case of the republic of Colombia against the Panama Canal company in favor of the defendants. The decision holds that the complaint of Colombia is not reviewable, and condemns the plaintiffs to pay the cost of the action. This decision has the effect of removing the legal obstacles in the way of the transfer of the canal concessions of the company to the United States.

March Crops.

The weather bureau's summary of crop conditions for March contains this:

From the upper Mississippi valley to the middle Atlantic coast the season is generally reported backward, although the average temperature for the month in those districts was generally in excess of the normal. In the southern states the month has been mild and favorable for farming operations. The northern portion of the central gulf states, however, the central valleys and the greater part of the lake region, suffered from excessive rains, and western Texas and the southern plateau region from drought.

Over the western portion of the principal winter wheat area the reports indicate an improvement in the condition of winter wheat area.

Good progress has been made with oat seeding in the southern states with the exception of western Texas, where it has been too dry.

In the gulf states March corn has been making favorable headway. In southern Texas about half the crop has been planted, and the early planted corn is coming up nicely.

The mean or normal temperature for the Aprils of the past eight years has been 64 degrees. The warmest was that of 1896, with an average of 70 degrees; the coldest was that of 1901, with an average of 59 degrees; the highest temperature was 90 degrees on the 17th and 23, 1896, and the 30th, 1901; the lowest was 28 on the 6th, 1898; average date on which last "killing" frost occurred in spring, March 19th; the latest date on which last "killing" frost occurred in spring, April 8th; average precipitation for the month, 5.52 inches; the greatest monthly precipitation was 13.06 inches in 1900; the least was 2.27 inches in 1903; prevailing winds have been from the northwest.

The World's Cotton.

The cotton crop grown last year is put by the department of agriculture at 17,179,765 bales, but this aggregate is reached by estimating the Chinese and Korean crops, about which no definite information is available.

The Chinese crop is estimated at 1,200,000 bales, and the Korean crop at 400,000 bales. The consular reports are the basis of these estimates; no doubt they are approximately correct. The United States grows two-thirds of all the cotton grown in the world.

The value of the entire crop last year was $702,082,451, of which the United States supplied $501,897,135.

To be Enlarged and Beautified—New Commandant.

The board of control of the Jeff Falkner soldiers' home at Mountain Creek reports conditions at the home satisfactory and the work of completing the building and beautifying the grounds will be immediately begun. The plans, as originated by Captain Jeff Falkner, are to be carried out in so far as the state appropriation of $25,000 will carry them. It is definitely determined among other things to build a hospital and construct a system of water works and sewerage.

At present there are thirty inmates in the home, and within the next ten days there will be room for as many more. Buildings to accommodate one hundred are to be erected. The board decided that each of the congressional districts in the state should be allowed an equal number of inmates of the home. A. J. Brooks, of Montgomery, a deserving confederate soldier, was elected commandant of the home.

Death in a Wreck.

Two men were killed, one probably fatally injured and seven more or less injured in a collision between a westbound freight train and an east-bound work train near Weems on the Southern Friday afternoon.

The dead are:

Section Foreman J. T. Kilpatrick, of Leeds, and Frank Watts, a negro section hand. J. T. Chambers, supervisor, Moffin, Ala., had his skull fractured and bruises; may die.

The wreck was caused by a misunderstanding between the conductor and flagman of the work tram, which was laying cross ties along the mail line.

LATER.—John T. Chambers, supervisor of the Southern railway between Anniston and Birmingham, died Saturday of his injuries.

Ohio Has Him Now.

L. C. Harding, accused of using the United States mails to defraud, and for whom the governor of Alabama two months ago issued a requisition, which the governor of Florida refused to honor, when brought before Commissioner Crane, of Tampa, was discharged, but was immediately rearrested on a requisition from the governor of Ohio. Detective Calahan left with the prisoner at once for Ohio, but state officials are in pursuit with a writ of habeas corpus.

L. C. Harding, charged with various frauds in Ohio and Tennessee, rode out of Florida in a United States mail car much against his will and also against the will of the state court officials. There was a scene, a fight and contending legal forms and threats, but the detective was not to be bluffed.

Alabama Iron.

Pennsylvania makes a great deal of basic pig iron, and so does Ohio, but Alabama follows Ohio closely, our production last year being 172,280 tons. But when the list of producers of foundry iron is taken up, Alabama stands at the top, her product of last year having been 1,194,556 tons, and Pennsylvania's was 948,857 tons, and no other state half as much. In the manufacture of forge pig iron Alabama is outranked by Pennsylvania only. Alabama also made in 1903 more white and mottled than any other state except Pennsylvania.

Mrs. E. B. Hunter, wife of a prominent business man of Memphis, Tenn., committed suicide in her apartments at the Grand hotel, Cincinnati, in a peculiar manner. She was returning from an eastern sanitarium in charge of a nurse. She sent the nurse to the theater, secured a large collection of roses, and then shot herself in the head.

The largest artificial body of water in the world, ten miles in length and over five miles in width, and covering 17,000 acres, is the reservoir which supplies Celina, Ohio.

In 1885 there were only 16,000 to 17,000 Jews in Jerusalem. Last year in the city they numbered at least 41,000. In all about 250,000 are actually in Palestine.

A New Railroad.

The survey of the Central of Alabama, to run from Decatur to Tuscaloosa via Jasper, has been made. It is reported that the Illinois Central railroad is buying fine timber, iron and coal lands along the proposed road at from 75 cents to $2 an acre, and that the same company is now building a road from Amory, Miss., to Jasper, Ala., and is also building a road from a point in Tennessee to Sheffield.

A LOBSTER AND AN EAGLE.

Fierce Duel, in Which the Feathered Fighter Was Beaten.

"The disappearing lobster," as fish commissioners have termed him, might not only remain, but flourish and increase if he always resisted capture like one described in Forest and Stream. The lobster in question lived in Newfoundland. His would-be captor was a white-headed eagle. Says a witness of the conflict:

"My guide and I were sitting on the rocks by the seashore watching the bird soaring round in circles, when suddenly we saw him dash down into a pool of water close by us on the beach and reappear, holding an enormous lobster in his talons. He was an old lobster with a huge claw white with barnacles; but the eagle had him clutched firmly around the back, and at first we could see the claw hanging helplessly down, the barnacles shining white in the sunlight.

"Only for a second, though. The ripples on the pool had not died away, the large drops of water had not ceased to fall upon its surface from the soaring eagle's feathers and the captive lobster alike, when the lobster suddenly woke to the seriousness of the situation, and to think with that apparently helpless creature was to act. Up came the great white barnacled claw and seized the eagle around the neck.

"There was a furious fluttering and beating of wings, a melancholy squawk, and then, tumbling and rolling head over heels in the air in a confused mass, down came the eagle and lobster again into the pool.

"We rushed forward, thinking that we could, perhaps, in some way secure both combatants, as the splashing of the conflict continued in the shallow water. But we had hardly time to pick up a stone apiece to throw at the eagle before the lobster, feeling himself at home again, let go his hold.

"Now, with his neck all torn and devoid of feathers, away flew the bedraggled eagle to a neighboring cliff, while, still brandishing his enormous claw in defiance, the lobster remained—smiling, perhaps—at the bottom of the pool. But the lobster will doubtless tell you, if you meet him, that the lobster fishing in Newfoundland is very poor at present."

An Ideal Trapper.

Among Iredell's game trappers is Mr. W. H. Boovey, who operates along the banks of Third Creek. Mr. Boovey was in town Saturday and sold to Messrs. Brawley & Henry nine mink hides, receiving $18.00 for them, or $2.10 each. Since the season opened in December Mr. Boovey has worked forty-two hides. The season for trapping minks is during the three months of December, January and February. Owing to such cold weather this winter, hides will be good until the middle of March. Mr. Boovey uses a smooth jawed steel trap for his business, and says during all his trapping experience he has not known but one mink to gnaw off its foot and thereby release itself. It is not necessary to bait the trap at all. The trap is set in a mink path and is covered over with a shallow coat of sand so as to deceive the mink. Mr. Boovey scatters his traps about and some mornings it means a fifteen mile walk to go around to all of them. He sometimes starts out in the morning, sets traps along his route, and by the time he locates the last one, he is so far from home that he spends the night at the other end of the line and returns home next morning, bagging the night's catch as he goes. When a neighbor is bothered with minks, he sends for Mr. Boovey as he would for the thresherman in harvest time. Mr. Boovey moves his traps to his neighbor's place and is generally several mink hides to the good when he leaves.—Statesville (N. C.) Landmark.

Not Much Impressed.

If New York has a word to say to the stranger within its gates, says a correspondent of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, it is this: "Have you succeeded at home? If not, why do you think you will succeed where conditions are more complex and difficult?" But in New York, as in other large cities, those who are not to be "bluffed" or discouraged and who go resolutely about their business are reasonably sure of success. Sometimes, perhaps, a little success makes more of a noise in the world than it should.

One evening in a restaurant, says the correspondent, we were waited on by a real Southern darky. He was so unmistakable that at last I said to him, "George?"

"Yas'm," was the grateful rejoinder.

"You're from the South, aren't you?"

"Yas'm. Ah's from de South."

"How did you get up here?"

"Ah don' know, ma'm, how come Ah come."

"And what do you think of New York, George?"

He hesitated, and then summing it up in his mind, he said:

"New York? 'Peah's lak dish hyeh New York es got a good deal er rattlin' er de dishes fer de victuals what's served."

Mr. Edison knows a great deal about telephones, and when he expresses skepticism as to the practicability of telephoning directly to London across the Atlantic ocean many of us will agree with him. The world accepts almost anything in the line of invention and scientific discovery as possible nowadays; yet there are some obstacles at which popular credulity balks.

Comer has three hundred majority, Wiley is far ahead, Bricken for solicitor by two hundred majority, old members supreme court and Denson and Kelly for new. Dean will get 40 per cent of all the votes cast for probate judge, and his opponents, Savage and Stallworth, will divide the other, with Savage leading.

LATER—Wiley's majority is considerably cut down. Dean lacks 17 of a majority over Sawyer and Stallworth, necessitating a run over.

COOSA.

Eight beats heard from give McClellan 273, Anderson 219, Callahan 80, Denson 580, Dowdell 349, Haralson 204, Kelly 281, Sayre 167, Selheimer 53, Simpson 212, Thorington 200, Tyson 332. Brooks by 267 for county solicitor; state solicitor, Bricken 244, Powell 133, Jones 33; for congress, Wiley 133; Graves 195, Kelly 137, Thorington 161, Denson 132, Tyson 201, Comer 205, Smith 95, Kolb 2.

Bricken carried every county in the circuit.

CULLMAN.

Comer carries the county by a good majority for railroad commissioner. Bob Burke will win for probate judge by at least 200, according to the present outlook. S. H. Hearin, for clerk, and John Fowler, for collector, seem winners. Tax assessor is close, with chances in favor of Aldredge.

Kyle captures the judicial honors. It is expected the delegates will go uninstructed.

DALLAS.

From returns received from twenty-one out of thirty-six beats in the county, including five wards in the city, the race between Comer and Smith is close. Smith carried the city by 73 votes, but the precincts yet to hear from, which will go for Comer, will give him the county by about 50 votes.

Additional reports from thirty beats heard from places railroad commissioner figures: Comer 648, Compton 6, Kolb 84, Smith 636. For solicitor in the same thirty precincts, Fowlkes 196, Mangum 1,029, Thompson 155.

DeKALB.

Comer's majority estimated at 800; Haralson for supreme court judge, 1,100; Burnett for congress, 800; Hunt, for solicitor, small majority. No delegates for national convention named.

Crowley is nominated probate judge, Burt, circuit clerk. Copeland, treasurer. Cain, tax collector; Hawkins, tax assessor, and Callahan superintendent of education.

ELMORE.

Comer carried the county. Holley has 500 over Tate for solicitor. Lancaster defeats Lull for judge of probate by about 1,000.

ETOWAH.

Penn claims the probate judgeship over Lovejoy by two votes.

FRANKLIN.

Burnett 585, Lusk 94 and three beats to hear from.

Indications are that 750 votes have been cast in Franklin county. It seems Moody is elected probate judge, Dillard circuit clerk, Wrenn tax collector and Hyde treasurer.

HALE.

Hobson's majority is 342 and Comer's about 200. Thompson for solicitor carries Hale. The following county officers are nominated: Probate judge, W. C. Christian; tax assessor, E. S. Jack; tax collector, J. H. Turpin; circuit clerk, Cad Garrett; treasurer, Charles Stollenwerck; delegates anti-Hearst.

HENRY.

Comer appears to be a winner in this county. Anderson, Callahan, Dowdell, Haralson, Sayre and Tyson lead for the supreme court. Two hundred and fifty votes were polled at Abbeville and Comer beat Smith two to one.

Pearce has carried the county over Hubbard for circuit judge. Blackledge has won for circuit clerk, Whitehead for collector and Davis for superintendent.

GENEVA.

This county gives Comer about 200 majority. Sayre and Thorington lead for the supreme court.

GREENE.

The official ballot will not be counted until Thursday, and until then nothing definite can be learned. J. C. Anderson, W. S. Thorington, R. T. Simpson were elected. For solicitor of the sixth judicial circuit W. B. Oliver; for chancellor southwestern division, T. W. Smith; for congressman, Bankhead; for probate judge, Judge A. P. Smith 252; for railroad commissioner, B. B. Comer 171; for circuit clerk, R. E. Mobley 183; for judge sixth judicial circuit, Hon. S. H. Sprott 188; for county treasurer, B. B. Barnes; for tax assessor, George F. Hardy; for collector, F. D. Parham.

HOUSTON.

Leslie, for probate judge, estimated majority in county 300 to 500. Delegates to state convention will be uninstructed, but against Hearst. Comer has carried county 500 to 1,000 majority.

JACKSON.

Comer will carry the county 2 to 1. Judge Talley has carried Jackson by 1,200 majority over Haralson for judge of the seventeenth district.

County primary here was held in February and the vote Monday was small.

LAUDERDALE.

Comer carries the county, as do Simpson, Kelly and Anderson.

JEFFERSON.

Although the returns are incomplete, it seems that the following ticket has carried in Jefferson county:

Senior Judge Circuit Court—Senn.
First Associate—Coleman.
Second Associate—Ferguson.
Third Associate—Weaver.
County Solicitor—Heflin.
Circuit Solicitor—McQueen.
Clerk Circuit Court—McAdory.
Register—Gillespy.
Probate Judge—Greene.
Treasurer—Miller.
Collector—Tarrant.
Assessor—Hewitt.
Superintendent of Education—McAdory.
Coroner—Paris.

LAWRENCE.

Smith wins over Comer by 300.

Lawrence county gives the majorities to McClellan, Anderson, Callahan, Denson, Haralson, Simpson, Kelly and Tyson by 300. Speake and Kyle for circuit judge are close. Almon, for solicitor, has a majority over Price of 800. Richardson had no opposition for congress and Simpson wins for chancellor. The county ticket majorities are: Kumpe, judge, 1,000; Byars and Harris, for fclerk, close; Bracken, collector, 200; Henderson, treasurer, 1,000; board of revenue, Sheets, Prewitt, Windham and Caruth; coroner, Thomas J. Coffey.

LEE.

Lyons wins probate office and Frazer the solicitorship and Stevens the collectorship.

LIMESTONE.

Smith leads for railroad commissioner, with Kolb second. The race for circuit judge is close between Ballentine and Speake. Comer did but little here. Pettus will carry the county by a large majority for solicitor.

MACON.

Indications are that Anderson, Denson, Dowdell, Sayre, Thorington and Tyson will lead in the race for associate justices. Comer will poll 200 more votes than Smith. The race for representative will be close between Catts and Heflin. The county will be almost solid for S. L. Brewer for judge of the fifth judicial circuit.

MADISON.

Betts carried Madison county, but fell off in Limestone.

Pettus has received a majority in the circuit for solicitor.

Comer carried Madison county by a small margin.

On the county ticket W. T. Lawley won for probate judge by 600 plurality; H. B. Roper, for circuit clerk; B. E. Gardiner, for collector, and J. W. Garner for assessor, by safe majorities. The vote of Charles Anderson and Frank Hereford for treasurer is so close that the result will not be known until the last box is in.

The Madison county vote, about 7,300, is small.

Delegates to the convention are all instructed for Parker for president.

MARION.

All but six beats heard from give Bankhead a majority of 247. His majority will be 350 or 400 in this county. Comer gets the county by a small majority.

County safe for Bankhead.

Vote for county officers close and run-overs are necessary. Mims will be Six precincts give Lusk a majority of 213 over Burnett. Comer's majority is about 500.

MOBILE.

The vote was not as large as was expected. Smith will probably get the county by a small majority. John C. Anderson will lead the ticket for supreme court judge.

LATER—Smith wins for commissioner by small vote.

MORGAN.

Comer wins by 250.

Callahan has carried Morgan for associate justice of the supreme court. Speake has carried Morgan county for circuit judge, but Kyle carried Lawrence and Cullman and will be nominated. The delegates to the state convention will go uninstructed. The probate judgeship is conceded to William E. Skeggs and solicitor to D. C. Almon.

RANDOLPH.

Heflin carries the county for congress by a large plurality. Comer is also a winner. Dowdell and Denson get big vote for the supreme court.

RUSSELL.

Russell county gives Comer a majority of 123.

For solicitor of the third judicial circuit, the vote was: Samford, 401; Frazer, 243; Samford's majority, 156. In the race for tax collector H. B. Pitts was a winner, his plurality over B. Ivey Burt, the next highest candidate, being 65. C. O. Martin was re-elected tax collector, doubling the vote of the highest opposition candidate. In the race for county superintendent of education, J. L. Pollard received 367 votes and B. B. Broughton 284.

SHELBY.

Nine out of nineteen beats heard from give McMillan a majority over Lyman for probate judge of 242. There were about 1,000 votes polled in primary. Comer has carried the county by 200 majority. D. R. McMillan has carried it for probate judge by at least 300 majority. Kelly has the county for associate justice. All the old members of the court carried the county. Whitesides has it for chancellor.

SUMTER.

ST. CLAIR.

W. S. Forman has 100 majority over J. A. Embry for probate judge with some small beats and Ragland not in.

Oliver has the county for chancellor, Whitesides second. The issue was made on Screws and anti-Screws in the state delegation contest, and three out of four Screws men were elected. Comer 719, Smith 259, Kolb 72.

TUSCALOOSA.

Bankhead's majority so far is 568, with three beats to hear from. Altman has a majority over Carmichael.

WALKER.

Reports from the various precincts indicate that Hobson has carried Walker county by about 30 majority. S. Lacey defeats Judge Ray for judge of the fourteenth judicial circuit by a large majority. For solicitor of the fourteenth circuit, the indications point to the election of R. L. Blanton.

Shepherd has carried the county for probate judge against Jack Moore by 250 majority. E. W. Long defeated R. A. O'Rear for clerk of the circuit court. Morrow gains nomination for treasurer.

CASTRO CLAIMS

That American Asphalt Company Financially Aided Revolution.

Much excitement is said to exist in Venezuela over the alleged discovery that an American Asphalt company gave financial aid to the Matos revolution, which was put down about six months ago. President Castro is said to have declared that he has proof that agents of the company aided Matos in his revolution, while the claim of the company was being contested in the courts of Venezuela. President Castro has caused suits to be entered for the abrogation of the concessions granted the company. If these suits should prevail the recent decision of the supreme court of Venezuela in favor of the American asphalt combine would fall flat.

General Toral, who surrendered Santiago de Cuba to the Americans and who has since brooded over the capitulation, died Tuesday at Leganes insane asylum.

COMER NOMINATED

And All Congressmen Will Succeed Themselves

On account of the length of the ballots the count will be necessarily slow, but enough returns have been received to indicate that B. B. Comer has swept the state for president of the railroad commission and will be nominated by an overwhelming majority.

From the returns at hand John V. Smith has carried only five counties—Colbert, Limestone, Chambers, Baldwin and Lawrence.

Indications point to the nomination of J. R. Dowdell, Jonathan Harralson, John R. Tyson, N. D. Denson, John C. Anderson and A. D. Sayre for associate justices of the supreme court. Chief Justice Thomas N. McClellan had no opposition.

Returns from the congressional districts indicate that all of the present congressmen from Alabama will be returned to the house of representatives.

In the fifth district indications point to the nomination of J. Thomas Heflin, secretary of state.

DISPUTE OVER FIFTY CENTS

Ends in Pistol Duel—One Killed; the Other Seriously Wounded.

In Birmingham, E. P. McDonald was shot and almost instantly killed Monday night by Alexander S. Lawson, an engineer on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, who in turn was shot through the thigh and badly wounded by McDonald.

The tragedy was the result of a quarrel about 50 cents which Lawson claimed was due him by the Stag saloon. He made the statement that he had been "short changed" by the bartender, and McDonald took it up, saying with emphasis that it was not true. McDonald threatened to shoot Lawson. Lawson stated that he was not armed, but that he would be back in a few minutes and kill McDonald.

McDonald said that he would not shoot him if he was not armed, but that he would wait until he came back. Lawson came back half an hour afterwards and the shooting took place.

Talladega Boy Kills His Father.

A special from Talladega, says. Will Castleberry shot and instantly killed his father, J. C. Castleberry, Saturday morning. He borrowed a pistol and made the statement that he intended killing his father. Young Castleberry subsequently gave himself up is now in jail. No cause has been assigned for the shooting.

The land area of the south is 585,312,000 acres. In 1900 the total farm acreage was 387,690,426 acres, or about two-thirds of the total land area. The total improved acreage was only 145,185,599 acres, or about 40 per cent of the total farm acreage. This leaves 242,000,000 acres of farm lands to be put into cultivation. The unimproved farm lands of the south give a greater area for settlement and cultivation than the total area of Texas. Over 110,000,000 acres of this unimproved farm land lies east of the Mississippi river. The total value of farm lands and improvements in the south in 1900 was $3,182,573,472, and of all farm property $5,158,161,991.

Tuesday, August 2d, has been fixed as Alabama Day at the St. Louis exposition. It was decided upon after considerable correspondence between the club and State Historian Thomas M. Owen, who suggested that this date would be most appropriate, as it would celebrate Alabama's adoption of a constitution.

In presidential years congress has adjourned as early as June 7 (1900) and as late as October 20 (1888).

Justice of the Peace Ormond, Attorney W. H. Withers and Deputy Sheriff T. J. Jones were indicted by the federal grand jury at Atlanta. The charge against them is that of being in collusion and with conspiracy in order to interfere with and defeat the extradition of Charles Blazer—L. C. Harding.

Arnold L. Kay, an employe of the Southern railway, was the victim of an accident at the railroad tracks near the Sloss furnaces. In coupling two box cars he was caught in the coupler his right leg was crushed and he received internal injuries.

Manuel Guavesi, who has been for five years at the head of the Yaqui Indians in Mexico, and who in that time instigated many uprisings, first in one section and then in another, has been captured and executed.

April 28th has been discussed in committee rooms and among senators and representatives as not an improbable date for the termination of the present session of congress.

GOOD POINTS OF POVERTY.

I do not curse my poverty,
It has its better points;
No gout has ever come my way
To stiffen up my joints.

I do not, all the long, long night
All anxious lie awake
And wonder what the chances are
For the fool bank to break.

I do not go about with black
Hell goggles on my nose—
My coat of arms a monkey wrench
And gasoliny clothes.

I do not have to dress and go
Somewh re o' nights and stay
Till 12 o'clock, and stand it while
They talk me old and gray.

Oho! I put my feet upon
My old typewriter and
I smoke my pipe and thank my stars
That I can understand.

Why Providence all-wise has cast
My lot where sunbeams fall;
A toast to poverty! It has
Its good points after all!

A STUDY IN VALUES

By ELEANOR WEST

Copyrighted, 1902, by The Authors Publishing Company

The train came to a standstill in front of the little, unpainted depot. Only one man stepped off, and with but a moment's pause the train steamed on again.

The stranger stood a moment, glancing half curiously down the line of old, wooden buildings that formed the one street. "Same old place," he thought with a half amused smile. "If old Rip Van Winkle had come back here after his twenty years' sleep he'd never have known he'd been asleep. It's the old town that has taken a twenty years' nap this time, though," he soliloquized. "There is not a new building and hardly a change of any kind since I left."

As he picked up his grip and turned towards the old weather beaten hotel, he became conscious that he was the center of interest to the loafers lounging about the platform.

An hour later he sat by the open window of his room meditatively smoking. The half amused smile returned to his face as he thought of the greetings he had just received. "I wonder who all the old codgers are, anyway," he reflected. "I've a dim idea that I used to know them, but I've had too much else to think of in the last twenty years to remember them now.

"I wonder if Jack Strong is still in this little one-horse town," his thoughts ran on. "Poor old Jack. I haven't thought of him before in years. I used to think the sun revolved around Jack. Well, I suppose he has vegitated here until he is like the rest of those old fogies down there. It's a shame, too, for Jack was as bright, ambitious a boy as you will often find. If it hadn't been for that conscience of his that wouldn't let him leave home after his father's accident, he might have made his way in the world without any trouble." The lawyer puffed his cigar in silence for a while. Presently the door opened and the landlord entered with a pitcher of water. Grey lazily turned his head and inquired, "Does Jack Strong live here yet?"

"Jack Strong? You bet he does. Brownsville wouldn't be Brownsville without Jack. Poor fellow, he's been having hard luck this last year, though." The gossip-loving landlord perched himself on the edge of the table, glad of an excuse to talk, and rambled on for the next half-hour. By the end of that time his guest was in possession of the principal events of Strong's life during the past twenty years.

"Hum, lost everything he had but the old home in that fire, did he? Had to mortgage the homestead to get funds to stock up again, had his own family and the old folks to support, his old father and mother heart-broken at the idea of leaving the homestead. Why isn't he just the man I'm looking for in this little deal?" he soliloquized. "I can make good use of him and do him a good turn at the same time." He smoked on thoughtfully for some time, then looked at his watch. "Guess I'll look the old fellow up," he concluded. As he rose he glanced complacently at the prosperous, elegantly attired figure reflected in the cracked mirror and thought of the probable contrast between his appearance and that of his old chum.

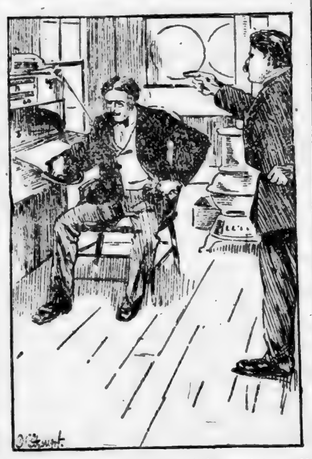
He sauntered down the street and into the open door under the modest sign "J. H. Strong." A man in a worn, ill-fitting suit hastened forward and wrung his hand heartily, exclaiming, "It does seem good to see you again, Dick, old boy. I heard you were in town and I knew you'd drop in. I've watched the door for the last hour."

Grey cordially returned the greeting. For the next half hour the two men recalled old times. The lawyer enjoyed a sense of conscious superiority over his old chum. "It's a pity he wasted his life here," he thought, pityingly studying the other's careworn face.

At last he pulled out his watch and turning to the merchant with a smile remarked, "Now may I talk business to you for a few moments?"

Strong led the way to the little office at the back of the store. His friend carefully closed the door be-



"But I ain't so poor that I need to sell my self-respect."

fore he sat down; then he spoke in low, earnest tones for some time, carefully explaining his scheme.

The merchant listened silently with an expression on his face that Grey could not fathom.

"Do you see?" Grey asked at last.

"You say," Strong began in a queer, constrained voice, "that this Henderson has found out that there's a vein of coal running through the old Barnes place. Old Mr. Barnes don't know it, and Henderson has offered you a big fee if you can get the place for him cheap. You've got Barnes where you can crowd him for money and compel him to sell, and you offer me a clear thousand dollars if I'll buy the place and then turn it over to Henderson; for you think maybe they'd guess about the coal if Henderson tried to buy it himself, and there are reasons why you don't want to appear in it. Is that the way of it?"

Grey nodded. Jack was rising to the bait quicker than he expected. He had been a little doubtful about disclosing his hand, Strong was so likely to have queer notions. But he seemed to comprehend the situation, if he did state the case somewhat badly.

"Do you remember when old Barnes lent you the money to start out in life?" Strong presently inquired musingly.

"Certainly I do and it was paid back with interest long ago. I've loaned a good many people money in the last ten years, but I don't expect them to hold me in everlasting gratitude for it." A sardonic smile flitted over his face. No, the people he loaned money to didn't usually hold him in grateful remembrance. He didn't lend it to penniless young chaps without security—such as he once was, either, but it was not necessary to explain that to Jack.

"It would break the old people's hearts to have to leave the old place, and they're too old to begin life over again. It would mean the poorhouse in a few years." Strong still spoke in a constrained voice.

"Bosh! That has nothing to do with the question. My dear fellow, you must learn to leave sentiment out of business or you will never get along in the world. All that twaddle about heart strings and blighted lives and the rest of that stuff doesn't count when it comes to a matter of business." Gray smiled patronizingly across at Strong, with his most worldly wise air. "Besides," he went on after a moment's pause, "when it comes to a question of heart strings I guess your father's and mother's are twined about as securely about that old place of yours as old Barnes' and his wife's are about theirs, and I understand that your place goes if you don't take this chance to save it." Then he added: "Well, do you take my offer?"

The merchant's face had grown white. He slowly rose to his feet and stood looking down at Grey, measuring him with honest, indignant eyes. Grey dimly wondered why he seemed to wither up under that clear gaze; why he who had towered so far above this country storekeeper when he entered the door had someway shrunk until he seemed a pigmy beside a giant.

Strong's voice was low and controlled, though intense when he spoke. "No," he said, "I won't! Yes, I'm poor, but I ain't so poor that I need to sell my self-respect and every finer feeling in my nature." Suddenly his expression changed. He held out his hands with a quick, impulsive movement toward the man who had been his boyhood's chum and hero, while his face took on a look of yearning pity. "Oh, Dick, old chum!" That was all he said, but the words held a world of disapointment. They were the requiem over a shattered ideal.

Grey stared wonderingly. The man who should have been awed by his manifest superiority and have envied him his prosperity was looking at him with pity struggling against contempt in his face.

Someway, he couldn't adjust his thoughts to their former complacency.

"That's all these confounded villagers know about business, anyway," he thought, contemptuously, as he reached for his hat.

BEAUTIFYING A STATE.

Two Californians Imported Birds and Turned Them Loose.

"Whenever I see any of these propagandas for beautifying a city," said Senator Perkins of California, the other night, "I always think of the work done to beautify the State of California by a citizen of Altadena, which is hard by Pasadena. The man's name is Andrew McNally, and when he came to California there were few birds at Altadena, and those few were hardly what we would call beautiful. McNally made up his mind that he land needed birds, so he built him an aviary and imported many hundreds of his feathered friends. Once a year he would open the doors of his aviary and let the young birds fly whithersoever they would, and in a short time the whole country was populated with feathered creatures of every variety of hue and song. His example was followed by Joseph Grinnell and Mrs. Grinnell, both of whom were ardent ornithologists, so that now the country around Pasadena is a garden spot for birds of beautiful plumage. Many of the birds that were imported came from Japan and China. So you see there are more ways than one of beautifying a city or a state."—Philadelphia Press.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

How Pastor's Rebuke Was Robbed of Its Effectiveness.

The pastor of the little country church had been much annoyed by having the members of his congregation straggle in long after the service had begun. One Sunday morning, when he felt that further forbearance with this fault was impossible, he decided to rebuke some conspicuous offender. About twenty minutes later than the proper hour, there entered a mild mannered little woman, one of the regular attendants of the church, but quite incorrigible in her tardiness. The minister looked up, fixed her with his spectacles, and remarked:

"Sister, you are very much behind time. I hope you will not be so late in getting into heaven!"

The little woman looked up, smiled sweetly, and, without a trace of confusion, replied, placidly:

"I shan't care about that, doctor, so long as I get there!"

And now the pastor feels that the smile that went round the church somehow spoiled the effectiveness of his reprimand.

The Allusion Classical.

The agricultural appropriation bill was before the House. Representative Rixey of Virginia was advocating an increase from $15,000 to $25,000 for the experimental farm owned by the government at Arlington. He said the small amount allowed was not enough to produce substantial results.

Representative Wadsworth, in charge of the bill, pointed out that $15,000 was appropriated for the farm annually, and that year after year this mounted up, and in time would have become formidable. "Rome was not built in a day," he added in conclusion.

"No," replied Mr. Rixey, "Rome was not built in a day, and if Romulus and Remus had been members of the committee on Agriculture Rome would never have been built."—Washington Times.

CASUS BELLI A STRONG CASE

Girl Justly Angry at Her Rival's Joy Over Ghost Story.

"What a horrid creature Milly Smith is!" said the girl in the blue blouse.

"She is," assented the girl in gray, "but how——"

"How did I find it out?" said the girl in the blue blouse. "Why, we spent our holidays at the same house! The way I came to grief with her was this. We decided to give a ghost party one night. You sit in a dark room and tell ghost stories in turn. The person that tells the most blood-curdling one gets a prize. Of course the incidents are all supposed to have happened to you personally, but——"

"Why, goodness, how delightfully creepy!"

"So it is. Of course I wanted to create a good impression, especially as Harry was there that week, and that Smith girl was fairly haunting his footsteps. Somehow I couldn't manage to think or to dream of a good one. Finally, the day of the party, I went to see my laundress about my dress—we were all to wear white, you know. To my joy I found on her mantelpiece an old dog-eared book of ghost stories. I borrowed it at once and took it home in triumph, and that evening I told one of the stories from it, of course making myself the heroine. It began with my arriving at the country house late at night, you know, and being given a bed in a haunted room——"

"And waking up conscious that something was in the room. I know."

"Yes. Well, it was a great success, and I felt that the prize was mine, when that Smith girl stopped talking to Harry and began to applaud. And what do you think she said?"

"Something awful, of course."

"Clasping her hands, she said: 'Oh, how delightful! And did it all really happen to you?' 'Of course it did,' I said. 'How perfectly charming!' she cried. 'My old nurse used to tell me that story when I was a very little girl, and I shall enjoy it so much more now that I know you were the heroine!'"

Just His Luck.

"I had never had any luck on the races," said Mr. J. H. Jonah, "nor in games of chance. In fact, my 'number' is all wrong one way or another, and if anybody proposes a scheme where it's win or lose you can betsky that it is little Jimmy Jonah to lose. Just now I am referring to Tivoli pool. Ever lay it? In that game, you know, the table slants and is studded with little prongs projecting about two inches. There are three holes, through which, if the ball drops, you are enabled to make large scores. The object of the projections is to embarrass the ball and to prevent it from going into the holes. But there is no need to particularize, since what I am talking about is bad luck. The other evening I met up with three South Side friends and we had several games with Tivoli pool, 25 cents each in the pot, highest score to win. Well, sir, you shoot six times each during a game, and in sixteen games I held the lowest score. Then I got mad. I offered to go into a pot at a dollar each, winner to be the person who made the lowest score. They jumped at it. Need I say what happened? Try as I would not to score, I rolled the highest that anybody had made in any game that evening. Luck? I can't figure it out anyway."

His Prayer.

Chaplain Hale no longer asks Senators to join with him in repeating the Lord's prayer at the morning devotions. This arises from the fact that when he did make the request there was no response. This circumstance was the basis of a report, printed in some newspapers, that none of the senators knew the prayer. The report in turn became the source of no little anxiety to Dr. Hale.

"Can it be possible that such a deplorable condition of affairs exists?" he asked more than one senator, and he was apparently much relieved by the assurance given him that the newspaper report was without foundation.

"I'd just like to see the test made," said Senator Tillman when he heard the story. "I fear they'd all be like two fellows they tell about down in South Carolina. They were in peril of losing their lives by drowning, when one of them insisted the other should pray, notwithstanding his companion remonstrated that he did not know how to pray.

"'Just pray anyhow,' said the other, whereupon the one said:

"'Lord, make us thankful for what we are about to receive.'"—Washington Post.

Faithful to His Friends.

One thought had he, to live his life,
To link with joy its utmost ends,
But in the thickest of the strife
He was faithful to his friends.

Cared not he for right nor wrong,
Honor's call nor duty's way;
He but lived among the throng,
Lived among them for a day.

Thus he lived and thus he died.
Yet each one now his life defends;
For we saw the rule applied,
He was faithful to his friends.

Rough and tempest tossed the road,
Crooked was the path he trod;
Oft he staggered 'neath the load,
And swore loudly at his God.

But after all his varied years
No reason he to make amends;
He left no payment in arrears,
He was faithful to his friends.
—Henry R. B. Briggs.

Deer Make Pretty Picture.

A Middlesex, Vt., farmer, while drawing logs two or three days ago, saw a group of eight deer on a meadow about a mile and a half south of the village. He describes the animals as sleek and in good condition, and says they made a picture well worth looking at.

Training of the Sig

So much of the happiness and success of life depends upon the seeing capacity that it is both a wonder and a pity that more attention is not paid by parents in the home and by instructors in the schools to the perfecting of this gift.

The trouble is that the great majority of people regard the capacity of the eyes as something fixed at birth, and not to be interferred with. If they would think a little they would recognize that it is, after all, largely a matter of exercise and practice. They know that the power of the muscles is capable of almost indefinite training, but they fail to apply the principle to the eyes. All forms of exercise are called upon to increase and strengthen the muscular system of growing children, and the wisdom of this, always starting reasonable moderation, is never questioned, but the child with the weak, undeveloped visual faculty, with the untrained color sense, with the carrying capacity of the sight limited to a few feet, is called stupid, and his best hope is that he may be fitted with glasses before he is rallied and scolded into real stupidity.

The sight can be educated and exercised just as truly as the hearing, the sense of touch, or even the leg and arm muscles can; and the work, which can be easily converted into play, should be begun very early in life. Much so-called color-blind-

Ranch Baron Is Passi

The cattle baron of the western plains is rapidly becoming extinct. Like the Indian, he is disappearing before the onward march of settlers upon the public domain. There are no longer vast tracts of territory he can appropriate to his own uses, for the land is being sold to farmers from the east and from Europe. The rancher is either going out of business or preparing to go.

The cause for this impending change is the contraction of the range and the invasion of the small cattleman. The farmers have taken up the land along the streams where the water is found, and while there are thousands of acres of dry range land which afford good grazing for part of the year, they are removed from water and the sources of supply are cut off by the small farmer, who is utilizing it. This is by no means an unmixed evil or even the forerunner of the impending decline of the cattle-raising industry. It simply signifies that the cattle barons are slowly finding themselves short of territory on which to range their stock. Their

The First Who Toil

Hack and Hew were the sons of God,
In the earlier earth than now;
One at his right hand, one at his left,
To obey as he taught them how.

And Hack was blind, and Hew was dumb,
But both had the wild, wild heart;

The Medicine Man's Cu

A missionary who has just returned from Alaska recently told an amusing story of how an Indian "medicine man's" curse affected two Americans.

"They were prospectors coming down the Stykeen River," he said. "On the morning of the day on which they expected to reach Fort Wrangle they camped on a sand spit near the camp of an Indian tribe."

"One of the tribe's medicine men came down and asked for a seat in the canoe as far as Wrangle. The white men refused, saying that the canoe was too small. The Indian insisted, and there was a warm argument. The two whites finally shoved off into midstream, leaving the Indian on the bank.

"'You never come 'shore again,' he shouted.

"The white men laughed, and paddled on. Toward evening they reached Fort Wrangle and paddl shore. They came within of the bank, and the canoe stick fast. The water was feet deep, so the two men paddles desperately. Still made no headway.

"Suddenly they ceased
One of them jumped up and
"'We've got an Indian cur
For heaven's sake come out us!'

"The men on shore stared laughed. Then came a silen

"The crowd burst into laughter as the two

Lucinda's life's a peaceful one, apart from sentiment:
No prattling voices come to mar her quiet and content;
No tiny feet romp up and down, no eager dimpled hands
Are clutching at her fingers where she sits in shadow lands.

In shadow lands she sits alone, there in her quiet room—
Nay, not alone, for faces come before her in the gloom,
And on her hand she feels a palm, she hears a whisper low—
A visitor comes back again from out the long ago.

She stands beside the garden gate where blushing roses cling,
She listens to the murmur of the brook's soft caroling;
But sweeter than all other sounds a rapt voice whispers low—
A visitor come back again from out the long ago.

His voice is like the murmur

Manufacturing in Japan is still in its infancy. Only twenty years ago the first cotton factory was opened in Osaka. By 1898, only fourteen years later, Japan had seventy-five cotton factories, with 889,377 spindles. The product is being exported to China and Korea chiefly. In silk manufacture Japan holds foremost rank. In this line her 1901 export was of the value of $15,000,000. The match-making industry has gone ahead, from $942,000 exportation in 1891 to $3,700,000 in 1901. Other important industries are porcelain and earthenware, lacquered ware, flowers, matting and paper manufacturing. Hong Kong China; British India. Korea, the Philippines, the United States and Australia are Japan's chief foreign markets. As all of these markets except the United States are practically contiguous and of easy access, and as labor in Japan is cheap, her advantage in this rapid increase in manufacturing industries is obvious. In the case of the United States, and after deducting the $21,000,000 for American goods bought, Japan collected $24,000,000 from Uncle Sam to balance last year's trading.

DANGEROUS NEGLECT.

It's the neglect of backache, sideache, pain in the hips or loins that finally prostrates the strongest body.

The kidney warnings are serious — they tell you that they are unable to filter the body's waste and poison from the blood—the sewers are clogged and impurities are running wild to impregnate nerves, heart, brain and every organ of the body with disease elements. Doan's Kidney Pills are quick to soothe and strengthen sick kidneys, and help them free the system from poison. Read how valuable they are, even in cases of long standing.

L. C. Lovell, of 415 North First St., Spokane, Wash., says: "I have had trouble from my kidneys for the past ten years. It was caused by a strain to which I paid little attention. But as I neglected the trouble it became worse and worse until any strain or a slight cold was sure to be followed by severe pain across my back. Then the action of the kidney secretions became deranged and I was caused much annoyance, besides loss of sleep. Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice, and after taking them a short time their good effect was apparent. All the pain was removed from my back and the kidney secretions became normal. Doan's Kidney Pills do all that is claimed for them."

A FREE TRIAL of this great remedy which cured Mr. Lovell will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

Coop For Hen and Chickens.

A very cheap and simple roosting coop for hen and chickens is shown by this sketch. Take a plank one by twelve, six feet long, saw in three pieces, two feet long, then saw one of them triangular; one of these and one of the others make one end, the front and back can be made out of old goods box—see sketch. Cover with shingles. It is made with a detachable bottom, held in place by four hooks and staples, one at each corner so it can be taken off and scrubbed and cleaned out. I put the dimensions on the sketch. For ventilation, bore six augur holes in each side.—A. W. Toberman, Hefner, O. T.

Shade For Strawberries.

V. A. Clark and O. M. Taylor, of the New York Experiment Station, Geneva, report results obtained in shading strawberries. With a thin cheesecloth yields were materially increased and sometimes even doubled, and with some varieties the yield was little affected or was even decreased. Using cheesecloth one commercial grade heavier, there was a heavy loss on every one of sixteen varieties tested. While the thinner cheesecloth, ripening was in some cases hastened by a day or two, but with the thicker one it was retarded about four days. The effect of shading on the berry itself was to increase it in weight about one-sixth.

The good effects of shading the strawberry are produced by conservation of soil moisture as a result of lessened evaporation and transpiration, and by a slight increase in temperature of air and of soil. The greatest benefit is derived from the protection of the plants from wind. The injurious effects result from diminishing the intensity of the light. The practice does not appear to be of value commercially; irrigation is far more effective, and, where practicable, probably would be cheaper.

Feeding Morning Mash.

Sometimes experience upsets one's plans, which were thought about right, wonderfully and completely. For years the writer has advocated the moderate feeding of laying hens during the winter; feeding them enough, of course, but feeding scanty rather than running the risk of overfeeding and thus shutting off the egg supply. A veteran poultryman who called at my farm a year ago, said that I did not feed sufficiently heavy of the morning mash, so this winter we started out to see if he was right, and found, to our astonishment, that he was.

We now give the laying hens enough of the warm mash in the morning so that they eat all they want before it gets cold. The remainder is then gathered up and an hour later heated and put in the troughs again, when the hens eat as ravenously of it as if they had had none an hour earlier. Result, more eggs than in the previous winters from the same number of hens and pullets. In trying to figure out the cause of this change it was concluded that the hens were unable to take much of the sticky mass in their crops at first, but after a drink of water and an hour of rest they were in condition to take care of the balance, really only getting in the two feeds the quantity necessary for one feed, and the equivalent of one good feed of grain. Try it the rest of the winter and see how it works with your poultry.—Indianapolis News.

Care of Cows.

In the feeding of dairy cows, two seasons are recognized by the average dairyman. These are the winter feeding season and the summer season. In the former case the animals are entirely dependent upon what grain and fodder are allotted to them, there being no opportunity for grazing afforded. The very opposite of this is true during the summer season, the animals being expected to hunt their own living, says Farmers' Tribune. The transition from one season to another frequently causes a falling off in the milk supply. This is particularly true in the fall, when the animals are left to shift for themselves after the nights become cold. The fact is lost sight of that a dairy animal is of a rather delicate constitution, and on this account cannot withstand the hardships which the beef animal can bear.

It is a good plan to give cows shelter at night after the first of October. If they are put in the stable or in sheds and fed a small grain ration night and morning, together with a little fodder, they will liberally respond to such treatment at milking time. While the days remain warm they are as well off in the pasture, as there is no food better adapted for milk production than is grass. Grass is also economical, and for this reason one should endeavor to extend the grazing season just as long as possible. If pastures are getting bare, it will generally pay to haul a little fodder to the field. Never turn cows on frosted grass after having kept them in the stable during the night.

Improving the Orchard.

Orchard soils usually require large quantities of potash fertilizers. This applies especially to the peach, plum, grape and small fruit tracts. The most convenient form of potash fertilizer is kainit, which may be used on ordinary soil at the rate of 500 pounds per acre, allowing a space of a couple of years or more between applications. Where the orchards or vineyards are small, wood ashes may be used instead. The cowpea or soy bean is the best nitrogenous fertilizer where such is needed, but unless the trees show a tendency to make very little growth during the summer months, fertilizer of this kind should be used sparingly. The liberal application of nitrogenous manures causes a heavy growth of leaf and branch. This may prove a detriment instead of an advantage, since insect pests get in their most damaging work on the young and tender growth. Various diseases also often attack young trees that have been forced too rapidly, causing injury and sometimes death to the promising specimen. Barnyard manure will prove beneficial to worn out orchards, which, however, should be well pruned and cultivated to encourage them to take a new hold on life. Manure may be applied early in the spring, using about twenty loads to the acre and discing in, or it may be turned under with a stirring plow, and later the soil may be leveled with the harrow and planted to some small crop requiring cultivation. For this, potatoes, beans, peas or even cabbage may be utilized. The main object is to conserve the moisture and to hasten decomposition of organic matter in the soil.—C. B. Barrett, in The Epitomist.

Farm Conveniences.

The first two figures show conveniences originally sketched in the Farm Journal, which says of them:

This crate should be about three feet high and fitted with sidepieces extending below it that will just fit into the side irons of the wagon body. It can thus be set upon the wagon bed in an instant and will be found most useful in moving calves, sheep, pigs or other stock. It will fit on to a sled in the same way for winter use. It is also convenient when hauling loose material. If this is long the rear gate can be hinged to open at the side. The slats should be of hard wood three-quarters of an inch thick.

CRATE, PLOW AND MOVABLE HURDLE.

When there is plowing to be done close to fences or trees have your smith put extension rods on the plow and a clevis to hitch the team to, like the cut. The sketch was sent us by one of our readers in Kansas, and he says it works well for him. If the beam of the plow is adjustable to draft it should, of course, be adjusted before the rods are bolted to the handles.

The lower figure shows two views of portable sheep fencing used at the Colorado experiment station. It is easy to move about and set up and very readily made.—Connecticut Farmer.

Poultry Notes.

Frosted combs will check egg production. Coat them with vaseline.

For heavy breathing or rattling in the throat we have found nothing better than a teaspoonful of glycerine, to which is added four drops of turpentine.

If you mean to purchase eggs for setting, start early. Eggs are not apt to hatch so well, nor are the chicks so strong, if obtained from hens that have been laying for many weeks.

To feed a duckling ten weeks will cost about five cents per pound. Labor, marketing, etc., will add as much more to the cost. The bird should weigh five pounds and sell for more than fifty cents to bring any profit.

It is not a bad idea for a poultryman to have padlocks on the egg crates. It serves to show an exclusiveness to customers who regularly expect first-class articles, and then it's a proof that they have not been tampered with.

The color of the newly hatched chick does not always indicate what the mature plumage will be. Those who have bought eggs of pure bred stock should, therefore, not be hasty in passing judgment on the merits of the stock.

The cheapest way to rid a poultry house of all kinds of lice is to thoroughly scald with boiling water, with sufficient salt added to make a brine. Apply the remedy once a week for three weeks, using a pail and tin cup in applying it.

Rough, scaly shanks spoil the appearance of any fowl. The parasite that burrows under the natural scale and destroys it may be killed by coal oil. The oil should not be permitted to saturate the feathers of the thighs, or it may blister the skin and cause the feathers to come out. It is always best to mix the kerosene with sweet oil or a little lard.

When you see a fowl staggering around with its head thrown back on its shoulders, that means vertigo. Catch it, pour water slowly from a height of three feet on the back of its head for five minutes. Repeat the process in a little while, and pen it up without a bite for two days. You have been feeding too high, and it needs starvation for a day or two.

A BIG TREE'S LIFE STORY.

Wonderful Recuperative Power of a California Giant of the Forest.

A remarkable recuperative power following an injury was found after examination of the Sequoias of the Converse basin. The effects of certain tremendous forest fires occurring centuries ago are registered in the trunks of these trees and the record completely concealed by subsequent healthy growth. Among a number of similar cases the most instructive record of these ancient forest fires was observed in a tree of moderate size—about 15 feet in diameter—5 feet from the ground. It was 270 feet in height and 2171 years old.

This tree when felled had an enormous surface burn on one side 30 feet in height and occupying 18 feet of the circumference of the tree; this was found to have been due to a fire occurring in A. D. 1797. The tree when cut, in 1900, had already occupied itself for 103 years in its efforts to repair this injury, its method being the ingrowing of the new tissue from each margin of the great black wound. When the tree was cut the records of three other fires were revealed. The history of the tree was as follows:

271 B. C. it began its existence.

The first year of the Christian era it was about four feet in diameter above the base.

245 A. D., at 516 years of age, occurred a burning on the trunk three feet wide. One hundred and five years were occupied in covering this wound with new tissue. For 1196 years no further injuries were registered.

1441 A. D., at 1712 years of age, the tree was burned a second time in two long grooves one and two feet wide, respectively. Each had its own system of repair.

One hundred and thirty-nine years of growth followed, including the time occupied by covering the wounds.

1580 A. D., at 1851 years of age, occurred another fire, causing a burn on the trunk two feet wide, which took 56 years to cover with new tissue.

Two hundred and seventeen years of growth followed this burn.

1797 A. D., when the tree was 2068 years old, tremendous fire attacked it, burning the great scar 18 feet wide.

One hundred and three years, between 1797 and 1900, had enabled the tree to reduce the exposed area of the burn to about 14 feet in width.

It is to be noted that in each of the three older burns there was a thin cavity occupied by the charcoal of burned surface, but the wounds were finally fully covered and the new tissue above was full, even, continuous, and showed no sign of distortion or of the old wound.—From a letter by William Russel Dudley to Senator O. H. Platt.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

As a consequence of the famine times Stockholm legislators proposed a tax upon all persons weighing more than 125 pounds.

A boy who was killed in New York City recently by lightning had the likeness of a fern imprinted on his body by the shock.

At Cotta, in Saxony, persons who did not pay their taxes last year are published in a list which hangs up in all restaurants and saloons of the city.

A boarding house keeper of New York City appealed to the police to make his star lodger get a hair cut. He said his hair and whiskers had been untrimmed for 18 years.

Kissing is delight unknown to the Maori women of New Zealand. When they meet each other, and wish to demonstrate their mutual affections, they grasp each other by the shoulders and rub their noses together.

One of the best known instances of churches with streets through them is that of St. John the Baptist's church in Bristol. The church is situated right over the ancient gateway into the city on the Avon, and the towering spire, standing high above the neighboring houses and streets, is a remarkable sight, as one surveys it from the roadway below.

Japan"s Merchant Fleet.

The growth of Japan's navy is no more wonderful than that of its merchant fleet. Up to 1870 there was none, if we except a few coastwise trading junks. In 1892 there were 214,000 tons of modern shipping. That has increased in 10 years to 934,000 tons in 1902, and the Japanese merchant fleet is soon to take, if it has not yet taken, seventh place among the world's peace navies.

The growth of the merchant fleet was most rapid about the time of the Chinese war, rising from 486,000 tons in 1897 to 796,00 in 1899.

Only Great Britain, the United States, Germany, France, Norway and Italy surpass the shipping of Japan. The Japanese merchant fleet is even greater than our own foreign fleet. It is our enormous "coastwise" shipping that places us second to Great Britain in total.

Japan's naval vessels are all commanded by Japs. This has about used up the available supply of native educated seamen, so that most of the merchantmen are commanded by Europeans. But they won't be very long.

At the meeting of the populist exeutive committee of Chilton county on March 15, 1904, the following resolution was adopted by the committee:

"Be it resolved, That we, the people's party executive committee of Chilton county, do hereby indorse the UNION, a paper published in Clanton, Ala., as our official organ tf

IMPORTANT

THE PEOPLE'S PRIMARY WILL BE HELD ON TUESDAY, JULY 26th, 1904.

Announcements.

FOR TAX COLLECTOR.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for the office of tax collector of Chilton county, subject to the action of the people's primary on July 26, 1904.

S. E. WALDRUP,
(Better known as "Squire" Waldrup.)

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of tax collector of Chilton county, subject to the action of the people's primary on July 26th, 1904. JOSEPH H. THOMAS.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In this paper will be found the announcements of Messrs. Thomas and Waldrup for tax collector. Both are good men and so well known that we need not say any more about them. Any man who feels himself competent may offer for any office, and though only one can get it, still it is no disgrace to the unsuccessful one, provided he has made a clean canvass, asking for votes on HIS OWN MERITS, NOT HIS OPPONENTS' DEMERITS. It is a poor way to decry your rivals in your own party; it never does you any good and leaves a bitterness in the ranks that is hard to down.

DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY.

In the democratic primary on Monday a number of votes were cast that will not be accepted at the election in November. There is a large number of registered voters in this county who are disqualified from taking ANY PART in elections on account of their non-payment of the required poll tax. While there are some republicans and populists in this disfranchisement lot, the great bulk seems to be democrats. According to the records there are only fifty qualified voters in beat 5, but that beat cast fifty-nine votes on Monday! As near as can be ascertained, there were 622 votes cast on Monday for probate judge, of which H. M. Adams is credited with 229, E. B. Deason with 197, A. C. Smith 196, the successful candidate getting a little over one-third of the vote cast (not very complimentary). W. T. Allen is nominated for treasurer, Veasey for collector, Garner for assessor, Loshee for clerk, Rasco for county superintendent, Ruddick for commissioner of third district, Dickinson for commissioner fourth district. Collier carried the county for circuit judge by about 200, but is defeated in the district. Tate also carried Chilton by a small majority and it is not known how the result will turn out in the three counties, though it is probable that Elmore has given Holley majority enough to elect him. We should have liked to have given our readers the entire vote of Chilton county this week, but it was impossible to get the returns from the democratic committee. It looks as if they thought the returns were eggs and by sitting on them a while they might hatch out something—if it was nothing but a "whang-doodle." There is a great deal of hard feeling over some of the things that were done on Monday, and it is voiced by many of the STRAIGHT OLD democrats. It seems like it is an utter impossibility for democrats (as a body) to be honest, even among themselves.

COUNTY BASEBALL.

Clanton club crossed bats with the Jemison aggregation Friday at Thorsby and came out victor by the score of 14 to 7. The players and score by innings are as follows: Clanton: Will Culverhouse, pitcher; W. E. Mauk, catch; E. M. Pinckard, first base; Pate Aldridge, second base; Hugh Simpson, third base; Baisey Collier, shortstop; George Bruce, left field; Joe Johnson, center field; Heath Jonas, right field. Jemison: Asa Langston, pitch; J. Patton, catch; C. Bean, first base; Elnell Shaw, second base; F. Anderson, third base; H. Shaw, shortstop; John Patton, left field; W. Adams, center field; M. Scott, right field. Umpire, J. C. Dennis. Scorer, Joe Johnson. Time, 1:40.

Score by innings:
Clanton .. ..4 2 1 3 1 3 0 0 x—14
Jemison . .....2 0 3 0 0 1 0 1 0— 7

Clanton will play Verbena at Verbena Friday, 15th inst. Quite a party of ladies and their escorts drove to Thorsby to see the game, and came back late in the afternoon loaded with dog wood blossoms and a general air of having a good time.

JUMBO.

Farmers are very busy. Corn is about all planted, and pretty near ready for cotton. We have the honor to state that Miss Pattie Young is happily married to Park Mahan, of Waddy. All good wishes go with them.

Everybody and the best girl are going to the school concert at Mount Zion church Tuesday night

T. H. Williams, our much loved friend and neighbor, is on the sick list.

Mrs. E. W. Willis is also sick.

Charlie Willis is at home on a short visit

Miss Lucy House has the prettiest show of flowers that we have seen, though Miss Ruth Kate Mullins' spring flower show is hard to beat.

After so much cold weather it is delightful to see the fruit trees loaded with fine fruit.

We hope for a bountiful crop of fruit, corn and cotton this season.

Success to the paper and its readers. "MAISON."

METHODIST CHURCH.

Regular Sunday services were conducted by Rev. W. L. Lyons in the absence of the regular pastor. There was a large attendance and a good service, though the congregation as well as the preacher was disturbed in the morning service by the talking of some in the rear seats. Worshippers in both our churches have been disturbed lately by such conduct, and one or two yesterday said that if a sense of reverence and decency would not restrain these "talkers" it was time to try the law. Let us hope that this warning will suffice, and that order will reign in God's house hereafter.

REPORT OF GRAND JURY.

Hon. Terry Richardson, Judge Fifteenth Judicial Circuit:

We, the grand jury impaneled for the spring term, 1904, of the circuit court of Chilton county, beg leave to submit this, our final report. The public roads have been reported to us as being in fairly good condition, yet we feel that quite an improvement could be made upon all the roads of our county, and suggest that more attention be given to the betterment of the roads of our county. We have examined the bonds of our county officers, and find them good and sufficient. We have examined the books of our different officers and so far as we are able to determine, in the limited time allowed for that purpose, find them neatly and correctly kept. The committee who visited the county poor house reports the inmates well cared for, properly clothed and fed. We visited the jail and found it neatly and cleanly kept; as well ventilated as it is possible for that building to be; well heated and safe and secure, and commend Sheriff Morgan and his deputy, Ed Smitherman, for the great precaution they exercise to prevent the escape of prisoners. We have examined all the county buildings and find them in fairly good condition and repair. We have examined all cases reported to us, being thirty-six in all, and as the result of our labors have returned into court twenty-five true bills. The county treasurer's report is hereto attached and marked "Exhibit A," and made a part of this report.

Thanking your honor for the plain, impartial and able charge given us in the beginning of our labors, in which you so clearly defined our duties as grand jurors; also our faithful solicitor for his able and attentive assistance given us in our work; our efficient bailiff, B. L. Jones, for his careful attention to our wants and all the officers with whom our duties have brought us in contact, we most respectfully ask to be dismissed.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN A. STROCK,
Foreman.

"EXHIBIT A."

To the Honorable Solicitor and Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, Spring Term, 1904, of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama:

I, Alex G. Dake, treasurer of said county, beg to submit the following report of the receipts and disbursements of the county finances to date, April 4, 1904:

General fund, cash on hand	$5,968 65
Bridge fund, cash on hand	1,358 48
F. and F. fund, cash on hand	56 05
Land fund, cash on hand	42 60
Total	$7,425 78

Respectfully submitted,
ALEX G. DAKE,
Treasurer.

FIRE.

J. A. Culp, Jr., who lives about six miles southwest of Clanton, near Pleasant Grove, lost his house and contents by fire April 6th. The fire occurred in the afternoon. Mrs. Culp had just gone over to a neighbor's less than a half mile when she saw the blaze, but could not get back in time to save a thing. This young couple have been married only about a year and the loss is very hard on them. It is a good case for any assistance good neighbors can render them. Mr. Culp did not have a cent of insurance on his house and furniture, and though we may call it carelessness on his part, still there are many (too many) in the same boat with him. If all the people who don't carry any insurance will help this young couple now, realizing that it may be their turn next, why they will have plenty to start anew with. Try it.

COLLINS CHAPEL.

Editor Union:

As there have been several candidates named for the various offices, so I now name the ones that will make a fair race in our community. We want for probate judge L. H. Reynolds; circuit clerk, E. H. Adams; tax collector, J. H. Thomas; assessor, L. B. Pounds; treasurer, A. G. Dake; commissioners, W. H. Conway, Moses Robinson, T. G. Milling and Squire Waldrop. Brethren, what do you think of it?

J. D. COLLINS

BESSIE.

As we have not seen anything from Bessie in some time, we'll give you a few dots.

Health of the community is good, and so is the weather for planting.

At Mars Hill last Wednesday we buried the little child of Mr. and Mrs Jim Ray.

F. M. Langston is up and about again, but is still poorly. Some of his neighbors turned out last Friday and gave him a day's plowing, as he was badly behind on account of his illness. These good people follow the golden rule, "do unto others as you would wish them to do unto you."

Politics are very quiet. None of our people are interested in the April primary, but will be out in full force July 26th and nominate the winning ticket.

A. SINGER.

Thorsby, Ala., April 11, 1904

Editor Union:

In reference to the address of the democratic executive committee, it requires a strong stomach and an iron nerve to prevent an uncomfortable heaving on account of the effluvia and sickening stench arising therefrom. Limberger cheese is as attar of roses compared to it, but all who oppose the "organized" are characterized as disturbers of peace and harmony, according to that document; all protests are products of prejudice; they hold a monopoly on good sense, judgment and wisdom.

Now, the facts are that the thing from beginning to end is an insult to the pride and intelligence of the people of Chilton county, for it is a well-known fact that there is not a county in the state that can, or is, rated above ours when her resources are taken into consideration. Her credit is cash on the spot. There is not an act chargeable to any of her public officials since the populists took charge of the county except some who have gone to the democrats. They speak of redeeming the county. God save the mark; well, we want to inform them that the county was redeemed some twelve years ago. Its financial credit was redeemed from 40 to 100 cents on the dollar. When the democrats were in control we had an old dilapidated shack for a court house, hardly fit to herd goats in, the office rooms of which were largely storage vaults for whisky jugs. Several officers became defaulters and the political affairs were dominated by a court house ring that seemed to care nothing for anything or anybody so they could parcel out the offices among themselves, and on with their debauchery, a remnant of which now essays to advise the people to help them redeem the county. Yes, it's an insult to the manhood of the people who have really brought the condition of the county up to her present high standard.

Let us take a glance at some of the counties where the democrats have redeemed them. Take Bibb county, for instance. In less than two years after the democrats got control the county was several thousand dollars in debt with nothing to show where the money went. They have the same old court house that was built before the war. Notice the examiner's report as to how they do things over there.

And, again, what have they to offer? The record of the democratic party is a reeking mass of fraud, wholly dominated by as relentless a combination of political tricksters as ever disgraced any commonwealth in the state. It is ruled by the machine in the nation; it has forty heads and no heart, begging for one more chance to butt a trust.

Now, who will say these charges are not true? None but the demmies, and their argument in answer will be to say that it is prejudice. Well, there will be a plenty of such prejudice to keep on redeeming the county as we have been for twelve years in the past, for the people are too well acquainted with the conditions to be caught with "sticky ny paper," but are content to move on down the 'highway of time" on the crest of the wave rather than to bog in the democratic mire.

X-RAY.

PLEASANT GROVE.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

My name appears elsewhere in this paper as a candidate. I have thus submitted my name, after a careful study of this matter. I've been solicited by many to do this, and I think that I am well known by the people of Chilton. I have always voted a populist ticket since there has been one in this county, and I will stand by the people of Chilton and go down with them when they go. I have heard it said by a few that the only objection that there was to my being a candidate was that I am a preacher, and that this would not do, to put a preacher in office, for that would ruin him as a preacher, and then they refer to Brothers Honeycutt and Adams. I say that Bro. Honeycutt did his best preaching while he was tax collector. Now, my fellow citizens, I only want you to carefully consider my worthiness and competency for this honor. Lay down all prejudice and go according to what your best judgment tells you I am worthy of. If I am the nominee I will put forth my best efforts in the campaign, and if I am not, then I will stand by the nominee. Thanking you in advance for your favors, I am yours truly,

JOSEPH H. THOMAS.

RIDERVILLE.

Today being the second Sunday and unusually cold for April, especially after Easter, but there was quite a reunion at Mrs. T. G. Letcher's celebrating Easter. Her children and grandchildren were there, twenty-five in all, and the day was greatly enjoyed by every one. Eggs were plentiful. J. W. Letcher got the "April egg."

By the way, I've been reading the letters in the UNION from different parts of the county, each giving their men for the different offices. While we are in the lower part of the county, almost out of reach and surrounded by democrats, but we have two or three good men we are going to present—T. G. Milling for assessor and D. C. Gandy and Richard Kendrick for commissioners. We want the readers of the UNION all over the county to give these names their best attention and let us elect them. These men are fully competent and have been faithful to the party from the beginning. Success to the UNION.

A TRIBUTE.

Brother J. C. Martin died April 9, 1904. He leaves a wife and nine children to mourn his loss, but though they will miss him sorely, it is his eternal gain. I've known Brother Martin forty-odd years, and in all that time not a single wrong act has he done. He was a hard worker; though suffering for several years from a broken leg, he never murmured, but bore his affliction with patience and like a Christian soldier. While on his death bed and perfectly conscious, he was heard to say, "It is all right; I don't dread death, only leaving my family." He was a man that attended strictly to his own business and never meddled with his neighbors. I've lived by him for seventeen years and always found him all right at all times and under all circumstances, always willing to help when called upon as far as he was able. He will be sadly missed in his community. Our sympathy is extended to the bereaved family and friends, and would say to all to live so as to meet him in the far beyond and be an unbroken family in the world where there is no death to separate husband and wife, brother or sister. Goodby.

THE WORLD'S WONDERS ON DISPLAY

St. Louis Working Night and Day to Be in Readiness For the Opening of the World's Fair on Saturday, April 30th Next.

THE first few thousand carloads of the twenty thousand cars of exhibits that will arrive at the World's Fair in St. Louis within the next few weeks have been received and unloaded. Large forces of men are employed night and day in receiving and placing the valuable products from many nations of the world as they come in. Any one who has not been over the World's Fair grounds cannot, with the wildest stretch of his imagination, realize the magnificence of this latest and greatest of Universal Expositions. With its thousand buildings spread out over an area of two square miles, enclosed by six miles of fence, the great World's Fair glistens in the sun, and is the centre of interest to all this part of the country.

The management has very considerately arranged many of the principal exhibit palaces in a compact group. While there are more than twenty-five buildings of considerable size given up to exhibit purposes, the very large buildings are some fifteen in number; eight of these, the Palace of Transportation, Machinery, Electricity, Varied Industries, Education, Manufactures, Mines and Metallurgy, Liberal Arts, are situated in the northeastern part of the grounds. The main entrance to the Exposition will let the visitor into the centre of this group. As each building covers from eight to fifteen acres and contains several miles of aisles, lined on either side by most interesting exhibits, the visitor will see his time slipping away with a world of things yet remaining to be seen.

The Government has spent more on this Exposition than it has ever expended before. First, it gave $5,000,000 to the general fund of the Exposition, upon consideration that the city of St. Louis would raise $10,000,000. This of course was promptly done. Then, the Government appropriated nearly a million and a half more for buildings and exhibits, and a few weeks ago decided to make a loan of $4,600,000 to the Exposition in order to have the elaborate plans carried out to their completeness. The Government cannot lose much on this investment at St. Louis, for the reason that St. Louis returns in internal revenue taxes for the Eastern half of Missouri alone, over $15,000,000 a year.

I wish I might describe the great beauty of the Government building. It is 800 feet long and stands on a broad terrace upon the hillside, overlooking the grand group of exhibit palaces. Near by are the Government Fisheries building and sea coast defense guns.

The Palace of Agriculture is the largest of the Exposition buildings and stands in the central western part of the grounds, upon a high elevation. This building covers twenty acres of ground, the equivalent of a small farm, and contains many thousands of exhibits, not only from the States of the United States but from countries of the world. The Palace of Horticulture stands directly south of the Palace of Agriculture and is 400 by 800 feet.

The Palace of Art, composed of four large pavilions, is one of the most interesting parts of the Fair. The several buildings contain a total of 135 galleries, filled with the priceless treasures of Europe and America, gathered with great care by discriminating committees. As an example of the care with which these selections were made, Italy may be taken as an example. Some four thousand paintings were offered, yet only four hundred could be selected. One of the four buildings of the Palace of Art is devoted entirely to statuary.

The Palace of Forestry, Fish and Game is in the western part of the grounds, covering four acres. The physical culture exhibits is situated in the western part of the grounds, and adjacent to it is the fine large athletic field, with amphitheatre seating twenty-seven thousand people. Upon this field the games will take place during the summer.

In this hurried glance at the Exposition of 1904, we must not forget that very interesting quarter, known as the Pike. This is the amusement street of the Exposition. The visitor will certainly open his eyes in amazement when he sees the array of amusements spread out for his delectation. It is a long story in itself, to tell what has been prepared for his entertainment. The Pike is considerably more than a mile long, and upon either side are arranged about fifty elaborate and extremely novel shows. Some of them cover as many as ten or eleven acres each.

The World's Fair will open on Saturday, April 30, with fitting ceremonies. Upon that occasion an anthem written by Edmund Clarence Stedman will be sung by a chorus of six hundred voices. The music—by the eminent composer, Professor John K. Paine, of Harvard University—as well as the poem, was written especially for this occasion upon the invitation of the Exposition. Frank Vanderstucken, director of the Cincinnati Orchestra, has written a march, and Henry K. Hadley, of New York, has written a waltz, also upon invitation of the Exposition, for its musical programs.

The central feature of the Exposition, or what is intended to be the most beautiful scene in the whole grand picture, is made up of Cascade Gardens, the Colonade of States and the Hall of Festivals. The gardens with their cascades and statuary, and the elaborate architectural features, are nearly a half a mile from east to west and represent an expenditure of one million dollars. It is the most ambitious scheme of formal gardening ever undertaken at an Exposition, or elsewhere. The Festival Hall, 200 feet in diameter and 200 feet high, contains the largest organ in the world, and has a seating capacity for thirty-five hundred people.

Practically all St. Louis is preparing to accommodate World's Fair visitors. The private homes will be open for the reception of guests throughout the Exposition. The prices will be from 50c. to $1.50 per day for each person for rooms. Restaurants are so plentiful that meals may be had in almost any locality where the visitors may happen to stop.

RUSSIA'S VICEROY.

Admiral Alexeieff a Master Mind, a Master Will and a Masterful Hand.

Admiral E. I. Alexeieff, described by Senator Beveridge in his book, "The Russian Advance," as "a master mind, a master will, altogether a masterful man," is the subject of an informing article by Charles Johnston, in Harper's Weekly. Admiral Alexeieff has toiled for years at the building of a new region of Russian influence, a region nearly as large as the combined area of France and Germany, and with a fringe of possible future acquisitions many times greater, only to see the whole of his life work threatened with dissolution. "In this lifework," says Mr. Johnston, "he has accomplished miracles almost, facing conditions of great and unexpected difficulty, amid surroundings alternately picturesque with the glamor of the East and squalid with intrigue and physical wretchedness. Through all these difficulties Admiral Alexeieff has acted with constant resolution, force, rapidity, and constructive power.

Youngest Cavalryman of Civil War.

The death of Oscar Arion Frost, at Ottawa, brings out the claim for him that he was the youngest cavalryman enlisted in the Civil War. He went into the Third Missouri Cavalry at fourteen years of age, and served through the war. It cannot be claimed for Mr. Frost, though, that he was boyish in appearance. At the time of his enlistment he was six feet tall and weighed 190 pounds.—Kansas City Journal.

MUSIC AND ANIMALS.

The Puma Is the Most Sensitive to the Influence of Melody.

Some very curious experiments have recently been carried out in the German Zoological Gardens in order to ascertain the actual influence of music upon animals. The instrument was the violin and Herr Baker was the performer.

Of all the animals the puma was the most sensitive to the musical influence. His moods changed rapidly, according to the nature of the melody, the animal frequently becoming very excited and nervous, "just like a Frenchman," as the report says.

Leopards were entirely unconcerned, but the lions appeared to be afraid, although their cubs wanted to dance when the music became livelier. The hyenas were very much terrified, but the monkeys were merely curious and the monkeys were merely curious.

The experiments are to be continued, and with a variety of instruments, in order to distinguish between the mental states which are actually produced by the music and those which are merely the result of an unusual experience.—Scientific American.

Interesting.

To hear the music of sweet bells, and also to test solid silver, take a solid-silver tablespoon, and tie two cords of equal length to the handle. Hold the ends of the cords to each ear, at the same time closing the ears with the fingers. Then by a motion of the body swing the spoon, letting it strike the back of the chair or like wooden object. You have no idea what sweet music you will hear. Try it, and see. —Woman's Home Companion.

N-RAYS AND DIGESTION.

This Process Causes Their Emission, as Does Muscular Activity.

That the processes of digestion, as well as mental and muscular activity, seem to cause the emission of N-rays, is the conclusion reached by M. Lambert, in France, after a series of interesting experiments. He believes that these curious rays are produced by ferments, especially by those concerned in the digestion of albuminoid matter. In his experiments on digestion, says a writer in Harper's Weekly, M. Lambert placed a small quantity of fibrin in tubes containing in one case activated pancreatic juice, and in another artificial gastric juice made by mixing five per cent. solution of pepsin with a four per cent. solution of hydrochloric acid. From these tubes the N-rays were emitted, and were detected not only by producing increased luminescence of a phosphorescent screen, but also photographically, thus removing the subjective element from the experiment. As a result of these experiments, M. Lambert believes that in the course of digestion the fibrin undergoes strains which act to produce N-rays.

THE TRANSGRESSION OF PHILIP

By MRS. EDWARDS PAINE.

"Well!" said Natalie Bridewell, as she stood before her pier-glass, putting the finishing touches to her evening toilet, "if I had had the faintest idea that Phil Marston could have acted like that, I should have never wasted the time on him I have. But then," she continued, stepping away from the glass to get a fuller view of herself, "I loved Phil—at least, I thought I did."

Natalie was going to a "swell reception" given by the Apollo club in honor of its new members. After the last remark her bosom heaved a sigh, which set a fluttering of butterfly-bows, perched airily upon her saucy puffs and curls, threatening at the least provocation to take wings and fly away.

Natalie was charming. No observer would have had the audacity to doubt that, as, with the soft clinging folds of her evening gown outlining her graceful figure, she viewed herself before the mirror. But if any one had ventured to call her beautiful, she would have resented it; for she had a grievence sadly at variance with her idea of feminine beauty; namely, a nose strongly inclined to tilt. However, she possessed other charms, not unknown to herself, which lay in the glossy waves of her auburn hair, the lustre of her nut-brown eyes, and the baby-tint of her peach-blossom complexion. Besides these, she was an acknowledged belle in society, and a capital entertainer as well, and when taking all these things into consideration, it was not surprising that the Apollo club, the fashionable club of the city, should select her from a bevy of young ladies to head the long line of its reception committee.

While Natalie was adjusting her butterfly bow to a little securer position, she said—

"I know he'll be there tonight. If he is, what then? I almost wish I hadn't accepted such a prominent position. But then, those boys just would n't take no for an answer. And I—well, I just didn't have the heart to refuse them, especially after I have been away so long." And then, giving the defenseless bow another nervous twitch, she added, "I guess I don't have to talk to him if I don't want to!

"It's just a year ago tonight," she continued, "that Alfred Thornhill, with other new members, was introduced to the Apollo club society. Why Phil should have gotten so furiously jealous I can't imagine. The fact of the business is I had never thought of Phil in that light before. If any one had told me he was that kind of a man, I think I should have told him he lied.

"But why should he have forced me into such a position if he didn't expect me to be courteous? Alfred Thornhill would command courtesy under all circumstances. But Phil seemed to object to him particularly because he was made a member while he was gone. As if that made any difference. Suppose he don't live in the East End and belong to 'our set.' Does that make him any less a man? I think it horrid to admit him to the club and then snub him socially." And Natalie's tilted nose rose a degree or so in indignation.

Thus Natalie rambled on, and inwardly fretted, while she paced the floor, waiting for the carriage to come to take her to the reception.

On the night referred to, Natalie had defended her position on the subject of class prejudice which certain would-be reformers had managed to stir up in the community.

At that annual function of the Apollo club, many sympathized with Phil Marston in his pronounced opinion on the subject, and Natalie was not slow in recognizing his influence thus brought to bear upon the attentions due to Alfred Thornhill. This aroused her womanly instinct in his defense, and she manifested it by taking the initiative and bestowing upon him all the attention her position would allow. In fact, she overdid the matter, and went so far as to provoke criticism, when one of the chaperones of the evening, in all kindness, undertook to admonish her, when Natalie "flew up" and said—

"I won't be dictated to by anybody! I am responsible for my own acts. If, as you say, 'our set' won't tolerate it, why, so be it. I don't care. Under the circumstances I'm only doing what I believe to be right. If the club didn't want me to treat everybody alike why did they put me on the reception committee?"

So, Natalie carried the matter through the evening with a master hand, and on her return home she felt herself as highly a conqueror as any monarch who ever sat on a throne.

But when it was all over, Phil Marston, a young man of social attainments and financial worth, and Natalie's acknowledged lover, was to be reckoned with. He was bound to have his say. Of course, the long and short of it was, Phil was furiously jealous. No sooner were they seated in the carriage than he began—

"Natalie, you acted outrageously tonight!"

"I'd like to know how you make that out?" she indifferently replied.

"I gave you credit for being a girl of better sense."

"Sense has nothing to do about it," she retorted. "It's all a matter of breeding. What reason have given you to change your mind?"

"Reason enough!" said Phil, exasperated at her coolness. "Do you suppose I'm going to tolerate a fellow like Al Thornhill dancing attendance the whole evening long on a girl I'm engaged to? If you do, you're mightily mistaken!"

"If Mr. Thornhill's good enough to be admitted to the Apollo club, he's good enough to dance attendance on the girl you are engaged to, or anybody else."

"That's where we differ," replied Phil, sarcastically.

"Then why in the name of wonders did you allow him to enter the club at all?"

"I didn't," exclaimed Phil. "I didn't have a thing to do about it. I was away, and you know it. If I'd been there when his name was proposed I'd have back-balled him sure's guns."

"Doubtless you would," replied Natalie, with a strong emphasis on the personal pronoun. "But, it's my opinion the Apollo club would be a heap better off if it had more men in it like Alfred Thornhill."

"What do you know about Al Thornhill or the men of the Apollo club?" Phil asked with rising fury.

"I know enough," replied Natalie, her indignation rising at the blasphemous words, " and what I don't know I don't want anybody to tell me. But I can tell you, Phil Marston, judging from some shady reports and the experiences I am now having with one of them, if I had to chose a man, for genuine, personal worth from the membership of the Apollo club, I'd take Alfred Thornhill every time."

"Take him then!" exclaimed Phil, in a jealous rage, "I don't care."

"Thank you," said Natalie, ironically "you've conferred upon me a great privilege."

"Marry him if you want to," said Phil, raging beyond the bounds of reason. "It's all the same to me."

"Thank you," again replied Nathalie. "Perhaps I may. Time will tell. But it's my opinion Mr. Thornhill is a man of too much character to ask a girl in my position to marry him. He's too proud, and that's why I like him."

This assertion of Nathalie's brought out a new phase of the situation, and provoked Phil to silence for the remainder of the way home.

All those incidents were in Natalie's mind while she was restlessly pacing the floor of her own room, creating a sense of unhappiness which she found hard to manage.

For the past year she had neither seen nor heard from Phil. In her heart she had believed she possessed a stronger hold upon him. But the fault was not his. She had yet to learn that when he went to his room that night, he bitterly repented of what he had done. In the light of his conscience he saw that Natalie was right, that he had no reason for forcing her into a position whereby she could not be just to herself. He saw his own folly, and finally became disgusted with himself for the ruthless attack he had made upon the girl he loved.

The next morning he went to call upon her to ask her forgiveness. She had gone! An early train had carried her to New York, where he knew she expected to go through the day. There she was to remain a few days, then sail for Germany to study for at least a year in Berlin.

All through that year the words of that bitter quarrel had rung through Phil's ears. Imagination tortured him into thinking what a worthless fellow Natalie believed him to be. When he realized the possibility of what he had said to her proving true, his feelings would alternate between heat and cold, love and hate. One moment he would love her to distraction and would declare he could not live another moment without her; the next, when he thought of her attitude towards Alfred Thornhill, he would hate her with all the intensity of his soul for the misery she was causing him.

After awhile, however, she settled down into a grim state of endurance. He determined to master the jealous passion that threatened his life—to try to undo his mad act, and make himself worthy of the good opinion and affections of Natalie.

In a tone of resentment he yielded to his last bitter feeling and said—

"I'll show her there's something good left in Phil Marston yet."

In view of all this, it was no more than natural that Natalie should look forward to the evening with feelings of dread. And not only in regard to Phil, for she also dreaded to meet Alfred Thornhill, whom she had not seen, either, since a year ago that very night. After awhile a feeling of defiance took possession of her and she said aloud—

"I don't know but it would be serving Phil right to marry Mr. Thornhill, after all."

But Natalie was proud. Under the circumstances, she didn't want to own even to herself that she had a particle of love left for Phil. She had a conscience, too, which forbade her tampering with the sacredness of human affections. So, between the two, she felt an equal balance. She could neither get away from Phil's love, nor impose upon an innocent party for the sake of punishment.

On this evening she had rejected all escorts and chaperones, choosing rather to be driven to the reception in her father's carriage, that she might return at her pleasure.

When Philip Marston passed the ordeal of the reception line, Natalie set the temperament of the evening with the tips of her icy fingers and a zero nod, which lowered the mercury in Phil's heart several degrees below the freezing point. During the evening he tried by all manner of means to get a few moments alone with her, but was evaded at every point. Hints For Beauty Seekers.

...men have good complexions nat... ...but let those who have not take ...heart," says a woman who knows whereof she speaks, "for almost any skin can be made to become firm and elastic, clear and hardy.

"The woman who desires a good skin must learn to breathe, and next to exercise. Let her stand for five minutes before the open window, heels together, head up, chest out, chin in, hips back and hands hanging loosely at the sides. While in this position she must draw a long, deep breath through the nose and exhale slowly through the mouth.

"Half an hour before breakfast it is well to drink about a pint of hot water containing a pinch of salt. Charcoal tablets after each meal are also excellent, but it is absolutely necessary to wash the body every day in tepid water, with plenty of pure soap, finishing with a brisk rubbing with a coarse towel. After this the face should receive special treatment. Few people wash their faces properly. The principal work should be done at night, and unless the skin is very thin, a rather coarse washcloth should be used, with plenty of warm water. While the pores are open massage the skin with a little lanolin, applying with the finger tips, and knead the cheeks with the knuckles and palms of the hands.

"Any one desirous of avoiding undue lines and wrinkles on throat and face should use this treatment patiently for one month. The improvement in the complexion will by that time speak for itself."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

How to Educate the Boy.

Not a few fathers hurt their sons and damage the careers of those sons by picking out careers for them. Train up the boy in the way he should go, and then let him choose his own work. In the choice of a vocation, as in the choice of a wife, every young man should be left alone. If he is not worthy of being left alone the parent has grievously injured the boy in the preceding decade of his life. These interpretations mean that I would not educate my boy under a private tutor. I would educate my boy with boys, although not entirely by boys. Boys do, however, educate boys, but a boy who is trained alone is liable to fail in adjusting himself to his membership in humanity. He is to become a brother of the common lot. He therefore should learn early how to adjust himself to his fellows. Neither would I educate my son abroad; he is an American boy. I should be glad to have him get all that is best from the private school in Lausanne or Geneva, but not for one instant would I have his ideas formed by the French master or his methods by the German. A primary note in his character should be the American, although a note more fundamental is the human. He is, as a human boy, to be trained up for service in this great, interesting new life of our new world.—Harper's Weekly.

Captain Johnny O—
And far away they sailed, by icebergs

Till they came to an isle where the

To Chase Earthquakes.

In April of this year there will begin a curious international work which is to last twelve years.

It is the work of watching the earthquakes of the world; and most of the nations will contribute earthquake detectives.

The object is to learn something about earthquakes that may lead to a discovery of their causes; the hope is that something may develop which will enable scientists to warn persons in threatened districts in time so that they may escape, just as is done now in the case of storms.

This international hunt for the earthquake was organized in Strasburg, Germany, during the last session of the International Seismic Congress. All the nations that joined in the work then have agreed to use all available government departments to gather statistics about earthquakes, and to forward them to the Central Bureau, which is the German Imperial Central station for Earthquake Study in Strasburg.

Rules and regulations have been laid down for observation, and the members know just what facts should be gathered. Whatever money can be raised will be used for the establishment of observatories and experiment stations in lands that are sufferers from these disturbances.

The reports that are sent in to the central station will be edited and published periodically.

The delegates who voted for organized earthquake chase represented the United States, Mexico, Chili, Argentina, the Congo Free State, Japan, and most of the governments of Europe.

Pears Enough.

An eccentric old man named Dodge, once taught a young man a lesson in the art of letting things alone. The old man was once having his barn shingled, and a pear tree stood so near the roof that the carpenters' heads were among its branches. One young man could not resist the temptation to pick and eat some of the pears, although they were not yet ripe.

Mr. Dodge saw him from the house, but left him undisturbed until several pears had been eaten. Then taking a plateful of ripe fruit, he climbed to where the youth was at work. As he came in sight, he noticed that a half-consumed pear was hastily concealed in the pocket of the carpenter's apron.

"Have a pear," said Mr. Dodge, offering the plate.

"No, thank you," replied the young man, "I don't care for any."

"Oh, take one," urged Mr. Dodge. "The pears out here aren't ripe yet. Take one of these, do."

His manner, more than his words, at last prevailed upon the young carpenter to try one.

Then Mr. Dodge talked about the weather, about shingling and various topics until the workman finished eating, when he urged him to take another. "Take one, do! These out here aren't very good."

The man ate a second. Then the persistent owner coaxed him to take a third, and a fourth, until the shingler was forced to confess he had had enough.

"Oh," replied his tormentor, "I didn't know that there was enough here for you."

Then going to the house and seating himself by the window he waited for results. Pretty soon he noticed that the young man appeared uneasy, and walked back and forth, as if in pain. Then he sat down on a pile of of shingles, all doubled up, with his hands clasped tightly over his stomach. The old man ran for his plate of pears.

"What's the matter? Want another pear?" he exclaimed, hailing the carpenter.

"No——too many already," groaned the sufferer.

"Too many? Land! four aren't many for a man of your get!"

"But I ate four before you came out," was the reply.

"Oh, ho! Helped yourself, did you? Then 'twas the four pairs of 'em that hurt you. Serves you right. You'd better learn to ask permission the next time."

The great pear tree remained undisturbed by that carpenter while his job lasted.

Boy's Curiosity.

If an old story be true the curiosity of a little boy led to the invention of the telescope, that remarkable glass which reveals the wonders of the heavens to our eyes. I suppose we all know that Galileo first constructed and used a telescope for scientific purposes, but some one else first conceived the idea of one. Now, here is a story which I think interesting enough to tell you.

Many years ago there lived in far away Holland an optician. He had three children, all of whom loved to play about and watch him as he sat at his bench working. His little boy especially thought it great fun to look through the glasses his father used in his work. Many of them had such odd shapes, and often as he held them up to the sun he could make lovely rainbows on the floor and walls. It chanced one memorable day that he had taken two glasses, and, standing in the street, just outside the shop, he held both to his eyes at the same time. All at once it seemed that the face of the great clock, which he knew to be several blocks away, was right before him. For a moment he was frightened. How had the clock come so near, he wondered? He winked his eye very had and looked at it without the glasses. Then it was in its usual place, so far away that he could scarcely see its hands.

"But it was near," he said to himself. "It seemed just across the street. These glasses must have made it look that way. I must find out why." So being a bright boy, he sat down on the step to think it out. He tried first one glass and then the other. Still the clock was far away. Then he turned the glasses in all directions with no better success, but quite suddenly, as he was holding both in one hand, he saw the clock right before him again.

"Oh! I know! I know!" he cried, joyfully. "Father, come! come!"

Of course his father went out in a great hurry, not knowing what the trouble might be. When he did find out he, too, thought it was very wonderful, and so he set to work to make an instrument which would make distant objects seem near. To do it he had to use two glasses, one concave and the other convex. When the great Galileo heard of it he said:

"How happy I could be if I might have an instrument strong enough to make the stars seem near," and after much labor he succeeded. So you see what a great and important discovery the action of this small boy led to, for without the telescope we would have learned very little about the stars or the sun or the moon.—New York Press.

Leslie's Report Card.

Leslie came in from school with a whirl behind her. It was a chilly winter's evening, and Aunt Grace, in her easy chair by the window, drew her shawl more closely about her.

"Mama, see my report!" said Leslie, tossing the card into her mother's lap. "Isn't it splendid?" and she danced off so wildly that she upset Baby Herbert's blocks, whereupon a wail arose from his babyship.

"Leslie," called mama, "please go at once and close the door, then pick up Herbert's blocks!"

Leslie rushed to close the door, and shut it directly upon Jamie, also hurrying home with his report. When he was quieted, mama said, "Leslie, if you must rush about, you may take this letter to the postoffice, then go to the meat market and order steak. On your way home you may match this silk for Aunt Grace."

"All right, mama, but please do look at my report" Leslie answered.

"Mine, too," said Jamie.

"Mine's better than yours," said Leslie, teasingly. "It's the best in my class, and yours isn't."

"Leslie, you will be too late for the mail if you do not go at once," and with a final warning word from her mother, Leslie was off.

Back again at tea-time, it was found that she had forgotten to match the silk for Aunt Grace. She teased the cat, scolded Jamie, and neglected Herbert when asked to amuse him. At last mama said, "Leslie, you go to bed. If I were to write a report for you, I fear it would not be much like the one Miss Lane gave you."

What could mama mean? She was one of Miss Lane's best pupils. "If mama only knew how hard I study!" she thought.

Morning duties hurried through, she snatched the report of which she was so proud and hurried out to join Bessie Palmer.

"My report is lovely!" said Leslie. "Did you see it? No? Just look at it!" and she held the page out for Bessie's admiration.

But instead of words of praise a giggle came from Bessie. "Why, Leslie Morton! I'd be ashamed to show such a report!"

Leslie snatched back the card. "You mean thing! I'm sure it is the very best—" She stopped. Instead of Arithmetic, excellent; Reading, very good, she read, in her mother's handwriting: Thoughtfulness, deficient; Sisterly kindness, lacking; times tardy at table, but she could read no more for the tears that filled her eyes. How could mama be so cruel? Surely she was not such a bad girl as that! She sobbed aloud, and awoke! Yes, it was only a dream. Mama was calling her. She felt so happy she sprang up singing and called to her mother that she would be down in "no time."

How quickly she dressed! Then she ran to Herbert and helped him, telling him such a funny story as she combed out his curls that he forgot to cry, and both were laughing when they entered the breakfast room. Nor did she forget to do many little things that mama expected of her before school.

As she gathered up her books she could not help peeping into her report to see if it really was a dream. Kissing her mother good-by, she whispered, "I had a dreadful dream last night, mama. I'll tell you some time. But I means to have my home report as good as my school report." And mama understood.—Achsa B. Canfield, in Youths' Companion.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I was married for several years and no children blessed my home. The doctor said I had a complication of female troubles and I could not have any children unless I could be cured. He tried to cure me, but after experimenting for several months, my husband became disgusted, and one night when we noticed the testimonial of a woman who had been cured of similar trouble through the use of Lydia E. FROM WASHINGTON

The Acts and Words of Our Law Makers.

APRIL 9TH.

In the senate Mr. Spooner replied to the democratic strictures on the conduct of the postoffice department, and also traversed quite an extensive political field. He defended the course of the postmaster general in connection with the irregularities of his department and charged the effort on the part of the democratic senators to secure a congressional inquiry in the interest of party politics.

No progress was made on the postoffice bill. The conference report on the Indian bill was partially read, but further consideration was postponed on the suggestion that the conferees had inserted provisions that had not been passed on by either house.

On motion of Mr. Mitchell the senate concurred in the house amendment to the Portland exposition bill which had the effect of passing the measure. It appropriates $475,000 for the exposition. Other bills were passed as follows:

Authorizing the commissioner of general land office to transmit original papers to be used as evidence.

Providing for free admission to the Lincoln museum in Washington.

The recent executive order of the president relating to age as evidence of pensionable disability furnished the text for an appeal by W. Bourke Cochran to the house to uphold the honor of that body in refusing to submit to what he alleged to be the usurpation of the legislative authority of congress by the executive. In anticipation of Mr. Cochran's speech almost every seat on the floor was occupied and the galleries were filled.

APRIL 11TH.

The Culberson amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill providing a commission to investigate the postoffice department was before the senate and after being ruled out of order was pending in modified form when the senate adjourned.

Mr. Gorman made an earnest plea for an investigation, saying the postoffice department had cast reflection upon members of congress and that a thorough examination should be made.

The house passed the bill reported by committee on rivers and harbors appropriating $3,000,000 for the restoration or maintenance of channels, or for other river and harbor improvements.

Mr. Burton, chairman of the committee, in explaining the bill, urged the adoption of settled principles with regard to river and harbor work. Messrs. Burgess, of Texas, and Ransdell, of Louisiana, favored increases in the appropriations for river and harbor improvements, the former urging that they should be doubled and the latter regarding $100,000,000 as not too much. Mr. Clark, of Missouri, made a plea for the improvement of the Missouri river. Quite a large number of bills of minor importance were passed.

APRIL 12TH.

A colloquy occurred in the senate between Senators Teller and Hopkins, growing out of the reading by Mr. Teller of a letter written by the late General H. H. Thomas, of Chicago, attacking the civil service administration of the treasury department. The incident occurred in connection with the discussion of the postoffice appropriation bill.

The bill providing a form of government for the Panama canal zone was taken up, but debate on it had not begun when the senate adjourned. Mr. Morgan offered his bill introduced on the 1st instant as a substitute for the entire bill.

The race question again was injected into the proceedings of the house when Mr. Scott, of Kansas, delivered a long address, in which he referred to the previous statement that it was current in Kansas that ex-President Cleveland had dined C. H. J. Taylor, a Kansas negro politician. He read several letters from Kansas citizens that it had been Taylor's boast that he received such social attention from Mr. Cleveland. He also said that Mr. Cleveland, while governor of New York, had signed a bill providing for mixed schools.

In a spirited reply Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, the minority leader, defended the attitude of the south toward the negro, and said that the discussion of the race question of the republicans was an old game.

The investigation of the protests against the retention of his seat by Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, was resumed by the senate committee on privileges and elections. It is expected that numerous witnesses will be heard this week, including, besides several officials of the Mormon church, a number of anti-Mormon citizens of Utah.

Through the initiative of Representative Underwood, of Alabama, the democrats in congress have decided to oppose that section of the general deficiency appropriation bill which may be reported to the house as early as Thursday, carrying an appropriation of one million and five hundred thousand dollars to supply a deficit during the next fiscal year due to the order of the commissioner of pensions creating a service pension act.

From the Russo-Japan War

Russia is said to be purchasing war vessels from Argentina.

It is reported that cholera has attacked the Russian army at Harbin.

Russia has purchased some armored automobiles and they will be started to the far east at once.

Three of the Japanese fire ships sunk in attempt to block the harbor of Port Arthur have been raised by the Russians and towed into the harbor, where they are being armed with rapid fire guns.

Reports are said to have come from Berlin to the effect that China is on the verge of throwing in her lot with Japan. The first defeat on land for Russia will, it is asserted, be the signal for a forward movement on the part of the celestial empire.

The czar is in a highly nervous state and it is reported in high society circles that his ministers can not get him to decide on anything. He frequently refuses for days to speak. Those who know him say that the evidence of incompetency and treachery furnished by the lessons of the war, have completely unnerved Nicholas.

The war minister has granted the petition of Mme. Pouzepa, who desired to be enrolled in a Cossack regiment. The ministry has ordered her enrolled in the first regiment of riflemen. Mme. Pouzepa is 33 years of age, was reared under the patronage of the late Emperor Alexander III, a fine horsewoman, a good shot, and handles the rifle, revolver and sword equally well. She is also a qualified Red Cross nurse, but she says there are enough women nurses and wants to show that a woman can fight.

Mississippi River.

A special from Rolling Fork, Miss., says:

"A report reaches here to the effect that a portion of the levee at Paleshed, Issaquena county, had caved in, seriously imparing the strength of the embankment and causing grave fears of a crevasse. Large forces of men are engaged in building what is technically known as a "round around" at the cave-in, and this precaution, it is thought, will prevent an inundation should the levee break."

The Mississippi river at Memphis has come to a stand with a stage of thirty-nine feet. This is a rise of .3 of a foot since Saturday night. It is predicted by the United States weather bureau officials that the water will begin to recede. Thus far all levees in the Memphis territory have withstood the overflow, and it is thought that with the beginning of the water to recede all danger will be over.

Killebrew's Opinion.

Former Land Commissioner J. B. Killebrew, of Tennessee, made the principal address before the good roads convention at New Orleans on Thursday. He pointed out the advantages to commerce of improved highways and discussed the question of national aid in the present movement.

"Government aid in the building of our highways will be of more benefit to the country than the building of the Panama canal," he said. "It will be of more benefit than the improvement of our navigable streams and will be more helpful to the great body of our producers than any other thing that can be done."

Winona, Miss., Scorched.

A special from Winona, Miss., says: A large portion of the business section of the city was destroyed by fire Saturday. The fire, the cause of which is unknown, broke out in the Times printing office. It spread rapidly and destroyed the stores of R. C. Gaither, furniture; Young & Maury, dry goods; A. Craemer & Son., grocers, and W. A. Bray, groceries; also a large number of lawyers' offices. The damage is estimated at $100,000.

An official dispatch from Barcelona says that as King Alfonso was leaving the building in which a labor exhibition was being held the explosion of a petard was heard. At first some excitement was caused, as it was believed an attempt had been made on the king's life. An arrest was made.

Former Queen Isabella, of Spain, is dead.

A heavy storm, almost a tornado, struck Natchez, Miss., Thursday. Part of the city hall was unroofed; the cupola of the institute school, a new $35,000 structure, was blown out of plumb and may fall at any moment. St. Mary's cathedral was damaged and hundreds of window panes blown in. Telephone, telegraph and electric light wires are badly disarranged. Horsemen coming from the country districts after the storm had passed report that growing crops have been destroyed.

Sunday was the last open Sunday at the world's fair grounds. The gates are now closed.

Meridian, Miss., Elks will purchase a home.

BOLT BY THE HEARST DELEGATES.

Adoption of Unit Rule in a County Convention Caused Dissatisfaction.

The Essex county delegates to the democratic convention caucus met in Newark, N. J., Friday night and seventeen Hearst delegates bolted when a motion to adopt the unit rule prevailed. The remaining delegates decided to support Former Senator Jas. Smith for one of the delegates at large.

WIND AND HIGH WATER.

Mississippi Levees Threatened and Storm of Snow and Sleet Sweeps Over the Northwest.

Friday the Mississippi river at Memphis registered 37.8 feet, a rise of 4.8 feet in three days. This stage is 4 8-10 above the danger line, and prospects now point to 38 feet, or possibly higher water.

The strain upon the levees continues to increase with the increasing height of the flood, against which an unceasing watch must be maintained night and day.

Captain Lucas and Chief Engineer Pharr expresses firm convictions that the levees with careful watching will stand the ordeal. Active measures, however, are being taken to guard against every approach of the water.

A number of streets in North Memphis have been overflowed with backwater from Bayou Gayoso, delaying traffic to some extent, but no damage has occurred. Railroads have experienced no interruption whatever, and it will take a 40-foot stage of water to give them any serious trouble.

Notices have been given to steamboat captains passing the exposed levee in the vicinity of Luxora, Ark., to reduce speed or keep on the opposite side of the river in order to prevent damage to the levee from wave wash. The water at this point is high upon the levee and is causing considerable alarm to the inhabitants of that vicinity.

The levees at Golden lake and Bradley Landing, Ark., are under a very severe strain and forces are at work topping and strengthening them. The water on the Arkansas side, opposite Memphis covers the low lands to a distance of from 15 to 20 miles.

Snow Storm in Dakota.

A severe wind and snow storm prevailed over North and South Dakota, Thursday night and Friday, and in some instances railroad traffic was blocked and telegraph service seriously hindered.

Fair Building Wrecked.

The high wind that prevailed in St. Louis Friday completely destroyed the partially completed bazar building in the Japanese reservation in the world's fair, not a timber being left standing. None of the workmen was injured. The work of reconstruction was begun almost immediately. No other buildings on the grounds were damaged.

Blizzard in Nebraska.

Nebraska was swept by the worst blizzard of the year Friday and the most severe April storm known in many years. A fine sheet of sleet and snow was driven by a wind that at times reached the proportions of a hurricane.

Minor damage was reported from several towns. Cattle on the ranges turned out for spring grazing will suffer, the temperature having fallen 29 degrees within twelve hours.

REPORT ON THE ANTI-JUG LAW

Filed by Representative Clayton in the House---Finding is Favorable.

A Washington special says: A report favoring the passage of the Hepburn and Dolliver bill granting the state's police power over original packages of liquor shipped within their borders as interstate commerce was filed in the house Friday by Representative Clayton, of Alabama. The report says:

"There has arisen considerable misapprehension as to the meaning and purpose of the proposed legislation. It has been said by some to be a prohibition measure and by others to be an attempt to deprive the individual citizen of the right to have beer, wine and other liquors shipped to him from another state for his own use and enjoyment. Neither of the assertions is true, as (we think) has been demonstrated.

"This bill is not intended to prohibit the sale and use of beer, wine or other intoxicating liquors which have been uniformly held by the United States to be legitimate articles of commerce, nor is the measure designed to abridge the right of a citizen of one state to import from another state such beverages as he may desire for his own use, as before saying. The purpose of ths proposition law and its sole purpose is to allow each state to carry out its own domestic or internal policy in regard to the control of intoxicating beverages within the boundaries of the state.

"The sole effect will be to permit the state, if it so wills, to circumscribe the sale of intoxicating beverages within its boundaries to the full extent that it may desire to restrain such traffic or to regulate the sale of the same through the medium of its own laws, including local option laws, high license laws or dispensary laws."

W. W. Booth, of Montgomery, fell from the steeple of the Dothan M. E. church Saturday and was killed. This is the second man to meet death on this building.

The short cane crop of this last season, 1903-04, has resulted in a very short crop of common molasses and prices have now doubled those of last year.

Reports from Tuscumbia state that work has been suspended by the Illinois Central railroad on its branch from Jackson, Tenn., to Riverton, Ala.

SUMMER NORMAL SCHOOL.

A summer normal school will open May 16th for the benefit of all who expect to take the state examination in July, and any others who wish to take any special work. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR APRIL 17.

Subject: Jesus Transfigured, Mark ix.. 2-13—Golden Text, Mark ix., 7—Memory Verses, 2-4—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. The Transfiguration (vs. 2, 3). 2. "After six days." That is, six days after the sayings of the last lesson. Luke says, "About eight days after." There were six full days and the fractional days at the beginning and the end, making about eight. Edersheim supposes the great confession occurred on the Sabbath, and the transfiguration on the night after the Sabbath one week later. There is no intimation as to how the intervening week was spent. "Peter, and James, and John." These same apostles witnessed His agony in the garden. He took these three (1) because He needed witnesses to prove the fact when the time came to reveal His glory to the world, and (2) for the purpose of encouraging and establishing them in the truths of His kingdom. "Into; mountain." The place of the transfiguration scene is unknown, but it was probably Mount Hermon, not far from Caesarea Philippi. This is the opinion of nearly all modern authorities. "Was transfigured." Matthew says: "His face did shine as the sun." "It would appear that the light shone out of Him from within; it was one blaze of dazzling, celestial glory; it was Himself glorified. The face of Moses had shone, but as the moon, with a borrowed, reflected light; but Christ's shone as the sun, with an innate, inherent light. May this not be a hint as to the appearance of our resurrection bodies? 3. "Raiment; shining, etc." His face shone with divine majesty, and all His body was so irradiated by it, that His clothes could not conceal His glory, but became white and glistened as the very light with which He covered Himself as with a garment.

II. Heavenly visitants (vs. 4-6). 4. "Elias." The Greek form of Elijah. "With Moses." Moses was a representative of the law; he was the founder of the Jewish dispensation, which for centuries had been preparing the way for Christ; he was a type of Christ and had foretold His coming (Deut. 18: 15-18); and through him had been instituted the sacrifices which Christ fulfilled and which explained His coming death which so troubled the disciples. Elijah was the representative of the prophets. They had foretold the coming and the suffering of Christ, and Elijah was the one who was to prepare the way of the Lord by his character and spirit reappearing in John the Baptist, the forerunner of Jesus. "Were talking." Luke tells us what this conversation was about to which they were permitted to listen. They "spake of His decease which He would accomplish at Jerusalem." They were talking of Christ's departure from the world, including, no doubt, His death, resurrection and ascension. This would enable the disciples to see the importance of the sufferings and death of their blessed Master, which was to them the deepest mystery.

5. "Peter; said." Eager and impulsive as always. Peter spoke just as the heavenly visitants were about to leave. It was for him too brief a glimpse of the heavenly glory. "Good; to be here." Peter spoke the truth. The apostles would be stronger and more useful because of the divine manifestations. It is always good for us when the Lord especially manifests Himself to us. "Three tabernacles." Or booths, from the bushes on the mountain; such as were made at the feast of Tabernacles. He greatly desired to have the heavenly visitants remain with them. 6. "Wist not." Knew not. How many times do we speak unwisely because we do not stop to consider our words. "Sore afraid." They trembled in the presence of the divine manifestations.

III. The voice from the cloud (vs. 7, 8). 7. "A cloud; overshadowed them." Matthew says a "bright" cloud. A cloud had frequently been the symbol of the divine presence. "A voice." The voice of God the Father. It revealed nothing new, but confirmed the old, for it was the same voice which had been heard at Christ's baptism. This would show to Peter and the apostles present that they did not need to detain Moses and Elijah in order to add to their happiness. "This is My beloved Son." Matthew adds, "In whom I am well pleased." They had Jesus with them, and He was more than all the hosts of heaven would be without Him. "Hear Him." He is superior even to Moses, the great lawgiver. Moses himself had made such a statement. See Deut. 18: 15. He is superior to Elijah and the prophets, and is the one to whom they pointed.

8. "Looked round about." Matthew tells us that when the disciples heard the voice they fell on their faces, and were sore afraid; then, recovering from the shock, they suddenly gazed all around them and saw no person but Jesus. They feared as they entered into the cloud, but when they heard the voice of God, probably as loud as thunder (see John 12: 29), and full of divine majesty such as mortal ears were unaccustomed to hear, they fell flat to the ground on their faces, being sore afraid. In this condition the three disciples lay until Jesus touched them and raised them up, dispelling their fears.

IV. The divine charge (vs. 9, 10). 9. "Tell no man." The charge which Jesus gave them would prohibit their telling even the other apostles.

10. "Questioning, etc." How could they properly preach a crucified and risen Saviour, when they were resolutely opposed to His death and questioned what the rising from the dead might mean? Silence and discipline were their present duty. Had they preached Him as a glorious Messiah, superior to Moses and Elias, as set forth in his transfiguration, the Jewish authorities would have held them guilty of treason.

V. A question (vs. 11-13). 11. "Why say the scribes, etc." What foundation have the scribes for saying that Elijah must come before the Messiah? "The scribes and Pharisees may have urged as a capital objection against the Messiahship of their Master that no Elijah went before Him." 12. "Cometh first." Christ cannot mean here, and in Matt. 17: 11, as some understand these passages, that Elijah is to come before the second advent. "Restoreth all things." To restore is strictly to bring back to a lost perfection, then to develop, raise, to introduce a purer, nobler epoch; here specially to proclaim the kingdom of God. "And how is it written, etc." (R. V.) Elijah cometh first and restoreth all things. But how or to what purpose is it written of the Son of man that he cometh? In order that He may suffer, not conquer like a mighty prince. 13. "Is indeed come." In the person of John the Baptist. "They listed." Whatsoever they chose or desired.

Protecting a City from Fire.

Harper's Weekly contains an interesting article describing the great pumping plant and system of independent high pressure fire mains in Philadelphia, which have recently been completed to take the place of steam fire engines. The system consists of a number of powerful pumps, located in a single building and using water from the Delaware river. The mains cover a selected territory of about four hundred and twenty-five acres, the hydrants are of a special pattern, and it is possible to send four streams to the top of Philadelphia's tallest skyscraper. The engines are driven by gas, which is derived from the city illuminating gas mains. When there is no alarm of fire the pumps are at rest, but as soon as an alarm is turned in the necessary connection is established with the pumping stations and the engines are started and are in operation at once.

Korea's Palace Burned.

A report to high officials has it that the imperial palace at Seoul, Korea, was completely destroyed by fire Thursday night. The fire began in the evening and lasted throughout the night. The emperor and his suite succeeded in escaping to a nearby refuge. The report does not mention any loss of life, nor does it give the cause of the fire, but the recent political unrest in the Korean capital leads to fears that the destruction of the palace was the work of the rebellious element.

The imperial palace is a massive structure 400 years old, is built of stone. It is an old federal structure and contains within its walls a constant guard of 500. Inside the confines of the palace grounds 5,000 retainers live. The palace is not the oldest of the emperor's homes. He has another palace in which he lived for many years, but one night a snake fell from the ceiling of his bed room, according to a well circulated story and Yie Evi immediately moved to his present imperial abode.

GREENWOOD, MISS.,

Was Visited by a Cyclone Thursday—The Damage.

A cyclone struck Greenwood, Miss., Thursday night.

The fourth story of the big new furniture factory was completely demolished, entailing a heavy loss. One store and several smaller buildings in the same vicinity were swept from their foundations. No loss of life is reported, but all of the wires are down north of the city and no reports can be obtained.

In Its Old Bed.

With a roar that was heard for miles the Mississippi river, Friday night, cut through Killicrankie Neck in Davis Bend, restored Davis island to the Mississippi mainland, and resumed its old channel through what for forty years has been known as Lake Palmyria.

Incidently several valuable cotton plantations were practially ruined. The neck of land through which the river cut to regain possession of its former channal was about five hundred yards wide. Davis Bend is twenty miles south of Vicksburg.

Cotton in India.

The government of India has issued the final general memorandum on the cotton crop of British India for 1903-04, showing that the area under cotton of 17,870,599 acres is over a million acres larger than the corrected area of last year, which was then the highest returned. The official figures of the estimated yield is 2,873,394 bales. The estimated total yield for this season excluding returns from Assam and Mysore, which did not report last year, is approximately the same as for last season.

Will Open the School.

Colored citizens of Jackson, Miss., have inaugurated a movement to raise the funds necessary to reopen the Holly Springs state normal school for colored teachers, and say that they will not ask the north to give a cent. They propose to get the cash from their own people. This is the school that was closed on account of Governor Vardaman's veto of the bill which appropriated $2,000 per annum to its support, and which bill the legislature was unable to pass over the veto.

Shipbuilders' yards on the Baltic and on the Neva have been ordered to finish within three months five submarine boats of the Holland type and five of the Beklemisheff type. The boats will be shipped overland to Port Arthur immediately upon completion.

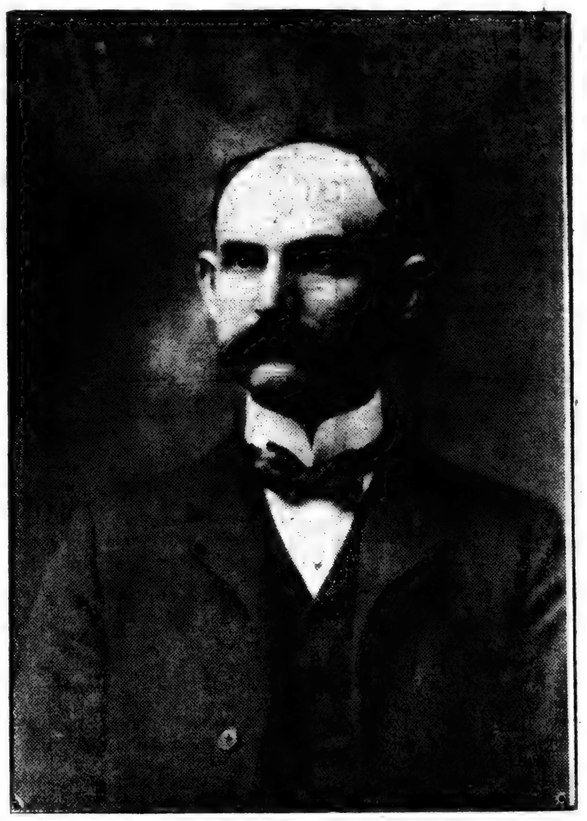
Three pieces of the Vulcan statue have been shipped to St. Louis.

Soldiers Killed In Riot.

In a riot at Pensacola Saturday between police and blue jackets from the warships and a few artillerymen from Fort Barrancas, one man, Private Banks of the Seventh company of artillery, was instantly killed, and four blue jackets from the Iowa and Alabama wounded, though not seriously. The riot started over the arrest of a blue jacket.

The mikado has ordered a prince of the royal house to attend the world's fair at St. Louis. He has selected his nephew, Prince Arisugawa Takehito. The prince, accompanied by his wife, will leave Japan in June and expects to remain in this country several months. The visit is intended as an expression of the mikado's appreciation of the friendly attitude of the citizens of this nation toward the land of the cherry blossoms.

Mine Inspector Cunningham and Superintendent Howden have been held responsible for the Harwick, Pa., mine disaster last January in which 178 men perished.



HON. LEWIS H. REYNOLDS.

"Representative Lewis H. Reynolds, of Chilton, is a native Alabamian. He is a self-educated and self-made man of the best type. Although only 37 years of age, by thrift, honesty and industry he has already accumulated a comfortable competence. Is now largely engaged in farming and merchandising in Chilton county.

"Mr. Reynolds is the leader of the republican party in the house. Its numbers are small, but through his long experience as a legislator and his strong and popular personality it has had much influence in the present session. He was one of the most prominent and potential leaders in the organization of the populist party in 1892. In 1894 he was elected as a populist to represent Chilton county in 1894 in the lower house, and has continuously served in that position with rare fidelity and ability until the present session, with the exception of the years 1900-01, when he declined renomination.

"In 1901 Mr. Reynolds was elected a member of the state constitutional convention from Chilton county. In that body he was an influential member of the committees on agriculture and banking and insurance.

* * * *

"He was nominated and elected by both the populist and republican parties to the present house of representatives. He is an influential member of the committee on temperance, upon which he has done much good work. He is also a member of the committee on federal elections and public printing.

"Mr. Reynolds has never even been accused of violating a personal or political pledge. He enjoys the unlimited confidence of his party and the respect of all his political adversaries. A striking evidence of this is the fact that although in the minority in every legislature in which he has served he has never lost a single local bill which he introduced. He is taking especial interest in the provisions of the new election law now pending in the house.

"In 1888 he married Miss Dora Marshall, of Georgia."—Montgomery Journal February 17th, 1903.

COOPERS.

Having seen nothing from beat 10 for some time, I'll drop a few lines. Everything is O. K. down here since the democratic primary, the smoke and dust caused by the candidates rushing to and fro in their mad efforts to corral voters has cleared. And what a primary! The democrats polled 45 votes here and at least 15 of them were not qualified to vote. One of their managers was a man who has not paid his poll tax but once in three years, and I'm informed that one at the Verbena box was in the same fix, and that out of 62 votes cast at that box there were 22 not qualified. But the dems let everybody vote, qualified or not. You see, they wanted to make a showing, but if it was all over the county as it was in these two boxes the people were more than right when they told Cryton that there would not be over 450 votes cast. Well, we people are "standing pat" and after we make our nominations will carry everything by storm at the election in November. Say, wasn't that a neat job the dems put up on Smith, an old liner who says he has served his party all the time? Populists, you all remember how they served Judge Honeycutt, how they cross-fired him? And now they are fools enough to think that they can get populists to vote for Adams, but you can bet they won't, and that ain't all, even democrats say they won't vote for Adams and that court house clique. We, the people, are in better shape than we have been since 1896. This is the view of an old, conservative populist VOTER.

The Southern railway has advised the clerk of the railroad commission that it will comply at once with the order of the commission abolishing the tin cup from their cars and substituting glass drinking utensils. The Pearl and Leaf river road has made the same promise, but the other roads have not indicated their intentions in the premises.

Two of the four oil mills at Jackson, Miss., have closed down for the season, and the other two will close. This will throw about three hundred hands out of employment.

At Baton Rouge, La., the christening of the New Istrouma hotel was made a gala occasion. The central figure in the ceremony was Mrs. W. R. Leavitt, formerly Miss Ruth Bryan, daughter of W. J. Bryan, who in the presence of a large number of society people of the city broke a bottle of champagne and gave the new hotel its name. The hotel is the first modern hostelry erected in the Louisiana capital. Mrs. Leavitt is there with her husband, the artist, who is painting a portrait of Governor Heard.

The board of mayor and aldermen of the city of Hattiesburg, Miss., give notice that at the regular meeting in May they will issue bonds in the sum of $60,000 for the purpose of building or buying an electric light plant.

Ed Gammons, the Mississippi murderer of his sweetheart, says in his confession that she asked him to shoot her.

It is predicted that the Georgia fruit crop this year will amount to 5,000 cars, and the railroads are figuring now on how to secure enough refrigerator cars to move the crop. The peach season in Georgia lasts less than four weeks, and during the shipping season a car will not make more than two round trips. Up to April 10 except in limited areas the Georgia fruit crop was safe.

Drop a half-dollar in the slot. That is the scheme to take the place of ticket sellers at the St. Louis fair.

DOZEN STORES BURN

Town of Clinton is Almost Wiped off the Map.

A fire which occurred at Clinton, Greene county, Tuesday morning almost swept it out of existence. Six stores of merchandise, namely Head's, Pippen's, Cook's, Carpenter's, Miss Strother's and Williams' mercantile company, together with the buildings they occupied, were destroyed. The Christian church was also burned. Only three stores are left. The estimated damage is $12,000, with insurance of $1,000.

Engineer Killed.

J. B. Allen, switch engine foreman in the employ of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, was stabbed to death by W. H. Anderson, the assistant general yard master at Birmingham.

The two men had a difficulty over a dispute about their work, the placing of "gondolas" at South Alice.

The stab was in the region of the heart and was a vicious looking wound. Anderson is in jail.

Viceroy Alexieff has applied by telegraph to be relieved of his position of viceroy to the far east. It is expected that the request will be granted. The immediate cause of the viceroy's application is reported to be the appointment of Vice Admiral Skrydloff, one of Admiral Alexieff's strongest enemies, as successor to the late Vice Admiral Makaroff in command of the Russian navy in the far east.

Rear Admiral Theodore J. Jewell has assumed command of the European squadron, going aboard his flagship the Olympia, which has been detached from the Caribbean and attached to the European squadron as the flagship. Representative Rice Pierce, of Tennessee, the second ranking minority member of the house committee on appropriations, says the aggregate regular appropriations of the first session of the fifty-eighth congress, now about to close, will be in the neighborhood of $700,000,000.

Burglars entered the store of N. H. Freeman at Haleyville, Winston county, Sunday night and blew open the safe containing about $250. No clew has yet been found as to the parties who did the work. Part of the funds taken belonged to the postoffice.

Toronto's wholesale district suffered a fire Tuesday night whose total loss is estimated at $1,000,000. Dynamite was used to stop the flames' progress. The chief of the fire department jumped six stories and escaped with a broken leg.

Two trestles on the Southern railway, one at Faunsdale and one near Mobile, were burned Tuesday. The one at Mobile was of incendiary origin and it is believed to have been preliminary to an attempt to rob a passenger train.

ASK, AND YE SHALL RECEIVE.

O praying ones, who long have prayed,
And yet no answer heard,
Have he been sometimes half afraid
God might not keep His word?
Seems prayer to fall on deafened ears?
Does Heaven seem blind and dumb?
Is hope deferred? Believe! believe!
The answering time will come.

"Ask what ye will." His word is true,
His power is all divine;
Ye cannot test His love too far,
His uttermost is thine;
God does not mock believing prayer,
Ye shall not go unfed;
He gives no serpent for a fish,
Nor gives He stones for bread.

Thine inmost longings may be told,
The hopes that turned to shame,
The empty life, the thwarted plan,
The good that never came.
Say not, "The promise is not mine,
God did not hear me pray;
I prayed—I trusted fully—but
The grave hath barred the way."

God heard thee—He hath not forgot,
Faith shall at length prevail,
Yea, know thou, not the smallest jot
Of all His word can fail;
Oh, if ye truly have believed,
Not vain hath been thy prayer.
As God is true, thy hope shall come,
Some time—some way—somewhere.

THE FIRST CAUSE

By MILFORD W. FOSHAY.

Copyrighted, 1908, by The Authors Publishing Company.

"You don't love me! You know you don't love me, and that's the reason we aren't happy."

"It is clearly demonstrated, then, that we aren't happy?"

"Of course it is. You used to be with me every evening, and we read poetry and discussed literature, and—and—"

"Loved each other?"

"Yes; and that's exactly what people ought to do all their lives. You used to say that I was exceptionally well read, and that it was interesting to talk with me; but you haven't said so for ever so long, and it's just because you don't love me, and that's the very reason we aren't happy any more."

"It looks as if this conversation might become as interesting as any we ever had. I always like to give attention to first causes, and you seem to be getting down to the foundation of our relationship."

"Well, I think it is time to look for a first cause, and it's certainly not my fault if I am forced to the conclusion I have given."

"No; you are without fault, as I have told you very often. But, er—may I be permitted to inquire whose the fault is?"

"Yes; you have told me often enough that I am without fault, and that you loved me; but that's what you used to say. We have been married three months, and you haven't told me anything of the kind for—for weeks."

"Really, I haven't seen the occasion for it."

"Then you admit that my conclusion is correct?"

"Oh, I simply meant that I have proved my former assertions, and there is now less need for repeating them."

"Proved them?"

"Certainly."

"How?"

"By marrying you."

"And having done that gracious deed, there is now no occasion for further love?"

"If I have failed to say so, it is not because you have ceased to prompt me to."

"I?"

"Assuredly. I think you will admit that you have been making the statement to me in the most positive way, for at least six weeks, that I do not love you. Now, if it hasn't been to get me to agree with you, pray what has it been for?"

"And you will admit that I have had reason for saying so?"

"Excuse me, my dear (please notice the term), but I cannot admit that I have gone any further in this direction than you have insisted that I ought to go."

"Your term is perfectly correct, and it is also perfectly cold. I am sorry that I cannot be sufficiently conventional to return it, but I am in earnest, not ironic. I am very much mortified to think that I am so dense as to have made a similar statement, just as positively, and again I was obliged to accept it. After these things the lectures at the chamber of commerce began. You reiterated your former assertions, and insisted that I went because I got more pleasure there than in your society. I was in duty bound to believe you, and so, you see, I have gone only as far in my sentiments as you have insisted on my going."

"And have I not been telling you the truth?"

"Really, my dear, you put it in a very embarrassing way! You surely

"Oh, you dear, good, bad, cold, warm-hearted, old hubby you!"

do not wish me to assert that I do not believe what you say?"

"Then may I ask you a few questions from a different standpoint?"

"With all my heart."

"For what do you go to the bank meetings?"

"Because I am a director, and it is necessary for me to look after its interests, so that I can make money for you to spend."

"And why do you go to the lodge?"

"Because I carry a heavy insurance in the order, and it is needful for me to see that it is managed properly, so that if anything should happen to me, you will be certain to get the insurance."

"But—but the chamber of commerce doesn't help you to do anything for me, does it?"

"I have a number of investments, the value of which depends on the amount of business done in the city, and the chamber of commerce is for the purpose of keeping business in a good condition. Of course, I assist in looking after things, so that my income will be larger."

"And the really, truly reason for your being out so many evenings is that I may have more money?"

"This is the really, truly reason."

"Then you do love me as much as you used to?"

"Certainly."

"O, you dear, good, bad, cold, warm-hearted, old hubby, you! To think that I was the first cause for your being out so many evenings, and I didn't know it! I'm going to put my arms right around your neck and give you a dozen kisses. There, now! You do love me. I know you do. Oh, I am so happy!"

"It is clearly demonstrated, then, that we aren't happy?"

to ask you to explain your last sentence."

"Oh, well, I am in earnest, too, I assure you. As to my sentence, let me illustrate, and perhaps you will catch my meaning. As soon after our marriage as I began to go regularly to the meetings of the bank directors, you began to tell me that I did not need to go, and that I did it just to get rid of your society for the evening, and that I did not love you as I ought to, or I would not go. Now, I had never known you to prevaricate in the slightest degree, and of course I was bound to believe you. When I resumed my attendance at lodge, you

The Daily Press.

The daily press, as I look at it, is a wonderful detective. It can run down public opinion and report it marvelously. In this respect it has an ever-widening outlook. As a newsgatherer, its facilities perpetually astonish me. The weapon of publicity it often wields with undoubted power. But, when all is said, it is much more than a gigantic reporter? Does it really instruct and guide? Or does it simply furnish by the myriad page the stuff out of which the people construct their own independent judgment? I confess that newspapers seem to me more and more to exemplify Gladstone's definition of the orator—they receive from the public as mist what they give back as shower."—From Rollo Ogden's "The Making of Public Opinion" in the Century.

TREES WERE WELL NAMED.

Called "Royal" Palms Because of Their Uselessness.

Prof. Martin G. Brumbaugh, ex-commissioner of education in Porto Rico, is a democrat of the democrats, and therefore delights in this story:

"About a week after I arrived in Porto Rico," said he, "I took a trip along the beautiful military road from San Juan into the interior of the island. The tropical vegetation was luxuriant and my attention was drawn most particularly to some tall trees with slender stems and flowering stalks that grew along the road in the greatest profusion.

"'What kind of trees are those?' I asked an army man who accompanied me.

"'Those are royal palms.'

"'And why do you call them royal palms?'

"'Well, you see, all the rest of the trees down here are good for something, but as these just stand around and look pretty, and are otherwise absolutely useless, the title "royal" seems to fit 'em exactly.'"—New York Times.

The Original Skeptic.

"Jonah," said his wife, "you've been away three days and three nights. Give an account of yourself. Where have you been?"

"I've been on a whaling trip," said Jonah.

"Don't tell me any fish stories. I want the truth—the bitter truth," his wife said sternly.

"That's right, my dear. I was swallowed by a whale, and just have been released after serving a three days' sentence."

"I don't believe any such nonsense. Why should a whale swallow you? You don't look good enough to eat."

"I can't help that; it's a fact. If you had only been on hand with your X-rays you could have seen me in that fishy prison."

"Jonah, you weren't swallowed by a whale. You've been out swallowing things yourself, and you know it. That will do. No more lies, please."

And then Jonah stopped talking, because he knew that Mrs. J. wouldn't believe his tale, even if she afterward read it in the Bible.

He Knew They'd Fit.

"A friend of mine down south," said Congressman John Sharp Williams, "indulged in the luxury of a negro valet, or body servant, as we call them. This friend, in a riot of extravagance, one day bought a pair of loud-checked trousers. His valet envied them and wanted them. They did not seem to be coming his way fast enough and he threw some grease on them.

"'Charley,' said my friend, 'take these trousers and clean them. There's a grease spot on them.'

"Charley took the trousers, didn't do a thing to them, and brought them back in half a day. 'Deed, boss,' he said, 'I can't get that grease out.'

"'Did you scrub them well?'

"'Yes, sah.'

"'Did you try a hot iron and a piece of brown paper?'

"'Yes, sah.'

"'Did you try ammonia?'

"'No, sah, I ain't done tried 'em on me yet, but I knows they'll fit me.'"

But, if the naval vessels now in course of building in the world's shipyards were completed, the tonnage of the United States would be more than doubld, and she would occupy third place instead of fifth, with France sctill second, and with England's power only three times as great as ours.

The Czar as a Composer.

It has long been known that the czar possessed a very pretty musical gift, and his majesty has recently essayed his power as a composer of music to his own verses. In these verses the predominant note is one of religion. They extol the glories of the Orthodox church and its saints, and exalt the virtue of Christian self-sacrifice and renunciation of worldly goods and prosperity.

WOMEN WHO CARE FOR DOGS.

There Who Will Nurse Them Tenderly Are in Demand in England.

An advertisement recently printed in a London journal devoted to interests of the kennel brings to light the fact that women who will devote their attention to the nursing of dogs can find an abundance of employment. In answer to this advertisement, a hundred applicants have already come forward, but it is believed the tests to which they will be put will prove too severe for a majority of the number. "It is no easy matter," the London Mail explains, "to take the temperature of a toy spaniel when the little animal is in high fever, and the administration of medicine and distasteful diet to a fractious bloodhound involves some risk."

The nurses for the first six months will be required to wear blue overalls, surgical aprons and goloshes, but at the end of this probationary period they will be graduated into becoming blue serge dresses, with "D. P. L."—signifying Dogs' Protective League—worked in red letters on the collar. As the owners of the sick dogs that enjoy the trained nurse luxury are likely to be gentlemen of wealth, the dog nurses will probably not be denied the usual matrimonial opportunities.

The Parsimony of Wealth.

Upon the occasion of the presentation of an expensive loving cup a few nights ago to a merchant who was celebrating the semi-centennial anniversary of his entry into business the recipient gave to the donors, his employes, advice on how to accumulate wealth. Many of those present had been identified with the firm headed by the cup received upward of a quarter of a century.

Croesus dilated in extenso on the importance of observing frugality in small things, especially until the nucleus of a fortune had been established. He instanced as object lessons two points in his career. When incandescent mantels were introduced the magnate hesitated about adopting them in the counting room because of the expense involved. Only when it was demonstrated that economy could be effected would he apply them to gas jets. During the Spanish war he paid the help in cash to save the cost of the revenue stamp tax; whereas, formerly and since check payments were made.

Subaltern Fooled the Colonel.

I doubt if the pranks of the present day subaltern are as pluckish as those of his predecessors. I can remember a story that went the rounds some years ago of a daring junior of the Grenadier Guards who chaffed his colonel in a fashion that would not be tolerated to-day. But the colonel was not disposed to deal leniently with him. He kept unusually late or rather early hours, so one day an early parade was ordered unexpectedly, and five minutes before the hour the colonel rode past the culprit's quarters.

Cheerfully unconscious of impending doom, the latter leaned out of his bedroom window in the airy garments of sleep to say good morning. The colonel chuckled and rode on, but to his surprise at the stroke of time the subaltern stepped out on parade, fully dressed and all in order. He knew of the trap and had donned the looser garment over his uniform to take a rise out of his superior.—London Tattler.

Some Indians Are Masons.

Grand Secretary W. W. Perry of the Wisconsin grand lodge said that Masonry exists among the Indians.

"They have no lodges that I know of," said he, "and I don't know where they got their Masonry, but some of the Indians are good Masons.

"Many years ago they brought a shipload of slaves to New Orleans, and when one of them was put out on the block to be auctioned off he made the Masonic hailing sign. He was taken down from the block, examined and found to be a Mason.

"He was not sold into slavery, but a purse was raised by New Orleans Masons to purchase his freedom and he was sent back to Africa."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Soldiers Learning Languages.

The French minister of war proposes to encourage the young soldiers in the French army to study foreign languages by the formation of classes. It is thought well to teach German in the north and Spanish and Italian in the south. A class conducted by a lieutenant at Paris turns out about forty students a year proficient in German. The proposition is thought a good one, and is to be further developed.

Two Pictures.

I.

An old farmhouse with meadows wide,
And sweet with clover on each side;
A bright-eyed boy, who looks from out
The door with woodbine wreathed about,
And wishes his one thought all day:
"Oh! if I could but fly away
From this dull spot the world to see,
How happy, happy, happy,
How happy I should be."

II.

Amid the city's constant din,
A man who round the world has been,
Who, 'mid the tumult and the throng,
Is thinking, thinking all day long;
"Oh! could I only tread once more
The field path to the farmhouse door,
The old green meadow could I see,
How happy, happy happy,
How happy I should be."

—Universalist Leader.

Comrades.

A hearty, healthy body—and a soul!
What's a soul?
'Is it wings that I may fly
To some shining, distant sky
As my goal?
No, the sweetening of the life as a whole,
That's a soul.
In each grave or trivial task,
In each joy the chum I'd ask
Is my soul.

HUMOR OF A BIG FIRE

On Sunday night a kind gentleman rang a doorbell uptown and informed the anxious mother within that her son would not be home that night, as he was helping his employers to keep off the fire. The mother got very excited.

"But he must come home," she cried; "tell him I say he must, understand me, he must come home."

"But, my dear lady," said the man soothingly, "he can't come home; every one of the employes are in exactly the same fix."

"Well, I don't care about anybody else; he must come home. Where is he now?"

"He's on the roof."

"On the roof," she screamed, "and he's got on the best clothes he owns."

"No, my dear madam, he hasn't on his best clothes," the man managed to edge in.

"What's he got on, then; hasn't he anything on?"

The man blushed.

"He has on a pair of overalls, a pair of rubber boots, and he is handling a hose like a fireman."

Then the man fled and the mother fell a-weeping.

A Heroine of Luckno...

An interesting figure in English history has passed away in the person of Lady Inglis, who died recently at London after a short illness.

Lady Julia Salina Inglis was the second daughter of the first Lord Chelmsford and was born in 1833.

She was the widow of the famous defender of the British residency at Lucknow, Sir John Eardley Wilmot Inglis, K. C. B., who died in 1882, and in memory of whose services in the Indian Mutiny she had been in receipt of a pension.

Lady Inglis herself went through the siege of Lucknow, and in addition to the terrors of the siege and the subsequent journey to the coast she was shipwrecked on the voyage home to England.

She afterward published the diary she kept during her eventful life in the besieged city, where her husband, then Brigadier Inglis, commanded the garrison throughout the eighty-seven days the place was invested.

She describes the entrance into the residency, on a day when glad shouts rang through the tortured city, of "a short, quiet looking, gray haired man, whom I knew at once was Gen. Havelock. He shook hands with me and said he feared that we had suf... great deal.

Dog Unearths Gold Mi...

The miners of the western states and territories tell some marvelous tales of how on occasions an unusually rich pay streak of the yellow metal is discovered, but none is more remarkable than that told by two men prospecting for miners in Nevada. Thinking that their dog was chasing a mountain lion or some other wild beast H. Roth and A. E. Montmorency, two miners from Nye county, Nevada, seized their guns and followed until they saw the dog come to a stop on the top of a great boulder. The animal was making no attempt to discover the lost trail, but was standing rigid on the rock, his nose pointing in the air. As soon as his masters arrived he wagged his tail, barked once or twice and disappeared in the underbrush.

Surprised at the behavior of the animal, the two men began an investigation and soon discovered that the rock was the outcropping of a rich ledge of ore, containing gold and silver. Measurements of the body were taken and it was learned that the mine was forty-two feet wide and extended in a visible line for over 2,250 feet. The dinner done, the lamp is lit,
And in its mellow glow we sit
And talk of matters, grave and gay,
That went to make another day.
Comes Little One, a book in hand,
With this request—nay, this command,
For who'd gainsay the little sprite?
"Please—will you read to me to-night?"

Read to you, Little One? Why, yes.
What shall it be to-night? You guess
You'd like to hear about the bears—
Their bowls of porridge, beds and chairs?
Well, that you shall. There, that tale's done!
And now—"You'd like another one?"
To-morrow evening, Curly Head;

ASK, AND YE SHALL RECEIVE.

O praying ones, who long have prayed,
And yet no answer heard,
Have he been sometimes half afraid
God might not keep His word?
Seems prayer to fall on deafened ears?
Does Heaven seem blind and dumb?
Is hope deferred? Believe! believe!
The answering time will come.

"Ask what ye will," His word is true,
His power is all divine;
Ye cannot test His love too far,
His uttermost is thine;
God does not mock believing prayer,
Ye shall not go unfed;
He gives no serpent for a fish,
Nor gives He stones for bread.

Thine inmost longings may be told,
The hopes that turned to shame,
The empty life, the thwarted plan,
The good that never came.
Say not, "The promise is not mine,
God did not hear me pray;
I prayed—I trusted fully—but
The grave hath barred the way."

God heard thee—He hath not forgot,
Faith shall at length prevail,
Yea, know thou, not the smallest jot
Of all His word can fail;
Oh, if ye truly have believed,
Not vain hath been thy prayer,
As God is true, thy hope shall come,
Some time—some way—somewhere.

THE FIRST CAUSE

By MILFORD W. FOSHAY.

"You don't love me! You know you don't love me, and that's the reason we aren't happy."

"It is clearly demonstrated, then, that we aren't happy?"

"Of course it is. You used to be with me every evening, and we read poetry and discussed literature, and—and—"

"Loved each other?"

"Yes; and that's exactly what people ought to do all their lives. You used to say that I was exceptionally well read, and that it was interesting to talk with me; but you haven't said so for ever so long, and it's just because you don't love me, and that's the very reason we aren't happy any more."

"It looks as if this conversation might become as interesting as any we ever had. I always like to give attention to first causes, and you seem to be getting down to the foundation of our relationship."

"Well, I think it is time to look for a first cause, and it's certainly not my fault if I am forced to the conclusion I have given."

"No; you are without fault, as I have told you very often. But, er—may I be permitted to inquire whose the fault is?"

"Yes; you have told me often enough that I am without fault, and that you loved me; but that's what you used to say. We have been married three months, and you haven't told me anything of the kind for—for weeks."

"Really, I haven't seen the occasion for it."

"Then you admit that my conclusion is correct?"

"Oh, I simply meant that I have proved my former assertions, and there is now less need for repeating them."

"Proved them?"

"Certainly."

"How?"

"By marrying you."

"And having done that gracious deed, there is now no occasion for further love?"

"If I have failed to say so, it is not because you have ceased to prompt me to."

"I?"

"Assuredly. I think you will admit that you have been making the statement to me in the most positive way, for at least six weeks, that I do not love you. Now, if it hasn't been to get me to agree with you, pray what has it been for?"

"And you will admit that I have had reason for saying so?"

"Excuse me, my dear (please notice the term), but I cannot admit that I have gone any further in this direction than you have insisted that I ought to go."

"Your term is perfectly correct, and it is also perfectly cold. I am sorry that I cannot be sufficiently conventional to return it, but I am in earnest, not ironic. I am very much mortified to think that I am so dense as to have to ask you to explain your last sentence."

"Oh, well, I am in earnest, too, I assure you. As to my sentence, let me illustrate, and perhaps you will catch my meaning. As soon after our marriage as I began to go regularly to the meetings of the bank directors, you began to tell me that I did not need to go, and that I did it just to get rid of your society for the evening, and that I did not love you as I ought to, or I would not go. Now, I had never known you to prevaricate in the slightest degree, and of course I was bound to believe you. When I resumed my attendance at lodge, you made a similar statement, just as positively, and again I was obliged to accept it. After these things the lectures at the chamber of commerce began. You reiterated your former assertions, and insisted that I went because I got more pleasure there than in your society. I was in duty bound to believe you, and so, you see, I have gone only as far in my sentiments as you have insisted on my going."

"And have I not been telling you the truth?"

"Really, my dear, you put it in a very embarrassing way! You surely

"Oh, you dear, good, bad, cold, warm-hearted, old hubby you!"

do not wish me to assert that I do not believe what you say?"

"Then may I ask you a few questions from a different standpoint?"

"With all my heart."

"For what do you go to the bank meetings?"

"Because I am a director, and it is necessary for me to look after its interests, so that I can make money for you to spend."

"And why do you go to the lodge?"

"Because I carry a heavy insurance in the order, and it is needful for me to see that it is managed properly, so that if anything should happen to me, you will be certain to get the insurance."

"But—but the chamber of commerce doesn't help you to do anything for me, does it?"

"I have a number of investments, the value of which depends on the amount of business done in the city, and the chamber of commerce is for the purpose of keeping business in a good condition. Of course, I assist in looking after things, so that my income will be larger."

"And the really, truly reason for your being out so many evenings is that I may have more money?"

"This is the really, truly reason."

"Then you do love me as much as you used to?"

"Certainly."

"O, you dear, good, bad, cold, warm-hearted, old hubby, you! To think that I was the first cause for your being out so many evenings, and I didn't know it! I'm going to put my arms right around your neck and give you a dozen kisses. There, now! You do love me. I know you do. Oh, I am so happy!"

The Czar as a Composer.

It has long been known that the czar possessed a very pretty musical gift, and his majesty has recently essayed his power as a composer of music to his own verses. In these verses the predominant note is one of religion. They extol the glories of the Orthodox church and its saints, and exalt the virtue of Christian self-sacrifice and renunciation of worldly goods and prosperity.

WOMEN WHO CARE FOR DOGS.

There Who Will Nurse Them Tenderly Are in Demand in England.

An advertisement recently printed in a London journal devoted to interests of the kennel brings to light the fact that women who will devote their attention to the nursing of dogs can find an abundance of employment. In answer to this advertisement, a hundred applicants have already come forward, but it is believed the tests to which they will be put will prove too severe for a majority of the number. "It is no easy matter," the London Mail explains, "to take the temperature of a toy spaniel when the little animal is in high fever, and the administration of medicine and distasteful diet to a fractious bloodhound involves some risk."

The nurses for the first six months will be required to wear blue overalls, surgical aprons and goloshes, but at the end of this probationary period they will be graduated into becoming blue serge dresses, with "D. P. L."—signifying Dogs' Protective League—worked in red letters on the collar. As the owners of the sick dogs that enjoy the trained nurse luxury are likely to be gentlemen of wealth, the dog nurses will probably not be denied the usual matrimonial opportunities.

The Parsimony of Wealth.

Upon the occasion of the presentation of an expensive loving cup a few nights ago to a merchant who was celebrating the semi-centennial anniversary of his entry into business the recipient gave to the donors, his employes, advice on how to accumulate wealth. Many of those present had been identified with the firm headed by the cup received upward of a quarter of a century.

Croesus dilated in extenso on the importance of observing frugality in small things, especially until the nucleus of a fortune had been established. He instanced as object lessons two points in his career. When incandescent mantels were introduced the magnate hesitated about adopting them in the counting room because of the expense involved. Only when it was demonstrated that economy could be effected would he apply them to gas jets. During the Spanish war he paid the help in cash to save the cost of the revenue stamp tax; whereas, formerly and since check payments were made.

Subaltern Fooled the Colonel.

I doubt if the pranks of the present day subaltern are as pluckish as those of his predecessors. I can remember a story that went the rounds some years ago of a daring junior of the Grenadier Guards who chaffed his colonel in a fashion that would not be tolerated to-day. But the colonel was not disposed to deal leniently with him. He kept unusually late or rather early hours, so one day an early parade was ordered unexpectedly, and five minutes before the hour the colonel rode past the culprit's quarters.

Cheerfully unconscious of impending doom, the latter leaned out of his bedroom window in the airy garments of sleep to say good morning. The colonel chuckled and rode on, but to his surprise at the stroke of time the subaltern stepped out on parade, fully dressed and all in order. He knew of the trap and had donned the looser garment over his uniform to take a rise out of his superior.—London Tattler.

Some Indians Are Masons.

Grand Secretary W. W. Perry of the Wisconsin grand lodge said that Masonry exists among the Indians.

"They have no lodges that I know of," said he, "and I don't know where they got their Masonry, but some of the Indians are good Masons.

"Many years ago they brought a shipload of slaves to New Orleans, and when one of them was put out on the block to be auctioned off he made the Masonic hailing sign. He was taken down from the block, examined and found to be a Mason.

"He was not sold into slavery, but a purse was raised by New Orleans Masons to purchase his freedom and he was sent back to Africa."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Soldiers Learning Languages.

The French minister of war proposes to encourage the young soldiers in the French army to study foreign languages by the formation of classes. It is thought well to teach German in the north and Spanish and Italian in the south. A class conducted by a lieutenant at Paris turns out about forty students a year proficient in German. The proposition is thought a good one, and is to be further developed.

Two Pictures.

I.

An old farmhouse with meadows wide,
And sweet with clover on each side;
A bright-eyed boy, who looks from out
The door with woodbine wreathed about,
And wishes his one thought all day:
"Oh! if I could but fly away
From this dull spot the world to see,
How happy, happy, happy,
How happy I should be."

II.

Amid the city's constant din,
A man who round the world has been,
Who, 'mid the tumult and the throng,
Is thinking, thinking all day long;
"Oh! could I only tread once more
The field path to the farmhouse door,
The old green meadow could I see,
How happy, happy happy,
How happy I should be."

—Universalist Leader.

Comrades.

A hearty, healthy body—and a soul!
What's a soul?
Is it wings that I may fly
To some shining, distant sky
As my goal?
No, the sweetening of the life as a whole,
That's a soul.
In each grave or trivial task,
In each joy the chum I'd ask
Is my soul.

HUMOR OF A BIG FIRE

On Sunday night a kind gentleman rang a doorbell uptown and informed the anxious mother within that her son would not be home that night, as he was helping his employers to keep off the fire. The mother got very excited.

"But he must come home," she cried; "tell him I say he must, understand me, he must come home."

"But, my dear lady," said the man soothingly, "he can't come home; every one of the employes are in exactly the same fix."

"Well, I don't care about anybody else; he must come home. Where is he now?"

"He's on the roof."

"On the roof," she screamed, "and he's got on the best clothes he owns."

"No, my dear madam, he hasn't on his best clothes," the man managed to edge in.

"What's he got on, then; hasn't he anything on?"

The man blushed.

"He has on a pair of overalls, a pair of rubber boots, and he is handling a hose like a fireman."

Then the man fled and the mother fell a-weeping.

A Heroine of Lucknow

An interesting figure in English history has passed away in the person of Lady Inglis, who died recently at London after a short illness.

Lady Julia Salina Inglis was the second daughter of the first Lord Chelmsford and was born in 1833.

She was the widow of the famous defender of the British residency at Lucknow, Sir John Eardley Wilmot Inglis, K. C. B., who died in 1882, and in memory of whose services in the Indian Mutiny she had been in receipt of a pension.

Lady Inglis herself went through the siege of Lucknow, and in addition to the terrors of the siege and the subsequent journey to the coast she was shipwrecked on the voyage home to England.

She afterward published the diary she kept during her eventful life in the besieged city, where her husband, then Brigadier Inglis, commanded the garrison throughout the eighty-seven days the place was invested.

She describes the entrance into the residency, on a day when glad shouts rang through the tortured city, of "a short, quiet looking, gray haired man, whom I knew at once was Gen. Havelock. He shook hands with me and said he feared that we had s... great deal.

Dog Unearths Gold Mine

The miners of the western states and territories tell some marvelous tales of how on occasions an unusually rich pay streak of the yellow metal is discovered, but none is more remarkable than that told by two men prospecting for miners in Nevada. Thinking that their dog was chasing a mountain lion or some other wild beast H. Roth and A. E. Montmorency, two miners from Nye county, Nevada, seized their guns and followed until they saw the dog come to a stop on the top of a great boulder. The animal was making no attempt to discover the lost trail, but was standing rigid on the rock, his nose pointing in the air. As soon as his masters arrived he wagged his tail, barked once or twice and disappeared in the underbrush.

Surprised at the behavior of the animal, the two men began an investigation and soon discovered that the rock was the outcropping of a rich ledge of ore, containing gold and silver. Measurements of the body were taken and it was learned that the mine was forty-two feet wide and extended in a visible line for over 2,250 feet. The Little One's Request

The dinner done, the lamp is lit,
And in its mellow glow we sit
And talk of matters, grave and gay,
That went to make another day.
Comes Little One, a book in hand,
With this request—nay, this command.
For who'd gainsay the little sprite?
"Please—will you read to me to-night?"

Read to you, Little One? Why, yes.
What shall it be to-night? You guess
You'd like to hear about the bears—
Their bowls of porridge, beds and chairs?
Well, that you shall. There, that tale's done!
And now—"You'd like another one?"
To-morrow evening, Curly Head;
It's "hasa-pass seven!". Off to bed!

So each night another story—
Wicked dwarfs and giants gory,
Dragons fierce and princes daring,
Forth to fame and fortune faring.

VOX.

JEMISON, ALA.
April 19th, 1904.

To the People of Chilton County.

In making my announcement this week subject to the action of the people's primary, July 26th, I wish to say a few words. In the first place I would hate to break up and move, if I were elected, and if I receive the nomination I have no doubt of election. The people of this county have stood close together and have elected their county officers for the past 20 years, and I can see no reason for a change. Where is there any great principle in the democratic party or their nominees to warrant the destruction of the people's organization? Just to elect their ticket, and if the people were to try and turn the county offices over to the democrats they would not know where to find them, for they don't know where they are at themselves. What do they offer you? Something that half of them can not take. Just look around you and see how many of the old line fellows that can't follow the democratic machine any further. Look at the result of their primary just held? Do their nominees represent a clean expression of their voters? Are they not the result of a trade and forced on the people by the machine? Do you believe that the nominees of the democrats represent the free expression of a majority of the democrats? No, there is not a sensible man in the county but what knows different. Now in entering this race I do it reluctantly (not that I have one doubt of election if I receive the nomination, for the people are now in better shape to elect their ticket than they have been for some time; the other party has the trouble now, we have been relieved), for I hate the idea of breaking up and moving. I do not expect to better my condition, but still I have some public pride, and I believe if you nominate me that I can administer the affairs of the office in a satisfactory manner to the people. If I receive the nomination I promise that I will make an active but honorable canvass for the election. In conclusion, I will say that I hope that every candidate will adhere to the sugestion of our county committee, and that there will be no "mud slinging" in the canvass for the different nominations. I assure whoever I may have as opponents that there will not be any "mud slinging" from me. I believe that this is one time the people ought to pick out the man to lead this fight, and when the people have acted we will all (successful or unsuccessful) put our shoulders to the wheel and elect the ticket.

Respectfully, L. H. REYNOLDS.

ENERGY.

I wish space for a few words about a speech that was made at Enterprise school house by S. M. Adams a short time ago. I feel it my duty as a citizen to criticise this talk of his, as the greater part of his hearers were men who had moved to this county since 1898. You will remember that L. H. Reynolds was elected to the legislature in 1898, virtually without opposition, and during this time S. M. Adams came over from Bibb county and asked the people of Chilton for the office of probate judge under the populist banner, and to use this great and learned (?) man's expression, "You that are informed know" that he met with great opposition, but Mr. Reynolds stumped the county in behalf of Adams and pleaded with the people to vote for him as a tried and true friend of the people. During this campaign Adams declared that there was no honor in the democrats. He said they were thieves and ballot box stuffers, and expressed fear that he (Adams) would be counted out by the democrats in Chilton (a "white man's county.") But now in 1904 Adams comes in the form of a democrat and tells us that this same Reynolds that helped him so much in 1898 "is illiterate, can't write politics correctly," just "a slick tongued duck seeking office." Why did not this Christian patriot, Adams, tell us in 1898 that Mr. Reynolds was illiterate and ignorant and not competent to fill office? Now, brethren, if Adams had one spark of that Christian love in his heart that he is always so ready to talk about, why is he telling us about Reynolds now? Again, Adams made the point "that it had been the custom of the people of Chilton to come together in any way to beat the democrats, but he knew every turn they would make and he would meet them," thereby trying to convey the idea that there had been fraudulent methods used by the populists of Chilton to beat the democrats. One of the newcomers in our county asked me if that was so, and I told him not to my knowledge, but as Adams had more opposition to him than any other man that got office, if there was ever any fraud used it must have been in behalf of Adams. Again, the judge said he was grateful to the men who voted for him in 1898, but in the next breath he cries out that he "did not promise these men he would forsake his honor" (?) and that he "had gone to the democratic party" trying to create the impression that there is no honor save in the democrats. Yes, grateful to you for your votes in 1898 that gave me office under the populist banner when I needed it, but since that time I am able to be the vice president of a bank and a democrat, and you must forsake the principles of 1898 and vote for me again. Then Lawyer Adams got up and says that the judge was right in 1898, and he is right in 1904. Now, what did he mean by that? That Adams was right in fearing the democrats would count him out in 1898? But, after all the taffy that the judge threw at his audience, there was no enthusiasm for him. Every one as silent as the grave.

Man's Love Versus Woman's

By Helen Oldfield

THERE be some subject of never-ending discussion, all the more so, it would seem, because they are such as can by no possibility be definitely decided one way or another. Among these unprofitable questions few are more thoroughly and constantly thrashed out than this: "Which loves best, a man or a woman?"

To this there would appear to be but one answer. Feeling cannot be measured excepting by results, and even this measure is but partial.

Some men love more deeply than other men, more devotedly than some women, and vice versa. It seems the fashion of late to insist upon analyzing feelings and emotions, to strive to grasp the impalpable, to discuss men and women as though they were of different species instead of one flesh, members, all, of the same family. Humanity is much the same, male and female. At one time so wholly selfish that it thinks only of its own gratification, of its own trials, vexations and suffering; at another it will welcome the greatest sacrifices with the spirit of a martyr, will yield everything and endure anything for the sake of the beloved. It is truthful, yet suspicious; timid, yet bold; humble, yet arrogant. One moment it is reproachful and complaining; at another it pours forth praises and tender protestations. Weeping one hour and smiling and singing the next, no one knows what to expect of it nor what phase it may assume. All this applies as well to men as to women, and none can determine upon which side the balance sways lowest.

The balance of proof of strong and irresistible affection, as evidenced by desperate deeds, such as murder and suicide, is largely upon the masculine side of the ledger. But against this fact may be charged another—namely, that a man may, if he be so disposed, shout his love from the housetops. People may consider him a fool and suspect him of lunacy, but, since love is not infrequently accounted madness, he will have no such measure of scorn and contumely meted out to him as is the portion of the woman who openly parades an unrequited attachment. Tradition and custom are inflexible in demanding that she shall be silent in such case and hide her wound, however painful. It is as instinctive with a woman as with a wounded deer to creep to cover when hurt through the heart.

No one can dispute the fact that men often love devotedly and suffer cruelly from the inconstancy or heartlessness of women, but fate, here as in many other things, is on their side and against the woman. A man has many resources, chief among which is his business, for hard work is a sovereign antidote for mental troubles. He can get away from the familiar places which speak constantly of his sorrow, can make himself a new life and create a new atmosphere; while the woman, poor soul, must usually "stay put," with no chance of escape from her ghosts nor ability to seek "fresh fields and pastures new."

Woman's faith and unfaith, man's unshaken truth and man's contemptible treachery, these are to-day, as they have been from the beginning, the never-failing theme of poet and romancer, the threads interwoven with all human history, the underlying currents of life and love. Some ships are wrecked and others arrive safely at their desired haven, and none can prophesy beforehand which shall be saved and which shall be lost.

Every Man's Ear Tells the Story of His Life

By Loeb Weintrob

THE ear, to have any significance at all, must have the outer rim corresponding to the skull. Whatever point on the skull is more eminent, that part of the ear corresponding to it should be the most in evidence, and you will note that whatever group of faculties predominates, to those faculties does the whole ear point.

The principal thing to notice is the convolution inside of the ear, whether the ear protrudes from the head or is close to the same, and whether it is large or small.

If the convolution is well in evidence, healthy in color, and running parallel to the rim, you will always find keen intelligence.

If the rim of the ear is thick, turning over on the inner convolution, it denotes a thick skull. The brain has not yet fully expanded.

If the ear is shapeless, cramped up, or large and flaccid, either flat without any prominence inside, or the shape of a clam shell, and empty without any convolution, no matter how large the head, it has no capacity. It is a failure.

There is an ear that is often mistaken for a sign of the harmonious temperament. The rim has no particular point in evidence more than another—almost round. The interior of the ear is pretty well developed, but not very prominent and defined—rather meaty, and of a healthy color, with fair-sized lobes. The people who have such ears are at all times satisfied with themselves, and most of the time with everybody else. They are neither mental nor physical giants, and less so in a spiritual direction; but they strike a good balance between the individual who is in a tremendous hurry to go to Heaven and the one who is running post-haste to the other place.

The ear that has the upper part developed (judging from the opening, which is the centre,) and narrow at the base, without any indication of a lobe, indicates activity and industry in the direction in which the ear points, but those who have this ear suffer from malnutrition.

An individual with an ear like this must be judicious in the selection of his foods. The theory that to eat a potful of peas and be able to lift an ox, and to eat the ox and not be able to lift the pot of peas, may not be as foolish as it sounds, in their case.

Be that as it may, the diet of peas will not suit the people with a fair-sized lobe on their ears and a fair width at the base. The larger the lower half of the ear the keener is the relish for the good things of mother earth. Whether they will share their substance with others depends on how large the upper half of the ear is.

The perfect ears are those that have fair and shapely development, with a broad and prominent convolution running parallel to a fine rim all the way around, a fair-sized lobe and the cavity in the centre not obstructed. The whole ear is not too low toward the jawbone, nor too high up, of a good color and when viewed in profile with an inclination to point upward and forward.

When looked at from the front the inner convolution will be the most in evidence, with little of the points and lobe protruding. I do not expect you will know this ear at once when you see it, so I will tell its works, and you will know it thereby.

The owner of this ear will shake the whole world to establish justice, and a little harder for mercy. He will shake the trees of the celestial kingdom for the heavenly fruit, as well as the terrestrial, and more. He will move both places in order that all of the human family may eat their full share.—New York Journal.

If the Wrong Man Proposes

By Winifred Hall

HOW does a girl feel when the wrong man proposes to her? Ask the woman who knew herself what love meant, and then question the girl who had yet to be touched by Cupid's arrow. To this latter it is merely a trying time, with a certain romantic charm about it.

Probably it is a first proposal—that something that comes into the life of nearly every woman. It is enjoyed. Unexpected or not, there is a flavor distinctly novel and interesting about the experience.

It is amusing, too, she thinks, and she lingers over the thought of it until she realizes that she has to give an answer, and that, of course, she cannot think seriously of the proposal; she must say "No." This is not easy; the lover is persistent, begs her to think it over, to let him try again in a little while.

It is difficult to make the ardent lover realize that his love can never be reciprocated, and whether the man hovers around her or goes right away the girl has a trying time keeping the unpleasant part out of her mind. If she has tasted of love herself, the proposal from the wrong man means untold misery to a girl.

Perhaps it happens her own love is unreturned, unsought, unknown, and yet she sees a love equalling her own being poured out at her feet, and knows that by no will of hers can she take it up, caress it, and treasure it as all true love should be treasured.

She has to wound the man who would give his life for her, to gently crush out all the sweetness of his high hopes. To fail to do it completely would spell prolonged trouble to them both. Her task is difficult, but with an infinite tact born of pity, she will do what she knows to be right; she will send this lover away, and try hard to overcome the sadness that is left behind for her to battle with.—New York News.

Reminiscences of Fresh and Salt Water Fishing.

By W F. SIBLEY.

Born of New England parents and living in Western Massachusetts until my seventeenth year, little or no opportunity presented itself for salt water fishing.

If results may be considered as being proficient in fresh water fishing, I certainly had some claim, as a boy, to knowing a thing or two about catching trout, as the strings of fish I brought home on every occasion when I could absent myself from school clearly demonstrated.

My outfit in those days, as I remember it, consisted of a grass laid line, possibly half a dozen trout hooks and an alder pole cut for each occasion at the brook's side. The proud distinction of owning a creel was something I looked forward to, but a small birch crotch stick served the purpose to string my fish on, and I don't know but full as well.

But if I am also to tell you something of my salt water experiences during the past fifteen or eighteen years, a single incident of the boyhood's exploits trout fishing will suffice to carry out my statement as to results.

About five miles from my home there was a small stream or brook known as the North Branch. It had its source in a swamp, wound in and out of the woods, brush and meadow land at the foot of rising ground and hills, until at last, after a five-mile course, terminated in a large lake.

It made little or no difference to me about fishing up or down stream, but as it was a shorter cut to the head of the brook, I usually commenced there, the brook at that point being scarcely a yard wide, running through meadow land.

I was always pretty sure of getting a fair number of trout in this meadow, as it was not fished so much as lower down stream, and a good start always gave me encouragement for the rest of the brook.

The day was overcast, and early I was on my way to the brook, striking in, as I usually did, at the source. My success was beyond expectation until I reached a small strip of woods, a mile or more down the brook, which terminated in a mass of brush and undergrowth. It was not until I discovered fresh boot prints along the soft bank, that it dawned upon me that, early as I was, there was some one ahead of me on the brook. However, I fished on until I came to the open meadow. There was conviction enough of my indifferent success—a man ahead, as I had thought, very carefully fishing that strip of meadow brook.

Disappointed, I seated myself on a large stone, under cover, to watch him for the time being and to think how I could get ahead. Yet I disliked to give up that strip of meadow brook, as there were always large trout there. I could plainly see that the man ahead was having fair success, as trout after trout found its way to his creel.

Suddenly he stopped. I guessed the cause, knowing almost every pool in the brook, and judged he was near a deep hole where dwelt a trout that had fooled me once or twice that season. To make a long story short, that man fished for that trout a full half hour at intervals, but gave it up, proceeded down stream and was soon lost to view. In turn I took up the ground he had fished over, picking up several good sized fish on my way to the scene of the fisherman's defeat. I got near enough to the pool to see a large trout sunning himself in the shallow water, and he saw me, I am quite sure. I was in no hurry to try conclusions, so, seating myself in the grass some distance from the brook, I baited my hook with fresh worms, winding the line lightly on the end of my alder until only a couple of feet hung from the end of my pole. Even then I waited some fifteen minutes before approaching the brook, finally doing so on hands and knees, until within casting distance, when I lay flat on my belly in the grass. An overhand cast, the bait strikes the centre of the pool, is seized almost immediately by a monster trout; a dextrous movement of the boy at the other end of the pole, and the biggest trout I ever took from that stream was writhing on the bank before me. It was a thrilling moment in more ways than one, and I was about the happiest youngster imaginable. There were some twenty odd trout on that birch string, and with this beauty to top out my catch, the day's fishing was over for me.

Curious to know how my rival on the brook was getting on, I took a cross cut to head him off, coming upon him just emerging from a clump of alders. Scarcely had we passed the time of day, before his eyes were riveted on the string of fish I carried, a volley of questions assailing me as to where I caught them, and particularly the big one at the top of my string.

Boylike, to his seeming chagrin, I related what I saw him try to do and what I had accomplished.

My story being told, the fish was put on the smallest scales I had ever seen at that time, produced by my chance acquaintance from one of the numerous pockets of a queer coat, and touched the fourteen ounce notch.

Be it to the man's credit there was no money offers for my big trout, but in lieu of a ride to the city, which, in our conversation, I had learned was his destination, and to a hungry boy the nice luncheon he gave me, the fish found its way to his creel without the asking.

Now comes the fairy part of the story, assuming that you have no reason to doubt the truth of what I have related. It was not long after this eventful day that a fine three-joint trout rod was delivered by express at my home, no doubt from my appreciative fisherman, but I never knew, as no card or letter accompanied it.

In 1876 the scene shifts from New England to New York City to engage in commercial life. Few were the holidays or outings accorded, as it was by constant application that I held my position for the next five years.

Sometimes in my Sunday strolls I had wandered to the docks in New York and there saw the gamins, yes, even men, fishing for porgies and having fair success. On such occasions my palms always itched to get hold of one of those lines the boys were using, but I never betrayed my feelings to them in the matter.

Next came the fishing bank excursions, but the boats were so crowded on Sunday, my only day, that after one or two successful trips I gave it up.

Time drew on apace. I had more liberty and money. A vacation of two weeks was also allowed me, which I divided up into day outings weekly, extending my vacation over the months of June, July and August.

From some companions I learned that Giffords, situated about midway of Staten Island, on that part of Raritan Bay known as the Great Kills, was a good place to locate if I was looking for salt water fishing. Accepting their advice, rods, reels and the necessary outfit was provided, a few lessons given me by the veteran, Mr. Fitzgerald, more popular as "Uncle Mike" among the fishermen, and I was fairly started on my salt water career.

Weakfish, bass and bluefish were the only game fish considered worth taking by "Uncle Mike," but I was satisfied at first to take almost anything that took my bait, and delighted if I caught a dozen weakfish. Later on I went in for number more than pleasure, for there was most always an empty basket waiting to be filled on my return.

Fish were plenty in those days and even up to the middle eighties. It was considered no great feat to take thirty or forty weakfish weighing from two and a half to four pounds each during a tide, but I honestly believe there were some men who either did not fish, or did not know how, for notwithstanding the fact above stated, they invariably came ashore "skunked."

The first stripped bass I ever took weighed about three pounds and was a disappointment from the fact that I was so intent upon catching weakfish, and weakfish only, that I am quite of the mind that I should have thrown it overboard had not a fishing companion prevailed upon me to keep it.

Later on, when I used lighter tackle and fished more for the sport than number, I could not hook on to a bass often enough.

It was in September, 1888, I think, that I surprised the natives and myself in taking from the Kills an eighteen pound bass after a half hour's struggle. This was an unheard of catch in those days, it having been some ten years previous that a bass of that weight had been taken in the Kills, so I went to the New York Sun office for a mention only of my catch, but the column article which the reporter devoted to it was so graphically written that it was widely copied by the newspapers and other publications like the Angler, and Forest and Stream. Right here allow me to tell you that Brother Harris, of the Angler, questioned the weight of the fish, or the claim made for me by the Sun, but I did not mind that. The fish weighed eighteen pounds then, and when I tell the story of its capture, etc., etc., to-day, that is what it weighed, never more or less.

Keeping everlastingly at it brings success, we are told. Well, I have been persevering enough in my efforts each four months of every season, but from a score of some 900 odd fish taken during the season of 1890, I have, with just as constant application and more hours, only been able to produce a score of 117 in 1903.

Seven years ago I fished from a Whitehall boat; since that time from a gasoline launch. Possibly it may make a difference, but I think not.

I have become so infatuated with salt water fishing that I do not think I could ever return to the now posted brooks of New England, seek of the owner a permit to catch a two-ounce trout, or do I think the streams of Nova Scotia, that held me captive for so many seasons, would to-day induce me to give up the prospect even of catching a few large weakfish, bass or bluefish.

The Paschal Candle.

In every Catholic church all over the world a "paschal" or Easter candle, made of purest wax, is blessed on Holy Saturday, the day before Easter, by a deacon, who fixes at its base five grains of incense in memory of the five wounds of Jesus and the precious spices wherewith He was anointed in the tomb.

From Easter until Whitsunday the paschal candle burns on the gospel side of the altar during mass and vespers, as a symbol that Christ, the light of the world, has risen from the grave.

Anciently the torch was a huge affair. One used at Canterbury, England, in 1457, weighed three hundred pounds. Another, at Norwich, was so high that it was lighted by means of an orifice in the roof of the choir.

PEARLS OF THOUGHT.

When life's all love, 'tis life; aught else 'tis naught.—Lanier.

Faith is the hand wherewith we take everlasting life.—Latimer.

Heroism is simple, and yet it is rare. Every one who does the best he can do is a hero.—Josh Billings.

And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient.—2 Timothy 2:24.

Never fear to bring the sublimest motive to the smallest duty, and the most infinite comfort to the smallest trouble.—Phillips Brooks.

"Do something every day that will allow you to feel at night that you have given some of your time and strength to the definite service of the Lord."

Because charity begins at home is no reason that it should be restricted to that limited sphere; of all the virtues she is the one who needs to have the most constant exercise."

It is worth realizing that there is no thing as commonplace life or uninteresting circumstances. They are so only because we do not see into them, do not know them.—Selected.

"Affectation in dress implies a flaw in the understanding. A faithful friend is the medicine of life. Affectation of wisdom often prevents our becoming wise. A fool's heart is ever dancing on his lips. A false-grounded hope is but a waking man's dream."

WILD LIFE OBSERVATION.

Most of Us Sees More or Less Than the Truth.

Good observers are probably about as rare as good poets. Accurate seeing—an eye that takes in the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—how rare indeed it is! So few persons know or can tell exactly what they see; so few persons can draw a right inference from an observed fact; so few persons can keep from reading their own thoughts and preconceptions into what they see; only a person with the scientific habit of mind can be trusted to report things as they are. Most of us, in observing the wild life about us, see less when our minds are dull, or preoccupied, or blunted by want of interest. This is true of most country people. We see more when we read the lives of the wild creatures about us in the light of our human experience and impute to the birds and beasts human motives and methods. This is too often true of the eager city man or woman who sallies out into the country to study nature.

The tendency to sentimentalize nature has, in our time, largely taken the place of the old tendency to demonize and spiritize it. It is anthropomorphism in another form, less fraught with evil to us, but equally in the way of a clear understanding of the life about us.—From John Burroughs' "On Humanizing the Animals" in the Century.

Clerks Please Note.

A good story is told of a very prominent man who lived in Newcastle 40 years ago, and who at that time owned wealth to a large amount:

He was very ignorant in all that books taught, but his learning was more like wisdom, and he knew what tree would make shingles by looking at it.

He had at the time of our story just completed a splendid new warehouse, and wanting a suitable clerk to take charge of it he advertised for one. Early next morning a candidate for the position presented himself, a rather flashy young man in appearance and the following conversation occurred:

"Young man, when you make a mistake in any of your books how do you correct it?"

The young man explained in a very profuse manner how he should proceed to make it all right.

"A very good way, no doubt, to do it," replied the old gentleman, "but I shan't want you."

Very soon another aspirant put in an appearance. A similar question was asked him, and in a long and eloquent manner he pointed out the remedy in all such cases. All the reply was:

"Young man, I shan't want you."

Several others dropped in during the day and to each one the same question was put, and they all had some smart way of covering up errors in their books.

Just at the close of the day a plainly dressed man, with a bright eye and a brisk step, called for the situation.

"Take a seat, sir," said the old gentleman. "I want to ask you just one question. When you make a false entry in your books, how do you go to work to correct it?"

Turning upon his questioner, a cold, sharp look, the young man replied:

"I don't make that kind of a mistake, sir."

"Ah, my dear sir, you are just the man I have been looking for all day," and a few moments after the man who corrected his blunders by not making them was installed in the office.

The Pastor and the People.

Take the whole range of activity and amusement which has, within a generation, swept into the various denominations under the name of "the institutional church." In response to whose initiative did that present itself? Pastors were, as a rule, averse to it, or dreaded it—often opposed it openly. But it entered church life resistlessly. Imagine a clergyman now trying to put a veto upon the manifold social and secular work that shelters itself today in the churches. He would find that there is a power not himself that makes for it. That is only an instance of the tides that rise and fall about him without his volition.—Rollo Ogden in Century Magazine.

Household Matters

The "Little Foxes."

Remember, it is the little foxes that spoil the vines, and, in like manner it is the little rips, rents and tears, missing hooks, torn off buttons, ragged buttonholes and neglected work that spoil the usefulness of our garments. These little neglects bring to us, also, the name of being untidy, badly dressed and slovenly. Nowhere in the matter of one's garments are these little offenses against neatness apparent, but the careless coiffure, the hair, the dingy neckwear, the broken shoestring, the wrinkled hose, the uneven hanging of the skirt, the general tossed-on appearance of everything we wear at our work. One should not go slipshod and untidy six days of the week without some rag being ripped from the garment of helpfulness after us on the seventh. Holy untidiness cannot be hidden. Perhaps it is a rent or rip in the clothing that is much easier to mend at once than to wait until a patch is required; perhaps a stitch would have sufficed to set in time. A rip or a rent never grows less, if left to itself; no button ever sews itself, attaches itself to a garment. To put away a garment needing some small repairs, is surely laying up trouble for another day, when, in an emergency, we have imperative need to wear. A few stitches in time may save us hours' of work at a time when we can ill spare it, and in many cases the garment is rendered useless by additional mishaps because of our neglect.—The Commoner.

Washing Ribbons.

Women who study the subject of looking their best bestow the greatest amount of attention on their ribbons—wear, and keep their ribbons dainty and fresh-looking by frequent washings and pressings. Many use gasoline for cleaning ribbons, and it does it readily, but is apt to leave a yellow tinge in delicate colored ribbons. Now there is nothing better for cleaning ribbons than a suds of soft water and castile soap. Wash the ribbon in this, but do not rub soap directly on the fabric, and after washing, rinse in two or three times in clear water. Ribbons must never be rubbed, and the best way to clean it is to place each piece on a smooth table and use a piece of the ribbon for a sponge, unless the ribbon is very stiff, when a small brush can be used to better advantage. The last rinse water should contain a little salt for delicate shades of pink. Pale lilac and violet may be set with vinegar, using a small lump to a quart of rain water, and vinegar is good for the different shades of green. The best way to dry short lengths of ribbon is to press them smoothly over a sleeve board or window pane, and long pieces can be dried by stretching as smoothly as possible and laying them on a clean board. Even if the ribbon has not been wrinkled in the cleaning process, the pieces will dry perfectly smooth and will require no ironing. Black ribbon can be freshened by sponging with well strained cold coffee or with equal parts of alcohol and water, and if any stiffness is desired, rub the ribbon with thin gum arabic water and leave it to dry. Narrow ribbons may be kept free from wrinkles by smoothing them out each time after wearing and winding them on a spool or roller, and there is nothing better for this than a small toy rolling pin, which can be bought for a trifle.—Detroit Free Press.

RECIPES

Scotch Scones—To one quart of flour add four level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; cut into this one cup of lard and one-fourth cup of butter; add one teaspoon of sugar, one egg until light and add two cupfuls of milk; toss this on a floured board; roll out half an inch thick, in three inch square pieces; fold over to form three corner pieces; bake on hot griddle very slowly.

Vanilla Cream Stick—Boil two pounds of granulated sugar with one pint of water, let it dissolve over a cool part of the range, then add a large tablespoonful of vinegar and a teaspoonful of gum arabic dissolved in a little water. Boil until brittle, then remove from the fire and flavor with vanilla, peppermint or cinnamon, and work quickly. Rub the hands with sweet oil or butter, and pull the candy is white; twist it, or pull into long, thin strips before it off.

Baked Apple Pudding—Half a pound of pulp of apples, half a pound of sugar, four ounces of butter, juice of lemon, four eggs, puff paste. Pare, core and cut up the apples, put them in a stewpan with only sufficient water to prevent them from burning, and let them stew slowly until reduced to a pulp. Weigh the pulp and add to it half pound add half a pound of sugar, the grated rind of a lemon and the well-beaten eggs. Beat the ingredients well together, then add the butter and stir it in with the other ingredients. Put a border of paste round a pie dish, pour in the mixture and bake for rather more than half an hour.

, capable of Infinite thoughts, has dens of Gethsemane. Mind wears the crown of thorns in the very hour of baby achievement.

It is said that Ole Bull ascended the rough mountains of Norway, there he saw the majestic storm, heard the weird wail of the pines, listened to the roar of the cascades, and from these he caught those rapturous tones with which he charmed the heart of the world. Thus it is because men have climbed some craggy Matterhorn of chilling adversity, descended into some vale of shadows, lingered by some wave battered cliff; because they have braved opposition and hardship; because they have had passages in their lives where they have experienced the extremities of anguish and donation that they have become heralds of truth, have marked the advance of civilization, have been high priests of science, refiners of society, reformers of faith.

What is it that places this premium on grief? Why are the great doers also the great suffers? What is it that vitalizes pain, glorifies sorrow, and makes dead men's bones walk the earth clothed with tremendous influence? Let Moses answer from the mount of immeasurable glory: "I rejected a regal palace and the treasures of Egypt, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God that I might be a statesman for the oppressed, liberate a nation of slaves, endure to be vexed, tried and discouraged through forty weary years that at last I might stand illumined in the transfiguration of the Son of God." Let David answer with his wail of anguish: "O, my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" It was in the depth of his mourning that he sung those poems which have comforted the aching heart for ages. Let Joseph and Daniel answer as from a prison and a den they ascend the steps to royalty and fame. Let Savonarola answer loving the red hot iron of martyrdom more than the red hat of a cardinal. Let Bruno answer, let Gallileo, let Newton. Let Luther answer, and Wickliff and John Huss, and Wesley, and Francis Asbury. It is a noble company. But there are some whom reverses have ruined, whom afflictions have spoiled, who refuse to be sublimated by suffering or ennobled by calamity. I see yonder a Napoleon, of surpassing genius, the world's autocrat. He builds a throne of steel only to see it rust and crumble e'er he dies. From his pinnacle of power he falls and lies prostrate in defeat. His failure is ignominious because his spirit is ignoble. Upon the barren rock of St. Helena he wanders, a lion at bay, a soul cowed, a phoenix life in hopeless despair. By his side and towering above him rises Washington. He comes to the government when there is nothing to govern. He becomes commander of the American Army when it is small and defeated. Without navy, without money, without munitions, with traitors and Tories abundant, with generals conniving for position and grossly slandering his character, he meets and defeats the most thoroughly equipped and appointed government of the world; and then, notwithstanding the importunities of a people he has freed, he refuses a royal crown and passes into history—an embodiment of unselfish service.

Far in the past I see corrupt Nero lolling in his chariot of regal magnificence; dying by inches a loathsome death, a victim of the very luxury and extravagance in which he delights. Rolling over the Appian way on toward the city, he passes the Roman guard leading a prisoner to execution. Unto the prisoner the Emperor gives but a contemptuous glance. That is all—and yet not all. That captive commands the gaze of mankind. The name of Nero is a synonym for vice and shamelessness, while the name of Paul wields a mightier influence with each succeeding century. Paul still lives! Die he cannot! It is true that for this purpose Nero led him forth from prison. But see! Does he tremble? Does he shrink from his last enemy? Does this spiritual hero who fought with beasts, struggled with waves, was scarred by the lash, incarcerated, smitten, stoned and left for dead, does he who, when each stroke of the "tribulum" fell upon him, shouted, "None of these things move," does he now flinch?

The block is there. The blade is ready. The headsman speaks. "Prepare!" Where is the tremor in the aged form? With radiant brow and stately mien immortal he stands. With eye flashing in hope, with voice strong and confident, hear him declare, "I am now ready to be offered: the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith." Nero's axe cleaves his head and Paul, the hero, is crowned with the abundant life.

How has the ministry of the Christ been wrought out? In all the centuries of sorrow whose grief compares with that of Him who is at once the Author and Saviour of mortal man? With uncovered head how we before the sublime sufferer. Behold! Out of the anguish of the garden, out of the gloom of the tomb He of the riven side, He of the thorn crowned head, He of the broken heart walks down the ages elevating sorrow until it grows with a heavenly hallow, lifting the burden of woe from bruised and staggering humanity. This is He who exalts the lowly and raises toil to nobility, declaring that pain shall no longer be accursed, but that life shall be triumphant in adversity. Is this our life? Not vacillating, meagre, indolent, but sturdy, unflinching, enduring, overcoming, decisive—a triumphant life? This only is life with deathless possibilities, and he only who lives for the future catches the secret of the present and its trials. Look we bevond diurnal revolutions gauging the sweep of the planet in its course around the sun. Trials and tests, slanders and betrayals, desertion and opposition are for to-day; character for eternity. If man in the future expects to rest upon his knowledge of truth, he must find some trial to test it now. If character is to count forever, some sharp and merciless criticism must prove its integrity now.

There is no more pathetic figure in the world of to-day than the shilly-shally youth cuddling in the lap of wealth and shrinking from life's combat. We are not wooden dummies, but must be men of granite, against whom the leaping waves and mountainous surges shall beat only to recoil in impotent fury. The need of this hour is strong manhood. Perseverence is the characteristic that wins. Expect not to glide through easy seas, with silken sails tense in the breeze of favor. You must steer through narrow straits; here a whirlpool of doubt, there a hidden rock of skepticism, where adverse currents would strand the bark high on the barren beach of despair. You must sail by the Siren Isle of insinuating desire; must resist enchantments which lull to the sleep of voluptuous death; must feel the grip of eternal realities; must move on and out to the unfoldment of the soul with an iron determination to wrest victory out of defeat, and weave a garland of praise out of the failure of friends, the malice of enemies, the contempt of rivals and the hardship of life.

The Treasure of Kindness.

Guard within yourself that treasure, kindness. Know how to give without hesitation, how to lose without regret, how to acquire without meanness. Know how to replace in your heart by the happiness of those you love, the happiness that may be wanting in yourself.—F. W. Faber.

The Only Safe Road.

Accident does very little toward the production of any great result in life. Though sometimes what is called "a happy hit" may be made by a bold venture, the common highway of steady industry and application is the only safe road to travel.—Samuel Smiles.

POPULAR SCIENCE

New theories of the origin, formation and growth of the earth, and of thermal distribution, are advanced in a new book on geology, written by Professors Chamberlain and Salisbury, of the department of geology at the University of Chicago.

A yield of five cubic feet of acetylene gas from every pound of calcium carbide is guaranteed by manufacturers in the United States. In Germany acetylene gas is mixed with a gas of lower candle power, containing about twenty-five per cent. acetylene, and used in railway cars.

"The attainment of the North Pole," says Lieutenant Peary, "means the ability to so refine and perfect one's equipment, supplies and party as to be able to cover a distance of 500 miles each way without caches and without support from the country, and to cover this distance in a time limit of three, or, at most, three and one-half months."

The large anthropoids of Borneo and Sumatra are usually called orang outangs. This form it seems is not correct. Orang signifies man, and outang or utang debt, something owing. So that orang outang would simply mean, a man in debt. The correct Malay name is orang utan, or outan; this signifies the forest man in distinction to orang dusan or village (civilized) man.

The recent news of the sinking of the level of the Sea of Azof; threatening some of the commercial interests of Russia, is supplemented by a report that the Aral Sea and Lake Balkash, the first 1000 and the second nearly 2000 miles east of Azof, are rising, although up to 1891 the Aral Sea had for many years been sinking. Some geologists think these changes are due to slow upheavals and subsidences of the earth's crust.

Not long ago a fruit company that imports about 7,000,000 bunches of bananas a year, grew tired of the slow process of unloading by long lines of natives. The fruit was often bruised and the stems broken. A machine similar to the "carrier" of a thrashing machine was devised, one end of which reaches into the hold of the ship. It then runs upward a few feet above the deck and then down to the wharf. One man in a small tower runs the machine that carries the bananas easily into canvas pockets. With three hatches the machinery unloads, without bruising, 15,000 bunches an hour.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Meteorological Society in London the origin of the great dustfall which surprised Southern England in February, 1903, was explained in an elaborate paper by Dr. H. R. Mill and Mr. R. G. K. Lempfert. By a study of the weather-maps it was shown that dust, which formed a dense yellow haze, like a London fog, and lay thick on trees and roofs, originated on the northwest coast of Africa, and after riding out in a great cloud, far over the ocean, to the neighborhood of the Azores, turned to the northeast and was sprinkled over England. When swept up it resembled a fine reddish-yellow powder.

It has been known for some time that the rare gas, helium, emanates in very small quantities from the hot spring called the King's Bath, at Bath, England. Recently traces of radium are said to have been found in a deposit from another of the springs at Bath. The discovery by Sir William Ramsay that helium spontaneously forms a gaseous emanation given off by radium leads R. J. Strutt, who has examined the deposits of the Bath springs, to express the opinion that radium exists in considerable quantity deep in the earth beneath the springs, and that the helium gas found in the water originates from the deposit of radium beneath.

Chinese Geographical Names.

A few definitions of Chinese geographical prefixes and suffixes may be of service in elucidating the nomenclature of current war news. First, prefixes: Ta, as in Taku, means great and siao, as in Siao-Ping-Thou, means small. Pei or pe, nan, tung and si are, respectively, north, south, east and west. Thus, the Pei-Ho is the North River, etc. Shang and hai are upper and lower. Pai, hei and whang are white, black and yellow. Suffixes are more numerous and familiar. Kiang, ho, tchuan, ula, muren and tchu each and all mean river. Thus, Yalu Kiang and Liao Ho are simply Yalu River and Liao River. Shui, kou, thsuan, khi, gol, and ussa are unfamiliar terms, meaning a brook or small river. Hu, nor and omo mean lake, as in the well-known Lor Nor and Kosso Gol. Po, tse and tien mean a small lake or swamp, or a town situated near such a place. Hai means sea; thus, Whang-Hai is the Yellow Sea, Tung-Hai is the Eastern Sea and Nan-Hai is the Southern Sea. Tao, and sometimes shan, means island, but shan more often means a mountain range. Ling is a pass over a mountain range.—Boston Transcript.

Ventilation Through the Walls.

The fact is that considerable ventilation is capable of taking place and quite a large exchange of fresh for bad air is effected through the walls of buildings. Many a room that is notoriously "stuffy" could doubtless be made pleasant to live in by removing the solid paper or impervious coat of paint from the wall and substituting porous paper, or, better still, giving up paper altogether and using a distemper wash of pleasing tone.—Lancet.

USE OF RADIUM IN THE HOME.

How It Cured a Violent Husband of Wife-Beating Habit.

The experiments of scientists with radium are daily revealing fresh curative properties in that wonderful and precious mineral. Perhaps the most curious instance of its influence is that recorded below of the cure of a somnambulist who was addicted to wife beating.

This was described yesterday by Dr. A. Darier, the eminent oculist. In an interesting conversation which our Paris correspondent had with him, he mentioned some curious results which he had obtained in his work by experimenting with radium.

He recently treated a case of rodent ulcer of the orbit, which had destroyed the ocular globe and all the tissues. Although the patient had for two years suffered from pains so intolerable that during that period he had not enjoyed a single night's rest, his agony was completely and almost instantly ended by the introduction of radio-active powder.

External application of radium has shown that it is a powerful agent in calming neuralgic and rheumatismal pains, and in allaying the excruciating suffering caused by cancers which cannot be operated upon. On the other hand, Dr. Darier is bound to admit that he failed to obtain any definite result in so far as an improvement of the vision itself is concerned, and he does not regard as serious the talk of those who speak of restoring sight to the blind.

In one case treated by the doctor the woman, who had long suffered from epileptic fits and giddiness, has not had a single attack since radium of weak intensity was applied to the temple.

"Radium was also tried with success," said Dr. Darier, "on a male patient who suffered from strange somnambulistic attacks, during which he would get up, maltreat his wife and break everything within reach. Then he would leave the house and roam about the streets for two or three hours, at the end of which he would return home, go to bed and fall asleep again. So frequent did these violent fits become that his wife left him.

"He came to me and I treated him with radium applications for 12 days. Then he disappeared and I heard nothing more of him for about three months, when he and his wife came to tell me that the affliction from which he formerly suffered had gone and that they were living together again.

"I have since treated other nervous patients with radium, notably a lady who suffered from photophobia, or fear of the light. She was very neurasthenic and believed that she was ataxic. She could not walk without falling, and her eyes were so weak that she could not bear the light of day, and had to wear dark spectacles. I diagnosed her trouble as neurasthenia of a hysterical origin and I tried radium applications of a stronger kind than in the cases I have already mentioned, three hours per day on both temples. At the end of the third day she could bear the light without spectacles, and could read and do needlework.

"It may be that suggestion played an important part in her cure. I do not attempt to explain these successful results, and I do not give them as scientific facts upon which conclusions are based, but I think they are interesting as results obtained in actual practice.

"These are only a few of the cases in which I have found radium useful in curing neuralgic and rheumatic pains and headaches. Radium acts by inhibition and counteracts the influence of nervous affections."—London Mail.

The Poacher's Defense.

Mr. Joseph M. Sullivan, on the subject of vagabond wit and humor in the court room, writes in the Green Bag: An itinerant player, possessed of more wit than money, was a short time ago driven by that hard master, hunger, to commit the crime of poaching in the neighborhood of Birmingham, and was, unluckily, detected in the act and carried forthwith before a bench of magistrates, where the offense was fully proved. The knight of the buskin, however, being called on for his defence, astonished the learned justices by adapting Brutus' speech to the Romans on the death of Caesar to his case in the following manner:

"Britons, hungry men and epicures! Hear me for my cause, and be silent that you may hear; believe me for mine honor and have respect to mine honor, that you may believe; censure me in your wisdom and awake your senses that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of this hare, to him I say that a player's love for hare is no less than his. If, then, that friend demand why a player rose against a hare, this is my answer: Not that I loved hare less, but that I loved eating more. Had you rather this hare were living, and I had died starving, than that this hare were dead, that I might live, a jolly fellow? As this hare was pretty, I weep for him; as he was nimble, I rejoice at it; as he was plump, I honor him; but as he was eatable, I slew him." Here the gravity of the court was obliged to give way; prosecutors, spectators and all burst into laughter at the ready wit displayed by the "poor actor," and the information was withdrawn.

During 1903 the United States produced $234,500,000 worth of electrical apparatus and machines used in connection with electric plants and workings.

AGRICULTURAL.

Better Breeds.

Purchasing better breeds of poultry should be done now, so the cockrel will be in better condition for the service for early eggs. The early chicks are the ones that bring the highest prices. Get pure birds if you do have to pay some more for them. March is not too early to begin to save eggs for early hatches, and if the breeding stock has been purchased as indicated, the chances are ever so much better that the eggs are as they should be.

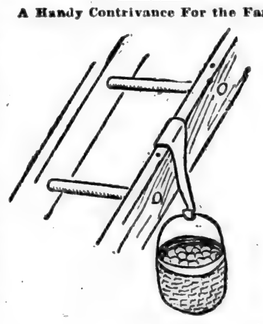
Our Wood Lots.

Remember that trees get ripe the same as wheat or other crops. Whenever trees are ready to cut they should be made into fire wood or lumber. But this does not mean the destruction of the forest. If the trees which have attained full growth and are fully matured are cut down, younger trees may remain. Then numerous young trees will spring up on every side, and the wood lot will be renewed for cutting in the years to come. I believe in retaining at least a small wood lot on every farm.

Pullets Are the Egg Producers.

Pullets that were hatched in 1903 should now be laying an egg every other day. While eggs are selling at twenty to twenty-five cents per dozen is the time to give particular attention to them. They must have warm quarters so they can rest at night and be ready for forming the egg and taking exercise in the day. Where the farmer has well cured clover, if it be cut into lengths of an inch and soaked and mixed with meal, the pullets fed on this will have red combs, and eggs will come in rapidly.

A Handy Contrivance For the Farm.



Crop Rotation and Fertility.

It has come to be well understood by most successful farmers that one of the things essential in farm management is crop rotation, if soil fertility is to be preserved. The nitrogen from the air deposited by the legume crops, and the humus resulting from growing them in rotation are two things put down in the plans of good farmers. This location should be adjusted to the character of the different soils, but it is essential for all of them. The following systems of rotation has been strongly recommended by one who has given much attention to the matter. Three years' rotation would be best suited to rich river bottom soils that are naturally adapted for the production of corn and easy to cultivate. The rotation might be as follows: Corn, corn, cowpeas or soy beans; corn, corn, cowpeas or soy beans; corn, winter wheat or barley, cowpeas or soy beans. The four years' rotation is suited to the same class of soil as the three years' rotation, but it has the advantage of being better suited to the medium class of soils, as the land can be kept in clover for two years. On soils of medium fertility the rotation might be about as follows: Wheat, clover, clover; corn; corn, corn, clover, clover.

The five years' rotation would be better suited to a still poorer class of soils than the four years' rotation. On this type of land cultivation is not desirable more than once within three or four years. The rotation might be winter wheat, grass, three years corn.

Bees and Fruit Growing.

The entomologist in his work meets with two immense groups of insects, those which are injurious and those which are beneficial, says Professor W. Newell. There is no need of discussing the former class; the various insects which destroy our fruit trees, garden and field crops, and infest stored products of various kinds are examples. As a matter of course this group has received the most attention. It is but natural that the attention of the farmer or fruit grower should be more forcibly attracted to the death of his trees or crops than to the constant yet quiet and unassuming work of insects which successfully hold in check many injurious species. Nevertheless, it is as much the duty of the entomologist to assist in the increase and distribution of beneficial insects as it is to devise means for controlling the injurious ones.

As a matter of convenience we may place the beneficial insects in two groups, those which are indirectly of benefit to mankind by their parasitic habits upon injurious species and those which are directly beneficial in that they create useful commercial products. The former groups may be illustrated by the various "lady-bird" beetles which destroy myriads of scale insects and plant lice, and by the parasitic Hymenoptera—for the most part very minute insects resembling bees or wasps—which live as parasites upon the adults, larvae or even eggs of destructive pests.

Of insects directly beneficial we may cite the silk worm, the cochineal insect and the honey bee. It is with the latter that we now have to deal. The relation of bees to fruit growing has not received much attention from the average orchardist. I am convinced, however, that it is a subject of much more importance and a discussion of this relationship will, I trust, be of some little interest. It seems to me very essential that we should arrive at a clear understanding of the relationship of these two industries, horticulture and apiculture, as they are of mutual benefit to each other.

Soil Preparation.

It has been demonstrated that when the harrow is used over growing wheat early in the spring the result is beneficial, and it is when the wheat is harrowed that the grass seed should be sown, if grass or clover are to follow a grain crop. It is important that the seeds be covered, and if the field be harrowed there will be less loss of seed and greater chances for a good stand. As an application of nitrate of soda on wheat in the spring pushes it forward very rapidly, it soon reaches sufficient height to shield the young grass from the extreme heat of the sun. The harrow may also be usually employed to mix fertilizer with the soil at the same time. The ground upon which grass seed is to be sown deserves more attention than the grain crop, for if the grass crop be intended as a permanent pasturage it must not be overlooked that weeds will spring up to compete with the grass, and for that reason the ground must be very clean. It is best, therefore, that grass should be seeded on land that was previously in corn, as the extra cultivation required for corn better prepares and cleans for the grass which is to follow.

Wire Gate.

The following is a description of a cheap and serviceable wire gate which will be found satisfactory, especially in places where a gate is not often used. It, of course, will not do for sheep or hogs, but will serve the purpose in cattle pastures where a three-wire fence is sufficient to confine stock. Cut three wires each about a foot longer than the distance between posts, and three short wires each six inches long. Form the short wires into loops and fasten to post (A,) (B, B, B,) with staples, the desired distance apart. Hook the long wires (C, C, C,) into the loops (B, B, B,) so as to form hinges. Shape three boards each four feet long, as illustrated in (D). Place a wire ratchet on each of these boards about six inches from the end (figure E, E, E,), attach the other ends of long wires to ratchets. Nail an inch board (figure G) four inches wide the height of post to post (F). Nail another board (H) on top of this overlapping the first an inch or two. Drive a stake (I) inside of wire fence three and one-half feet from post (F). Nail three pieces of board (J) each three feet long, on inside of post (F) and also inside of stake parallel to wires. Tighten up wires on ratchets (E, E, E,) sufficient so that when each of the boards (D, D, D,) are inserted into slot (H), and pushed back into position against (J) the wires will be taut. (Three rings, one for each pair of boards, slipped over the ends, hold wires in proper position. If one would prefer four wires instead of three, another one can be added.—Jas. Cotter, in The Epitomist.

Horse Talk.

Heavy-coated horses should be clipped now, just as the hair begins to shed.

Blanket warmly and make the skin active by a vigorous, thorough brushing from head to heels every day.

The health and thrift of the horses will be improved in this way.

Keep a stubby broom in the stable to brush all the mud and ice from the horses' legs. Then rub them dry with a wisp of straw.

Rheumatism and chapped heels result from carelessness in this way.

This is the time to train the colts and young horses.

Carefully accustom them to all sorts of things.

Teach them to hold the cart back with their hind quarters as well as the breeching. Let wheels run off, open umbrellas over their heads and under them.

Let straps and things hit their legs and heels.

Let them understand that they will not be hurt and they will submit to almost anything.

It is the low-voiced, sympathetic, self-controlled, firm person who should train colts.

It is not the man who breaks the colts, but the one who trains them who does the most good.

The heaviest feed should be given at night when the horses have time to digest it.

When horses are taxed to the limit of their endurance all grain should be ground and fed on moistened cut hay.

Some long hay should be put in their mangers for them to nibble at while they are resting.

The morning feed should be mostly grain and not bulky.

Water before feeding always.

Give a horse a chance to drink often and he will never take enough to injure himself.

For over-reaching—"forging"—lower the front foot, shorten the toe and bring the heel up and set the shoe well back.

Set the hind shoe ahead and cut down the heel. Most blacksmiths do the opposite.

Stay with your horse while he is being shod.

A FEW FACTS.

The registration list of this county contains about 2,650 names. From this number deduct say 650 who are disqualified by non-payment of poll tax, which would leave in round numbers 2,000 voters in Chilton. In the late democratic primary there were 44 candidates to be voted for on the state and county tickets. Twenty-one of this number made a personal canvass of months, while the campaign literature that was circulated through the mails was tremendous. Both causes together combined to call out voters if they had any leaning toward that party What is the result? In spite of all these different interests working to the one end only a little over 600 votes were cast, less than one-third of the qualified vote of the county. It is asserted that one-third of those who voted in the primary will be challenged in November if they attempt to vote. The democrats in their eagerness to get more than the corporal's guard of votes to which they are entitled, ignored the constitution and laws, paying no regard to them whatever, and still they prate about they "being the people." Rot! In Wilcox county they forged poll tax receipts. There is political honesty for you. The old saw, "Honor among thieves," don't go with the democratic organization. Some democrats are claiming a democratic victory in this county this fall, but they only excite pity that they are not safely lodged in an "idiot asylum" or a "home for chronic liars."

ALEX G. DAKE.

In this issue will be found the announcement of Alex G. Dake as a candidate for the probate judgeship. It seems scarcely necessary for us to introduce Brother Dake to the voters of this county, but will simply say that he has a fine record, which will compare favorably with that of any public officer of this or any other county. He served from 1888 to 1896 as justice of the peace in beat four, during which time he had hundreds of cases to come before him for adjudication, all of which were settled satisfactorily to the parties concerned, not over half a dozen being reversed by the upper courts. From 1896 to the present time he has filled the office of county treasurer and has brought the credit and honor of the county to the highest degree of efficiency, paying cash on presentation of all authenticated claims; his books are models of neatness and correctness; the yearly examiner appointed by law to examine his books and vouchers does not report a single error in the entire eight years of his service as treasurer. We understand he was one of the few who organized the people's party in Chilton, as it was at his request that J. C Manning came here from Shelby county for that purpose, at which time Representative Mastin and Sheriff Hayes and others stood outside the door, fearing to cast in their political fortunes with the new party until it had been tried. He has always voted the people's party and republican tickets, and though others may differ with him politically they are still his friends. If he should be nominated there is no question but what he will make a good officer and take proper care of the financial interests of our county.

GEO. W. EDWARDS.

In this UNION will be found the announcement of George W. Edwards as a candidate for tax assessor. He is a well known resident of this county, where he was born and raised, and is well liked by his neighbors in beat 6; four years ago they elected him justice of the peace by 117 out of a total of 132, and he has since filled that office with entire satisfaction to all

PROFESSOR J. W. MOORE,

Who announces in this week's UNION, was born and raised in Chilton county on a farm. He began teaching twenty years ago, when he was only 23 years of age, and has been in the educational harness ever since. He is now county superintendent and has held the office since 1892, with the exception of one term of two years. He was re-elected in 1902 by the largest vote polled for any of the nominees on our ticket, running ahead of all. He has conducted the affairs of his office so as to elicit the commendation of every state examiner and given general satisfaction to the schools under his care. Any school that has had Professor Moore for a teacher has been anxious to re-engage him. The schools of this county have materially prospered under Professor Moore's administration, thus showing that he is in full sympatny and accord with the cause of education

L. H. REYNOLDS.

Our readers will find in this issue the announcement of Hon. L. H. Reynolds, of Jemison, as a candidate for probate judge. Mr. Reynolds is too well known to the people of Chilton to need an introduction from us, but we wish to mention a few incidents of his career. He was raised in Chilton county on a farm in what is known as Dry Valley; with very little schooling, he took charge of his father's farm before he was eighteen years of age and married and started out in life without any capital, but he pushed to the front and made a success of farming. About ten years ago he went into the mercantile business, in which he made money, and now has a well established business. In entering the race for probate judge he has the support of a number of the opponents of organized democracy in this county, who say that he is the man to lead in this fight, and that he will make a good officer. Mr. Reynolds has strong political convictions, but is kind and courteous to all his constituents in his official capacity. He has represented our county in the legislature three regular sessions, one extra session and was a member of the last constitutional convention; while he was with the minority in those bodies he has been successful in getting local bills that he championed enacted into laws and has kept down those he opposed. While he has made some hard political fights against strong opposition, none of his opponents have ever attempted to assail his legislative record, not even two years ago when all the vials of regular and BASTARD democratic wrath were poured out on him. Leading democrats said there was no use in electing him representative, as he would be in the minority and could not do anything, but in this last session in spite of the democratic majority in the house and a democratic senator from this district it was necessary to petition Mr. Reynolds and ask his help to keep the corporate limits of Clanton from being changed, and though almost all the petitioners were democrats (and had tried unsuccessfully to work it over his head), he never asked whether they were republicans, populists or democrats, but only this, was the majority of the people interested in the petition, and being assured that such was the case he had the bill killed. No honest democrat will deny Mr. Reynolds' capability, and in case he should be nominated (which is equivalent to an election) Clanton would give a good citizen, one who would take an interest in schools and the welfare of the general public. He is one of the strongest men politically in our county, an entertaining, forcible speaker and a hustler in general, and has always been on the side of the PEOPLE. Mr. Reynolds' picture, with a short sketch of his life in this number is taken from the MONTGOMERY JOURNAL of February 17, 1903.

MICHIGAN MAYOR SAYS:

"I Know Peruna is a Fine Tonic For a Worn Out System."

Nelson Rice, of St. Joseph, Mich., knows of a large number of sick patients in his county who have been cured by Peruna.

Hon. Nelson Rice, Mayor of St. Joseph, Michigan, writes:

Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio:

Gentlemen:—I wish to congratulate you on the success of your efforts to win the confidence of the public in need of a reliable medicine. I know Peruna is a fine tonic for a worn out system and a specific in cases of catarrhal difficulties. You have a large number of grateful patrons in this country who have used Peruna and have been cured by it, and who praise it above all other medicines. Peruna has my heartiest good wishes."—Nelson Rice.

MARCH, APRIL, MAY.

Nerves, Poor Digestion, Impure Blood, Depressed Spirits.

Hon. Nelson: "I wish to congratulate y[ou] on the success of your efforts to win the confidence of the public in need of a re[liable] medicine.

"Peruna has just crossed the equator on [its] tour north. The real equator is [now] toward the north nearly eighteen [degrees] every day. With the return of the [sun] to the hobby ills peculiar to spring, [when] person the nerves are weak; an[imal] vim, digestion poor; with others [the blood] is out of order; and still others [are] depressed spirits and tired feeling.

All these things are especially true of those who have been suffering with catarrh in any form or la grippe. A course of Peruna is sure to correct all these conditions. It is an ideal spring medicine. Peruna does not irritate—it invigorates. It does not temporarily stimulate — it strengthens. It equalizes the circulation of the blood, tranquilizes the nervous system and regulates the bodily functions. Peruna, unlike so many spring medicines is not simply a physic or stimulant or nervine. It is a natural tonic and invigorator.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

The annual estimate of the nation's drink bill shows a total retail cost of alcoholic and other stimulating beverages for the year ending June 30, 1903, to have been $1,451,633,379; the annual average for the past five years, $1,293,903,358. This shows an expenditure for stimulants of $18.15 for each of the 80,672,000 inhabitants, or $90.75 per family of five. The average annual cost for five years was $16.17, or $80.85 for each family. It is estimated that one-fourth of all the people using alcoholic beverages, on which basis each consumer of strong drink expends $62.16 every year to gratify appetite. The per capita cost of coffee, tea and cocoa is $2.61 every year against $15.54 for acholocic drinks.

Charles Blair, the oldest hack driver in Chicago in point of years as well as service, died Friday. He was 81 years old. For nearly half a century he had been a fehu in Chicago. Blair was the first man in the world to drive a sixteen-horse team.

WOMEN BREAK DOWN.

Sometimes women drift into a condition of "half invalid." Continual languor—all tired out, run down, backache, nerves shattered, headache, terrible pain, no appetite, poor digestion. In nine cases out of ten it's because the kidneys fail to do their work of filtering the poisonous system waste from the blood. The kidneys are weak and need the strengthening help of Doan's Kidney Pills. Read how these pills repair a weakened physical condition when this condition is caused by sick kidneys.

Mrs. Sadie Mettles, of 394 W. 4th Ave., Columbus, Ohio, says: "Prior to the year 1898 I suffered considerably from backache, pain in the head, languor and depression and weakness of the action of the kidneys. The pain was always worse in the morning and I felt miserable. I was induced to procure a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and I began their use. They proved prompt and effective. They cured me, and there has been no return of the trouble since taking them. I owe all the credit to Doan's Kidney Pills."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Mettles will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

To Use a Gas Range.

If the gas range is used and properly treated it is the greatest economizer of strength, time and fuel. The important thing to bear in mind is that matches are cheaper than gas. Don't leave a burner lighted because you will need it in five or ten minutes. Turn it off as soon as you are through using it, then light it again when you are ready.

Don't light up and then go on to fill your kettle or get out your frying pan. Have all in readiness before you light the flame. Don't use the large burners when the smaller ones or the simmerer will do just as well. Turn the burners down so as to use only what gas is needed. See that the flame is blue, not red. The red flame is wasteful, indicating imperfect combustion. If any of the burner holes fill up, clean them out with a wire or remove and boil in a solution of strong soda and water.

This last treatment cannot be given however, with the old style two-piece or cementer burners. Don't light the oven more than four or seven minutes before using. Longer is waste. Plan the baking and broiling so as to do as much as possible at the same time with the same flame.

If you want to keep anything warm in the upper oven simply light the oven lighter, and let that burn without turning on the gas in the oven burners.

Kitchen Neglect.

Why should kitchens be always built at the back of the house, where the grass is trimmed down and slop pails accumulate? Why have a back of the house, anyway, instead of two fronts, equally respected? The writer recalls in Georgia a long brick house, with three front doors, one of them the kitchen door; you could look straight through the house in pleasant weather, because there were three other doors facing the ones that looked over the bay.

The rose that was trained over the drawing room ran along to the kitchen and peeped in at the dear old mammy who sang there very often. To balance things, the peach tree that was trained, English fashion, on the sunny wall of the kitchen, extended its pliant branches to the dining room grape vines, says the Cooking School Magazine.

Parsley grew in the violet borders, the cream smelled of roses, and the flavor of peach leaves that shamed the druggists' product lingered in the cake.

The mistress could sit in the drawing room and see the children coming home from school, or guests driving up from either direction, and, consequently, a fresh handkerchief, and collar were always ready. Dicey in the kitchen could always see them, too; the cake was on the plate and Zeke was in his dress-coat when the door-knocker rapped. And no one in that house knew the front or the back thereof.

In was a kindly and original old Pennsylvania German who built a great sunny kitchen where the company room is generally placed, because, he said, "mother" spent nearly all of her time in the kitchen, and she should have the best. He gained praise in his county, but no followers.

Recipes.

Yorkshire Pudding.—Beat two eggs until light colored and thick; add one pint of milk and one level teaspoonful of salt; pour half of this on one and one-half cupfuls of sifted flour, then add the remainder; beat well and pour into a roasting pan; drop over the top three tablespoonfuls of dripping, in small pieces; bake forty-five minutes; serve with roast beef or roast lamb.

Potatoes au Gratin.—Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan; when melted add two tablespoonfuls of flour; stir until smooth, then add one cup of thin cream and one cup of stock when boiling remove from the fire; add the yolks of two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, salt and a little cayenne; but a layer of sauce in a baking dish, then a layer of sliced potatoes, then more sauce; when four potatoes, cold boiled have been used, spread buttered crumbs over the top; brown in the oven.

Farina Jelly.—Soak one-half ounce of gelatine in one-half cupful of cold water; put one cupful of milk and three-fourths cup of sugar over the fire in an agate pan; stir until the sugar is dissolved; as soon as it boils add two tablespoonfuls of farina rubbed smooth in a little cold water, stirring a minute; cook until clear, add the gelatine and stir until dissolved; remove from the fire and when beginning to stiffen add one pint of whipped cream; turn into a mould and stand in a cool place; add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract when the farina is cooling.

Steamed Apple Pudding.—Make a biscuit crust with one pint of flour, two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one cupful of milk, half a teaspoon salt and two level tablespoonfuls of butter. Fill an agate pan two-thirds full with sliced apples, sprinkle over granulated sugar, a little grated nutmeg or grated lemon rind. Roll the dough on a floured board, wet the edge of the crust; place the pen on the edve of the crust; place the pan on the back of the range; cook for two hours. When ready to serve put a large platter over the pan, inverted. This will leave crust down and apples on top. Serve with lemon sauce.

Of the first seven presidents of the United States four were from Virginia, two of the same name from Massachusetts and one from Tennessee. All but one were 66 years old on leaving office, having served two terms, and one of those who served but one term would have been 66 years old at the end of another. Three of the seven died on the Fourth of July and two of them on the same day and year. Two of them were on the subcommittee of three that drafted the declaration of independence and these two died on the same day and year and on the anniversary of that declaration and just half a century after. The names of three of the seven ended in son, yet none of them transmitted his name to a son. The initials of two of the seven are the same, the initials of two others are the same and those of still two more the same. Of the first five only one had a son and that son was also among the first seven presidents.

No man who has filled the office of vice president has been elected to the highest place since Van Buren. Since Jackson's time only three presidents have been re-elected—Lincoln, Grant and McKinley—and only one, Grant, has served two full successive terms. Andrew Johnson and Theodore Roosevelt are the only two vice presidents who have succeeded re-elected presidents. If Mr. Roosevelt shall be elected this fall, he will be the first vice president to succeed to the first office after filling out the unexpired term of a dead president; he will be the first man ever elected by the republican party from east of the Alleghany mountains; and he will overturn a rule unbroken since 1836. If he shall be defeated he will become an ex-president—a younger man than General Grant was when he entered upon his duties as president, the youngest man ever elected to that office—at the age of forty-six years.

To be a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband should be a woman's constant study. Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Potts tell their stories for the benefit of all wives and mothers.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will make every mother well, strong, healthy and happy. I dragged through nine years of miserable existence, worn out with pain and weariness. I then noticed a statement of a woman troubled as I was, and the wonderful results she had had from your Vegetable Compound, and decided to try what it would do for me, and used it for three months. At the end of that time I was a different woman, the neighbors remarked it, and my husband fell in love with me all over again. It seemed like a new existence. I had been suffering with inflammation and falling of the womb, but your medicine cured that and built up my entire system, till I was indeed like a new woman.—Sincerely yours, MRS. CHAS. F. BROWN, 21 Cedar Terrace, Hot Springs, Ark., Vice President Mothers' Club."

Suffering women should not fail to profit by Mrs. Brown's experiences; just as surely as she was cured of the troubles enumerated in her letter, just so surely will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure other women who suffer from womb troubles, inflammation of the ovaries, kidney troubles, nervous excitability, and nervous prostration. Read the story of Mrs. Potts to all mothers:—

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—During the early part of my married life I was very delicate in health. I had two miscarriages, and both my husband and I felt very badly as we were anxious to have children. A neighbor who had been using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advised me to try it, and I decided to do so. I soon felt that my appetite was increasing, the headaches gradually decreased and finally disappeared, and my general health improved. I felt as if new blood coursed through my veins, the sluggish tired feeling disappeared, and I became strong and well.

Congressional Proceedings and Other Items

APRIL 15TH.

After a day of quiet routine proceedings the senate was addressed by Mr. Bailey on the question of civil service. The subject came up in connection with a paragraph in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Panama canal bill occupied the major part of the day and was passed without division.

The civil service appropriation bill was taken up and when the senate adjourned about half of it had been read.

The senate passed a joint resolution ordering the printing of 10,000 copies of the report of the anthracite coal strike commission.

The postoffice appropriation bill was referred to a conference committee.

A bill extending to the outlying possessions of the United States the law prohibiting the transmission by express of obscene literature from one state to the other was passed.

APRIL 16TH.

The entire day in the senate was given up to the consideration of a bill for the modification of the agreement of the Indians of the Devil's lake reservation in North Dakota for the sale of their lands. No decision was reached.

General routine work on the deficiency bill was completed by the house. Preceding this the District of Columbia was legislated for in several minor matters.

APRIL 18TH.

The senate continued consideration of the civil appropriation bill, but did not conclude it. A number of other bills were passed during the day, including measures ratifying agreements with the Indians of the Devils Lake, Rosebud and Flathead reservations, located respectively in North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana.

The sundry civil bill was laid before the senate and the amendment in relation to the appointment of forestry agents was agreed to. It was then laid aside and the bill for the modification of the agreement with the Indians of Devils Lake reservation in North Dakota was again taken up and passed after slight amendments.

The house passed the last of the supply bills of the government, the general deficiency appropriation measure, after a stormy session which lasted until 8:15 in the evening. The contest was a party one over the deficiency appropriation for pensions, which the democrats tried ineffectively to amend by incorporating as a law the recent executive age disability order.

Late in the afternoon Mr. Hitt offered his Chinese exclusion bill, introduced Saturday, as an amendment to the special deficiency bill and it was accepted without objection.

After the opening a bill was presented providing for the relief of the growers of long tobacco. It repeals the internal revenue tax to 6 cents a pound on leaf tobacco in the hand and all special taxes.

Physicians who attended Major Hugh C. Dennis, president of the Rialto Grain and Securities Company, whose sudden death ended his connection with the case in which Senator J. R. Burton, of Kansas, was recently convicted, state that Major Dennis' death resulted from continually brooding over the conviction and sentence of Senator Burton.

APRIL 19TH.

The question of additional accommodations in the way of office and committee rooms occupied the attention of the senate the greater part of the day. The subject arose in connection with the provisions in the sundry civil appropriation bill, one for an extension of the east front of the capitol building in accordance with sketches left by Architect Walters and the other for an outside senate office and committee building. Much variety of opinion was expressed and the question was still under consideration when the senate adjourned. Several minor bills were passed during the day.

Mr. Morgan presented a memorial from missionaries located in the Congo Free State praying for an investigation into the unsatisfactory condition of the natives and of American citizens in that country and in connection with a resolution referring the question on to the committee on foreign relations, with instructions to investigate and report to the senate. The resolution was agreed to.

The conference report on the army appropriation bill was agreed to, which passes the bill. The sundry civil bill was laid before the senate and its reading concluded.

After a debate extending through the entire session the house passed the bill providing for joint statehood of Oklahoma and of Arizona and New Mexico under the name of Arizona.

Consultation of States.

Governor Jennings of Florida addressed letters to governors of southern states and to the commercial organization of cities, asking them to appoint delegates to a convention to be held in Tampa. The purpose of the convention is to secure an interchange of ideas as to how the south may derive the greatest possible commercial condition which will prevail from the Panama canal.

A LONG WAR IN SIGHT

Russia Massing Half a Million Soldiers to Fight Japan.

SHE AIMS A CRUSHING BLOW

War Scheme of Vast Extent Being Planned—Armies and Fleets to Move Together With the Idea of Overwhelming the Foe With One Defeat—One Difficulty Removed.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—Exceptionally reliable information regarding the Russian military plans confirms the repeated announcements that these plans will not mature until late in the summer. They are of far greater magnitude than is generally believed abroad, and take into account all possible contingencies.

General Kuropatkin, remembering the experience of Russia, during her war with Turkey, when the Russian army of 30,000 placed in the field at the beginning had to be more than doubled, has insisted that the men and guns to be placed at his disposal shall cover the extreme limit required to settle the fate of the campaign.

The Russian plans are predicated upon Napoleon's dictum that "God fights on the side of the heaviest battalions," and they are being worked out and timed so as to apply to a superiority of numbers on land and sea simultaneously. The army is designed to attain the enormous total of half a million at the time scheduled for the reinforcement of Vice-Admiral Makaroff's fleet with the Baltic squadron.

The Seventeenth and Tenth Army corps, now drafting, are expected to reach Manchuria by the middle of June. The mobilization of four other corps, at least two of which will be from the Volga, will be announced by the middle of next month, and will start westward a month later, reaching their destination at the end of August.

Rear-Admiral Rojestvensky will hoist his flag as commander of the formidable Baltic squadron early in July and will sail immediately for Port Arthur with the following vessels: The battleships Slava, Borodino, Orel, Kniaz Souvaroff, Alexander III. and Osliabia, the latter now being en route here from Cherbourg; the cruisers Aurora, Dmitri Donskoi, Svietland, Almaz, Jemtchug and Izumrud, and the transports Kamtschatka and Ocean, each carrying 1000 tons of coal. The Temperley conveyers ordered in the United States are expected soon, and they will enable the squadron to coal at sea.

The last possible difficulty regarding the passage of the Suez Canal disappeared last week with the signing of the Anglo-French colonial treaty, by which Great Britain adheres to the convention of 1888 concerning the free passage of the canal.

AIMS CRUSHING BLOW.

Why Resistance is Not Made by Russians at the Yalu.

St. Petersburg.—A high military authority in conversation explains why General Kuropatkin's plan of campaign does not contemplate a heavy resistance to the Japanese advance at the Yalu, saying:

"Either defeat or victory in a battle there would be disadvantageous to us. If we lost we would have to fall back through a difficult country. If we won—and I say to you that Russian strategy is based on the idea of victory and not on that of defeat—success would be fruitless. We could not follow it up without exposing the army to too great risks.

"On account of the Japanese control of the sea if we pursued the enemy into the peninsula of Korea we would open both flanks to a possible attack from the rear. No; the Japanese must come on to a point in the interior, which with this end in view has been selected, where we can follow up a crushing defeat to the bitter end, with blow after blow and seal the fate of the campaign.

"Our plans on sea and land will converge at a time next summer when Vice-Admiral Makaroff's fleet will be relieved by the arrival of reinforcements. Then if successful on land we can clear the sea of the enemy, cut his communications and the Japanese in Korea and Manchuria will be at our mercy.

"The world must not be impatient. The prelude to this war is not yet finished."

It is understood here that as the result of General Kuropatkin's visit to Newchwang reinforcements of 100,000 men will be sent forward from Liao-Yang.

HEINZ FORCES ROUTED.

Carter Faction Triumphs in Montana State Convention.

Helena, Mont.—Delegates to the Chicago Republican National convention were selected here as follows: Congressman Joseph M. Dixon, ex-Senator Lee Mantle, James W. Freeman, ex-Senator Thomas H. Carter, Conrad Kohrs, John S. Edwards. All are members of the Carter—as distinguished from the Heinz ring.

Carter was selected as a delegate to the Chicago National convention by acclamation. The platform heartily endorses the administration of President Roosevelt, and the delegates are instructed to vote for his renomination.

REPUBLICANS IN SESSION

Empire State Convention Held in New York City.

The Delegates at Large to the National Convention Not Instructed But Directed to Work For Roosevelt.

New York City. — The Republican State Convention held in Carnegie Hall elected the following delegates at large and alternates to the Republican National Convention to be held in Chicago June 21:

Delegates at large: Thomas C. Platt, of Tioga; Chauncey M. Depew, of New York; Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., of Orange; Frank S. Black, of Rensselaer. Alternates at large: J. Sloat Fassett, of Chemung; Louis Stern, of New York; Erastus C. Knight, of Erie; Henry C. Brewster, of Monroe.

The convention did not instruct the delegates at large for President Roosevelt in the old fashioned manner of the Republican party since its organization fifty years ago. The convention platform sends the delegates at large to Chicago with this injunction, "we hereby direct that the delegates this day chosen use all honorable means to bring about his nomination for President at the National Convention to be held in June."

Long before the hour for assembling the delegates began to straggle in, and while waiting for the chairman to call the convention to order the band played lively airs.

The delegates were seated by counties, placards on tall sticks indicating the location of the different delegations. Albany and Schenectady counties had the front row centre, the best seats in the house. The Tioga delegation with Senator Platt at the head, sat on the fourth row at the left. Senator Platt had the aisle seat and was easily distinguished.

The Broome delegation, including Colonel George W. Dunn, touched elbows with the men from Tioga. Governor Odell, who shared the honors of the convention with Senator Platt, was with the Orange County men, some distance back on the centre aisle.

The smallest delegation was from Yates County, with four members. The largest was from New York County, 186 members. The New York men occupied a block of seats in the extreme rear. The Kings County delegation had the section just in front of New York.

At the head of the New York delegation was Charles H. Murray, president of the County Committee. Mr. Murray's first lieutenant in the organization, William Halpin, executive chairman of the committee, sat at the head of the delegation from the Ninth Assembly District.

At the close of rollcall Chairman Dunn nominated for temporary Chairman Senator Depew. He was unanimously elected, and James S. Sherman, Oneida, and John W. Dwight, of Tompkins, were appointed to escort him to the chair.

As Senator Depew began to speak the delegates settled themselves to listen. The first burst of applause came as early in the address he mentioned the name of the late Marcus A. Hanna. A few minutes later a like tribute was paid to the name of the late Speaker Thomas B. Reed.

Senator Depew first mentioned the name of President Roosevelt in connection with that of the late President McKinley. Hearty applause greeted the linking of the names. From that time on every mention of President Roosevelt's name was greeted with enthusiastic cheers.

SPAIN'S PREMIER STABBED.

Anarchist Attacks Him, But He is Not Wounded Severely.

Barcelona, Spain. — Premier Manra was attacked and wounded by a would-be assassin, armed with a dagger, while leaving the palace of the Council General.

A semi-official report of the occurrence says the assailant held concealed a kitchen knife, with which he stabbed the Premier, but the force of the blow was broken and its direction diverted by the heavy lace on the Minister's coat. It resulted in only a slight scratch under the sixth rib.

A doctor attached to King Alfonso's suite examined the Premier and prescribed a few hours' rest. His Majesty sent a messenger to inquire concerning the attack and as to the Prime Minister's condition.

Joaquin Miguel Artao, the assailant, was employed as a domestic. He is an Anarchist, and when arrested attempted suicide by dashing his head against the wall.

According to another account the Premier coolly drew the knife from his clothing and threw it on a seat in his carriage, after which he entered the palace, walked upstairs and telephoned to Minister of the Interior Guerra at Madrid, saying: "I have been stabbed. Don't be alarmed. The wound is not serious."

EXPLOSION ON MISSOURI

Five Officers and Over a Score of Seamen Killed on U. S. Battleship.

A TWELVE-INCH GUN BURSTS

Tragedy Occurred Off Pensacola Fla., While the Crew Were at Target Practice—Gun Was Being Loaded When the Wind Blew the Hot Gases Against a Second Charge.

Pensacola, Fla.—By the explosion of 2000 pounds of powder in the after twelve-inch turret and the handling room of the battleship Missouri, Captain William S. Cowles, brother-in-law of President Roosevelt, commanding, twenty-nine men were instantly killed and five injured. Five of the dead were officers of the battleship.

The Missouri was on the target range with the Texas and Brooklyn at practice when a charge of powder in the twelve-inch port gun ignited from gases, exploded, and, dropping below, ignited four charges of powder in the handling room, all of which also exploded.

Only one man of the entire turret and handling crew survives.

But for the prompt action of Captain Cowles in flooding the handling room and magazine with water one of the magazines would probably have exploded and the ship would have been destroyed.

According to a report after the first pointer of the after twelve-inch piece had fired his string and the second pointer had fired the third shot of his string, the charge ignited.

The fourth shot was being loaded, and from all indications the first half of the charge had been, and the second section was being rammed home, when gases from the shot previously fired or portions of the cloth cover ignited the powder. The breech was open and a dull thud gave notice of something unusual.

No loud report was made, but flames were seen to leap from every portion of the turret. A few seconds later another explosion, somewhat more fierce, occurred.

This was in the handling room below where 1600 pounds of powder, or four charges ready to be hoisted above, had ignited.

In less than five seconds after the first explosion two streams of water were being played into the rooms, and when volunteers were called for every man of the ship responded, eager to go into the turrets and rescue the crew.

Captain Cowles gave his commands, and but for his presence of mind and that of the officers of the ship, the Missouri would probably have gone down. The second explosion occurred near one of the magazines, and so hot was the fire that the brasswork of the magazines was melted.

Smoke and the fumes of the burned powder made it almost impossible to enter either the turret or handling room, but officers and men, with handkerchiefs over their faces, made efforts to rescue the men inside.

The twenty-five men of the turret were found lying in a heap. They had started for the exit when the first explosion occurred and had just reached there when the more terrible explosion in the handling room occurred which burned and strangled them to death.

The bodies were hardly recognizable, the flash of fire having burned clothing from the bodies of the men, while their flesh hung from them in shreds. The faces were mutilated by the flames only. Only one man was breathing when the turret crew was rescued and he died a moment after he reached the deck. The dead are:

W. C. Davidson, lieutenant, in charge of the twelve-inch turret; E. A. Weichert, ensign, of the cruiser Cleveland, gun umpire; W. E. T. Neumann, midshipman; J. P. V. Gridley, lieutenant, United States Marine Corps; Thomas Ward, Jr., lieutenant; J. K. Pederson, division officer; W. Bougard, boatswain's mate, second class; J. Bloxaputlan, ordinary seaman; Charles Rice, coxswain; J. C. Hardy, seaman; K. J. Kivlin, apprentice, second class; J. Gadris, seaman; N. Scherbauth, ordinary seaman; J. F. Rolands, ordinary seaman; H. B. Franks, electrician, second class; J. P. Starr, coxswain; J. C. Nunn, ordinary seaman; N. Soder, seaman; C. E. Meyer, seaman; P. R. Castler, ordinary seaman; R. H. Allison, apprentice, second class; R. C. Tobin, ordinary seaman; J. J. Mulligan, ordinary seaman; J. W. Cole, landsman; A. Smith, ordnance sergeant; W. S. Shipman, gunner's mate, first class; J. P. J. Brown, private marine; J. F. Kennedy, chief gunner's mate; J. M. Roach, ordinary seaman.

n Open Letter

the People of Chilton County:

n announcing myself as a candi... for judge of probate I did so ...ing very grateful to the citizens ...Chilton county for what they have ...eady done for me. I am making ...sacrifice in coming before you for ...r suffrage, but am doing so entire... of my own free will and accord. ...o not think my friends or any one ...e could pull me into a place I did ...want to go. I am not easily led ...und by the nose, and I wish to say, ...rcover, that no one has (as yet) ...aken his neck to get me to make ... race, or told me "that I am the ...y one in the county who can beat ...ams." For that matter, Judge Ad... is already beaten—he beat him... I wish to place before the vot... for their careful consideration a ... things in a business way, and ...e them think over them before ...ting their vote. What are offices ...—simply that some friend of ours ...y have a fat living? I know this may be hitting ...me of my friends hard, but if it ... awaken them to a realization ...their duty as good citizens, this ...ticle will not have been written ...vain. Let me say right here that ...do not solicit your support on ac...unt of my good looks, nor my great ...ancial standing or "just the one to ...t Adams," but I would have you ... consider the material before you ...s then vote your convictions. When ...went into the people's party I did ... daily trying to find out first ...ether it was going to be popular ...not, but being convinced of the ...Prime principles for which it stood, ...said I would go whether any one ...e did or not. When satisfied as ... the justness of my convictions, I ...nd by them, if I stand alone, as I ...ve in the administration of the ...unty finances. I well knew the ...unty was not authorized by law to ...row money; that the county com...issioners could give me no author... for doing so. Nothing short of an ... of the legislature could do that. ... being convinced I was right in doing so, I went ahead and provided for the payment of all just claims against the county that were backed by proper vouchers, sometimes borrowing several thousand dollars, and I am glad to say that today the county does not owe one dollar, and that at the time of my report to the grand jury the county had cash on hand to the amount of $7,425, which will pay all expenses of the last circuit court and commissioners' courts and all claims that may arise by October 1, 1904, the beginning of our next fiscal year. Had I sought my own pleasure I need not have given but a few days in every quarter to my office. I could have said there was no money in the treasury and would not be until the taxes were collected and you would have to wait probably until December, when the bulk of the taxes are paid, thus causing many of you to make two trips to get your money. I believe in the strict enforcement of our laws, tempered with mercy, and I promise my fellow citizens that (if elected) I will not ask for a second term and will not start in the first part of my administration "to lay pipes" for a second term, and will always as in the past treat all persons with due courtesy. Before announcing my name eight years ago for treasurer I was in communication with parties in Montreal, Canada; St. Louis, Mo.; Baltimore, Md., and in Illinois. I gave them a statement of our laws, our great difficulty in making our bonds, which kept many good men from offering for the different positions, and often resulted in their defeat. Through that correspondence was brought about the act of the legislature legalizing our present system of guarantee bonds, and now no good man need fear his ability in making bond, no matter whether he owns much property or not, and every one will admit it is by far the best system. I believe in the strictest economy in the affairs of our county; that the county should know the price before ordering anything, whether it is bridges, stationery or supplies of any description. I favor an act of the legislature that would give us a better system of assessing the taxes, believing that under a proper system our revenues could be greatly increased and the rate of taxation lowered. I am in favor of buying some good road machines and having a supervisor of roads and bridges, who would devote his whole time to such work, under a good road law. I favor an act of the legislature placing county superintendents of education on a salary based on the number of children in each county, thus enabling the superintendent to devote his entire time to visiting and looking after the different schools in his county. I favor the fostering of new industries in our midst, thus providing work for labor and aiding in the general upbuilding of our county and thereby bringing us more citizens to help develop our resources. We should not be satisfied with doing as well as our predecessors, but earnestly strive to do better. I further promise if elected to so conduct myself that I will enjoy your esteem when my term is out, as I feel that the confidence and esteem of my fellow men are above all other considerations. I trust we shall come out of this campaign a united people and that we shall be so far ahead of our opponents that they will not for some time in the future be able to bring a ticket in the field against us. I think I can say, without fear of contradiction, that if called upon to fill this position I could do so at an hour's notice, as I am thoroughly versed in the affairs of the county and duties of the probate judgeship. It would be nothing new to me, and I would not have to have an adviser to keep me straight, but feel competent to fully discharge the duties pertaining to the office.

Yours very truly,
ALEX G. DAKE.

The Simplon Tunnel is rapidly approaching completion. Its total length will be a little over twelve miles, of which distance six and upward have been penetrated on the north, or Brigue side, and four and upward on the south, or Italian side, leaving only a fraction over one mile yet to be completed. No sickness exists among the men; the use of the Brandt drill immediately suppresses all dust, and there has not been a single case of miner's phthisis, although some three thousand men have been at work for five years.

The house committee on immigration adopted a proposition to investigate, during recess, the immigration question by a commission of seven members of the committee. Howell, of New Jersey, is to be chairman of the committee.

By a vote of of four to three, two members being absent, the senate committee on education and labor decided to postpone further consideration of the eight hour bill until December.

AMONG LAWMAKERS

At the Seat of Government at Washington.

APRIL 22D.

The general deficiency bill occupied the major portion of the senate's time, but before it was taken up Mr. Gallinger spoke on the tariff policy of the republican party. While the reading of the deficiency bill was in progress, Mr. Cullom delivered a speech on the house Chinese exclusion rider.

During the day the attention of the senate was brought to the amendment of the house to the bill for the government of the canal zone and some embarrassment was created by naming Mr. Gorman as a democratic conferee on behalf of the senate in place of Mr. Morgan, who is the senior democratic member of the committee on interoceanic canals, with the result that both senators declined to serve. Senator Gorman in declining stated that the place rightfully belonged to Senator Morgan as the senior senator of the minority on the committee. The president of the senate then appointed Senator Morgan, who promptly resented the discourtesy by flatly declining to serve on the committee.

The house considered private pension bills and two hundred and thirty-three were passed in forty-five minutes. A conference was ordered on the bill to provide a temporary government for the Panama canal zone, Messrs. Hepburn of Iowa, Levering of Massachusetts and Adams of Georgia being appointed conferees on the part of the house.

The president was severely criticised by Mr. Kitchin of North Carolina, who included in his castigation General Grosvenor. He declared that the president had insulted the people of the south by saying in one of his publications that throughout southern character there ran a streak of brutal barbarism. He openly charged the president with being the advocate of lynch law and quoted from one of the president's books to sustain his assertion.

APRIL 23D.

The general deficiency appropriation bill was passed by the senate, leaving only one of the appropriation bills unacted on by that body. A number of amendments were adopted, among them one limiting the Chinese exclusion legislation to a reaffirmation of the exclusion laws of 1902 and other existing exclusion laws. An amendment which was acepted was that excluding Chinese and other aliens coming in as a result of agreements between other countries and a steamship company, having special reference to a contract between the Cunard line and the government of Hungary to supply 30,000 emigrants annually to the steamship company. About 200 private pension bills were passed during the day.

In the house speeches were made by Representatives Hepburn and Cochran and sharp retorts proved features of the session.

A bill was passed for the "protection of the public forest reserves and national parks in the United States." The bill for the commission to investigate the merchant marine was taken up by General Grosvenor. The house concurred in the senate amendment to a bill for a lock and dam in the Tennessee river at Chattanooga.

The house was in session for over five hours Sunday for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of the late Senator M. A. Hanna, the late Representative C. W. Thompson, of Alabama, and the late Representative W. W. Skiles, of Ohio. Tributes to the memory of the late Mr. Thompson were paid by Representatives Wiley, Underwood, Clayton, Burnett and Bowie, of Alabama; Littlefield, of Maine; Thomas, of North Carolina; Bailey, of Illinois; Conner, of Iowa; Padgett and Gaines, of Tennessee, and Patterson, of North Carolina.

APRIL 25TH.

Whether the president shall order the construction of the battle ship provided for in the naval appropriation bill, or wait until the war in the far east demonstrates the comparative ability of the big sea fighter and the torpedo boat or submarine craft, was a question raised in the senate by Mr. Hale, of Maine, on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. Bacon discussed trusts, replying to the recent speech of Mr. Dolliver. He devoted the greater portion to conditions which make it possible for American products to be sold abroad for a less price than American consumers are required to pay.

The military academy bill, the last of the general appropriation measures, was under consideration at the hour when memorial services for the late Representative Thompson, of Alabama, were begun.

Mr. Bacon read a letter from Charles Schwab to Mr. Frick giving the cost of manufacturing steel rails, which Mr. Bacon said showed that the "trust" needed no protection against English steel manufacturers. The letter said rails could be sold at a profit at $16 per ton.

"It will be very difficult to convince pig iron producers of Alabama and surrounding states, who have been receiving $18 and $20 for their iron," said Mr. Aldrich, "that the statement is correct."

"That is information given by Mr. Schwab in a private letter," said Mr. Bacon.

"I don't care how private it is," claimed Mr. Aldrich, "he can be mistaken as well as any one—what he states there is absolutely untrue and absurd."

The house passed a large number of bills, including the Alaska delegate bill. The bill to authorize the construction of a light house and for signal station at Diamond Shoal, N. C., occasioned a long debate, but finally passed without division.

An objection to a request by Mr. Grosvenor for leave to print brought a mild protest from him, which aroused Mr. Gaines, of Tennessee, who charged that Mr. Grosvenor had printed everything in the Record about President Roosevelt which the president did not do.

The house insisted on its disagreement with the senate on the amendments of that body to the emergency river and harbor bill, and Messrs. Burton of Ohio, Dovener of West Virginia, and Bankhead of Alabama, were appointed conferees.

Congressional Appropriations.

Chairman Hemenway, of the house committee on appropriations, in a statement compiled under his direction, gives the total of all supply bills (subject to slight changes in pending bills) as $597,862,324, to which must be added $84,971,820 for interest on the public debt. The estimated revenues are $704,742,060. By these figures the expenses are $22,000,000 less than the revenues. The estimates of the various government departments, on which the appropriations bill was based, exceeded the total estimated revenues by $42,845,862. No river and harbor bill making provision for new projects of improvement in the rivers and harbors of the country was undertaken. Likewise, no omnibus measures, carrying provision for public buildings, were allowed to pass.

Pay for Canal.

The state department has been notified of the conclusion in Paris of the contract for the sale to the United States government by the Panama Canal company all of its franchises and property on the isthmus. The money for the canal company will be paid over by the secretary of the treasury, it is understood.

Secretary Hay himself will pay to Panama the $10,000,000 to which it has become entitled. This payment will be made in Washington to Senor Morasemena, the newly appointed minister from Panama, as soon as the government authorizes him by cable to accept the money. The authorities in Panama have become clamorous for this payment, as the money is needed to defray certain expenses already incurred.

Following closely in the lead set by Great Britain, the United States government has decided to use some of its oldest vessels for target practice, for the drilling and experience of the gunners and officers on our modern war vessels. The first vessel to be put to this use is the old civil war monitor, the Montauk. It is proposed to put her through such repairs and changes as will better prepare her for the battering she is to undergo. Armor will be placed on her as heavy as she will carry. The shooting will be done in as shallow water as possible, and when she sinks the holes will be patched and she will be put through the same operation over and over again until she falls to pieces. The old monitor is one of the first of this class of vessels. She has undergone many engagements. Torpedoes have been fired at her and heavy ordnance has directed its missiles at her single turret, but she still floats.

Senator Hanna and seven members of the house have died during the fifty-eighth session, namely, Representatives T. H. Tongue of Oregon, Vincent Boreing of Kentucky, R. H. Foerderer of Pennsylvania, Henry Burk of Pennsylvania, W. W. Skiles of Ohio, G. W. Croft of South Carolina, and C. W. Thompson of Alabama.

T. H. Ball, of Texas, resigned. His place is filled by J. M. Pinckney. George B. McClellan, of New York, resigned and was succeeded by W. Bourke Cochran. Charles Dick, of Ohio, resigned to succeed Senator Hanna in the senate. George Howell, of Pennsylvania, was unseated in favor of William McConnell, and J. A. Shafroth, of Colorado, resigned in favor of R. W. Bonyge, who contested his election.

MR. HEFLIN RESIGNS

Will Vacate the Secretaryship of State on May 1.

Secretary of State Heflin filed his resignation with the governor, to take effect May 1st. The special election for congress will be held on May 9th to fill the unexpired term, and after then Mr. Heflin will go to Washington, should congress stay in session, to represent his district. The governor will be notified by wire of the resignation.

Boy Run Over.

Three little boys, Leslie Hatcher, Angie Douglas and George Douglas, were run over by a negro drayman at Bessemer, and Angie Douglas was seriously injured, the heavy dray passing over his body and bruising his shoulders badly. It seems that the boys were standing in the street waiting for a car. The negro driver was also watching the car and drove over them before he became aware that they were in the way.

Alabama Will be There.

The plan for the army maneuvers at Manassas, Va., have about been completed by the war department. The maneuvers will begin about September 5th and last two weeks.

Nearly thirty thousand troops will camp on the old Bull Run battlefield, of which about eighteen thousand will come from the state organizations. The Tennessee quota will be 538; Alabama, 915; Mississippi, 301.

Up for Life.

E. M. Carwile was found guilty of the murder of P. H. Snow, of Boaz, last winter and sentenced to life imprisonment. Snow was a business man of Boaz and he and Carwile had some dispute about a mortgage, and Snow was shot in the public road while Carwile was near by with his gun. Carwile says Snow shot himself accidentally.

Store Burned.

At Cullman, J. W. Sparks' store was burned down with all its contents, consisting of a stock of general merchandise valued at $9,000. There was $6,000 insurance on the stock. The origin of the fire is not known, but robbery and incendiarism are suspected.

Farmer Killed.

A Central of Georgia train struck the buggy of R. S. Kite while crossing the track at Nuckolls, near Seale, demolishing the vehicle and instantly killing Mr. Kite and the horse. Kite was about 45 years of age, with a wife and eight or ten children.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition company received a loan of $4,600,000 from the government, of which $100,000 is to pay the expenses of the board of lady managers. An act was passed to protect foreign exhibitors at the exposition of literary, artistic and musical works, through the copyright laws of the country, and provision was made for the withdrawal fee of duty under bond from the exposition of articles or materials donated to incorporated institutions of religious, philosophical, educational or scientific character.

As the result of a meeting held in Scottsboro by citizens, injunction proceedings have been begun to stop the building of the new court house. The injunction was granted by Judge Paul Speake at Huntsville and will be in force as soon as the required bond is made.

Advices from Calcutta to March 10th say that the production of raw sugar in the five reporting provinces, excluding about one-third of Madras, amounts to 1,900,000 long tons, the estimate of the production of last year being 2,047,000 tons.

THE LAND OF REGRET.

There is a city whose gated are wide,
Its pavements pure and clean,
Where shadowy forms flit side by side
On the road called "Might Have Been."
But folks walk there with their heads bowed low,
And heavy eyelids wet,
For ev'ry corner is haunted so
In this, "The Land of Regret."

They meet the ghosts of those other years
In dreams of memory sweet,
And wet with passionate frenzied tears
The graves which lie at their feet;
But never, long as their lives shall last,
Can they again forget
Who once have walked with ghosts of the past
In this, "The Land of Regret."

They feel the touch of a hand grown still,
Its fingers softly press,
The tender passion of kisses thrill
Their own in a fond caress.
Ah, me!—but pity the folks who stray
Where long the sun hath set,
And walk with the ghosts who're laid away
In this, "The Land of Regret."

The Revolt of Two-Strike.

"Yes," said Kelly, the post trader, reflectively, 'I think that McLaren was the best Indian agent I have known—best for the Indian and the government. If we'd had more agents like him, we should have had fewer Indian wars.

"After the trouble with Two-Strike, McLaren had things his own way with the Sioux here. Ever hear about that? No? Well, that happened before the Wounded Knee trouble, and some years after I had secured my license as agency trader.

"There'd been a change in the administration, a shift of party power in Congress, and as a result Indian appropriations were slow, and McLaren had run short of rations for his Sioux. The Indians here hadn't learned much about farming yet. The buffalo had all been killed off or driven away, so that for a time they were on short rations, half starved in fact. They had to kill some of their ponies for subsistence.

"Finally Two-Strike and his band, to the number of about three hundred, moved across the agency near to the ledge of the cattle-range and began to kill beeves. This of course made trouble, and soon a lot of cowmen, as hot as hornets, rode in at the agency to warn Mac that if he didn't take care of his Indians and get them home, they would see after 'em themselves.

"Mac knew what that meant. If Two-Strike's party were attacked, every man of his four thousand would be up in arms. He said what he could to pacify the angry cow-men, and promised remuneration for the damage doen their herds.

"'I'll get my Indians back,' he said, 'and very soon.'

"He sent a courier across the river with a dispatch to the Secretary of the Interior, asking, not for soldiers, but for emergency supplies. Then he came to me. 'Aleck,' he said, 'I want you to go with me tomorrow and bring in Two-Strike.' You may guess how I liked the prospect of that job!

"I suppose I really had more influence with the Sioux here at that time than any other white man; I'd been with them so long and spoke their language readily, but—well, I knew old Two-Strike pretty well, and my faith in the undertaking wasn't strong. Yet I agreed to go and do what I could to help Mac out.

"The cattlemen had hardly got out of sight, though, when a Sioux runner came in with the news that Two-Strike had pulled his teepee stakes and cut loose for the Bad Lands.

"Still McLaren didn't waver. 'Aleck,' he said, 'we must go after them at once.'

"Thirty minutes later three of the swiftest ponies on the reservation were brought in for us. We packed one with our blanket rolls and five days' rations, mounted the others, and set out on an errand that seemed to me risky and hopeless enough.

"It took us all night to cross the reservation, and about sunrise we found ourselves at Two-Strike's camp, which had been abandoned some twenty-four hours. Here we grazed our ponies and took three hours of sleep.

"Two-Strike had made no attempt to conceal his trail, but was dragging his 'travvies' at a headlong rush for the Bad Lands. We followed the second day in a ride which covered seventy miles. We were now in the heart of a big cattle-range, and just before sunset we found near to their trail the heads and refuse of eleven steers, which had been corralled and shot down in a bunch. The Indians had camped here and cooked meat within two miles of the Honeycomb Ranch.

"Mac looked sober enough, and I ventured to say that we might as well turn back, for old Two-Strike was surely burning his bridges behind. But Mac Wouldn't turn back, and I went on with him. We slept the whole of that night, for our ponies were sadly in need of rest.

"About noon the next day we came to the mouth of the Belle Fourche, where we found evidence of another round-up and cattle-killing.

"A little later we saw three cowmen cross our trail, a half-mile or so in advance, and ride rapidly toward the foot-hills on our left. McLaren waved his hat at them for five minutes or more, but they gave no sign of having seen us. Our horses were not in fit condition to chase them, and so we rode on after Two-Strike.

"We rested again at sunset; then, as the trail of the Indians was very fresh and the stars were shining, we pushed on. At midnight, and at a point fully half-way from our agency to the Bad Lands, we came upon the Sioux camp. We ran against a bunch of ponies just at the mouth of a coulee, and as these whinnied and snorted a picket fired two shots at us before I could raise my voice and make myself known.

"His bullets sang close, and the man was surly and glum when I asked why he had fired at friends. We rode in among the teepees to find a lot of Indians outside with guns in hand. They supposed their camp had been attacked, and they were in a wild and bitter mood.

"With difficulty, among the mob, we found the teepee of Two-Strike, and the chief standing at its doorway.

"'Have you sent for your soldiers?' was his first question.

"'No,' said MacLaren. 'I have a message for you from the Great Father. He asks you to return to the agency.'

"'I'm going to the buffalo country, where my people need not starve. We wish nothing to do with white people. You may go back and tell the Great Father this,' said Two-Strike. Then he stepped inside his teepee and jerked its flaps together with a snap.

"This was bad. Two-Strike had shut the door of his lodge in his agent's face, and no act short of presenting a gun could have more certainly shown a hostile intention. Angry mutterings all round us, too, warned us of danger. Anything might happen, and I felt my skin prickle with apprehension.

"As the angry mutter continued and wolf-dogs snapped and snarled at us. Mac raised his voice.

"'Listen, brothers' he said. 'Your Great Father has sent you a paper which I have brought. I am cold and hungry and wish the shelter of your teepees until morning, when I can talk with you openly.'

"I interpreted, but there was no answer. We stood in silence for some minutes; then a figure, muffled in a blanket, stood beside us. 'Come!' said the Indian, and I recognized the voice of Yellow Iron, an old subchief, who had more than once proved friendly to the whites. I was glad to follow him.

"We went with the old chief to his teepee, and while Yellow Iron picketed our ponies, his wife broiled some beef over her fire.

"'Our young men killed some cattle,' said Yellow Iron when he came in. 'They did not wish our people to starve.'

"He spoke grimly and would say nothing more, only grunting at my inquiries. Our errand seemed to me worse than hopeless, and I was glad to roll into my blankets and forget trouble in sleep.

"We were awakened the next morning by the sounds of breaking camp. Yellow Iron's old squaw was actually taking down her teepee over our heads when I crawled out of my covers. She had cooked some meat for us, and we had slept like tired dogs through a deal of racket.

"Well, while we were eating our breakfast all the Sioux pulled out and left us.

"We said nothing, for there was nothing to say; but when I looked at Mac, after we had finished our meal, his face was set and dogged.

"'We'll follow them,' he said. 'We'll show them that they're wanted at home.'

"If I hadn't been tired and disgusted and fearful, too, of consequences, I should have had some fun out of the chase. The sight of a lot of hostiles making a break for liberty, and their agent and trader running with them, would have tickled any one with less responsibility than we had.

"As it was, we rode solemnly enough at the tail of the string. The Indians paid no attention to us, but thumped and whacked their loaded and travvy-dragging ponies, going up the Belle Fourche in a cloud of dust. So we rode, the two of us, for two or three hours, bringing up the rear in gloomy silence. Then there was a sudden change in our program.

"We were riding between two low ranges of hills when a bunch of cowmen charged out of cover on our left, and opened fire on the Sioux. We might have expected such an outcome to the cattle-killing, but we were surprised at the force which had gathered.

"It was the work of those three riders we had seen the day before. They had followed and drummed out a crowd among the hills ranchmen, and by changing horses and riding hard, they were upon us. There were thirty or forty of them, armed to the teeth, and not more than seventy or eighty poorly armed fighters among the Indians.

"We saw quickly that it must go hard with the Sioux. But old Two-Strike and his men were game. They threw themselves between the enemy and their women and children, and instantly began a fighting retreat to the river banks upon our right.

"'What did Mac do?' Well, sir, he rode straight into the bunch, and I was fool enough to follow him. In a minute we were between them, scurrying Sioux on one hand and charging cowboys on the other, and all shooting and yelling like wild men. They were all ring at long range, as yet, but the fight was getting hotter every second.

"Riding like the wind, Mac went straight for the biggest bunch of Indians. We came up with these just as their squaws and young ones were piling pell-mell over the river bank. Mac jumped from his horse and grabbed a travvy-pole out of a pack which had broken loose in the scramble. Before I could have time to tell it he had jerked a flag—which he had brought as a present for Two-Strike—out of a saddle-bag and tied it to that pole.

"Then he jumped into his saddle, and with the Stars and Stripes fluttering above his head, rode toward the cow-men. Well, sir," and the trader's eyes grew moist, "I never saw 'Old Glory' put to better use.

"Mac had hardly ridden a hundred yards, I think, when the shooting stopped, and all those reckless wild riders sat their horses in silence. They wouldn't fire on a United States flag.

"Mac halted and made signs to them to come on. They bunched and talked together for a minute; then their leader rode forward alone. He was a small, sandy-whiskered man, as mild and quiet-looking as you'd wish to see.

"'How?' he said, with an inquiring look straight into Mac's eyes.

"'I'm the Indian agent at Fort Y,' said MacLaren, 'and I'm after my runaways. If you gentlemen will have the goodness to present a properly sworn statement of your losses by this band, I will give you my check in payment.'

"'The cattleman's face lighted. 'That's good talk!' he said. We haven't lost any cattle or horses up here yet. We didn't intend to,' he added, smiling as pleasant as a school-ma'am. 'Glad to know these reds have a responsible guarantee with 'em. So long!' and he cantered away.

"Then Mac and I talked with Two-Strike. It didn't take long to bring him to reason. He had seen that the flag of this country would protect even the ndian. Though his band had lost several ponies and had two men badly hurt in the fight, they returned to the agency peaceably.

"And after that warning to the department at Washington, we had rations for our Indians."—Youth's Companion.

Curtain Calls in Germany.

"There is an unwritten code of etiquette among actors in regard to curtain calls that appears to differ widely in different countries," says Mr. P. Short.

"A friend of mine was recently telling me about the custom that obtains in this respect in certain theatres and opera houses in German cities, and from what he says it is exactly the reverse of what it is here. Over there the star or leading player takes the first curtain call alone. If there is a second curtain call, the star and associate player of the opposite sex appear on the stage to respond to it, and should a third call from the audience be given, the entire company appears in answer to it. The customs of our stage generally reverse this procedure. Among us the first curtain call is responded to by the entire company, the second by three or four or five of the principal players; the third by the leading man and woman alone, and then, if there are more, by the star or leading player.

"This is, of course, dealing with the subject in a general way and considering the circumstances as those which may ordinarily obtain. Where two or three players only are concerned in the scene that brings the applause, why, naturally, the other members of the company would have no part in the responces.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Background of the Human Eye.

A highly important invention affecting optical science in general, and the further development of the eye specialist's profession in treating eye diseases and faulty vision in particular, was recently made in Berlin. According to a German exchange, the assistant of the University Clinic of the Royal Charity Hospital, Dr. Walther Thorner, has succeeded in solving a problem which has received much attention from many others before him, but with little or no success. He has managed to photograph the background of the eye and obtain good pictures of it, too. His invention represents a material improvement on the ophthalmoscope invented by Helmholtz in 1850. The latter, however, only admitted of viewing the background of the eye.

The fact that all attempts to photograph the interior or the background of the eye had remained fruitless so far was due to the peculiar construction of the eye. It is difficult to light up the interior to such an extent as to enable one to take a photograph of it, and even in the use of strong sources of light the exposure would require so much time that the eye would have to be fixed, which would mean great inconvenience to the patient. Now Dr. Thorner has constructed an apparatus with which he first succeeded in photographing the eyes of animals, especially cats.—Jewelers'

THE PELICAN AND THE HAWK.

A pelican filled his pouch with pelf
He gathered on land and water;
And when he was laid upon the shelf,
Since he could not take it with himself,
He willed it to his daughter.

Pearls there were in the pouch of wealth,
And dredgings of gold and silver;
For the wise old bird, while he kept his health,
Grew fat and rich with the hoard of stealth,
And all he could earn and pilfer.

A gay young hawk on a foreign shore
Heard the squack of the old bird's daughter;
He trained him well on his family lore,
Counted the duents he needed sore,
And crossed the briny water.

He wooed the pelican twenty days
(His wiygs had not miscarried),
She showed her gold with every phrase—
Pelicans squeek such funny ways!—
He won her—and he married!

It wasn't the pelican maid herself
The hawk desired to win;
'Twas more the glittering pouch of pelf
The rich old bird upon the shelf
Had tucked beneath her chin.

They have gone to a foreign shore to dwell,
Pelican and hawk, together,
In a house of gold, by a pearly dell;
A nest egg?—yes—but the chick!—ah, well,
That's a bird of a different feather!

"The Unknown Army."

It is interesting to learn that what the commissioner calls "the unknown army," that is, the living soldiers of the civil war who have not applied for pensions, numbers about 200,000, or about 30 percent of the total number of survivors, who are placed at about 900,000. This "unknown army" is applying for pensions at the rate of about 14,000 a year. Mr. Ware estimates that if the pension laws remain unchanged this army in five more years will be reduced about 60,000, and in ten years will cease to be a factor. The Union soldier who has the distinction of being the first to have a claim allowed at the pension office appears to have been one Leopold Charrier, a member of Company G of the Twelfth Regiment, New York Militia Infantry, whose claim was allowed August 12, 1861. Mr. Charrier, it appears from the record, was discharged from the service August 6, 1861, because of a gun shot wound through both arms, received while at drill by accidental discharge of a musket. The woman who obtained certificate number one as the widow of a Union soldier was Mrs. Caroline Ohl of Washington, D. C., whose husband was killed in a skirmish at Great Falls, Md., in June, 1861.—Leslie's Weekly.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

A DISCOURSE ENTITLED "ULTIMATE AMERICA."

A Patriotic Address by the Rev. J. Alexander Jenkins, Pastor of Immanuel Congregational Church—This Country the Spiritual Teacher of the Nations.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—In Temple Israel the Rev. J. Alexander Jenkins, pastor of Immanuel Congregational Church, delivered an address to a large audience on "Ultimate America, the Spiritual Teacher of the Nations." He said among other things:

It is a commonplace of the newer thinking that the evolutionary process culminates in the soul of man, the whole mighty movement being satisfactorily explained, according to the thinking of the theistic evolutionist, when matter endowed with life and perfected through countless generations, has at last given to the mind of the human being the instrument for the elementary exercises of its endless life. The struggles of the ages are justified in the soul. The student of history is perplexed as he hears the groanings and witnesses the travailings of the nations through the centuries, and his natural and legitimate query, as he beholds the rise and fall of nations, is, Where lies the goal of the peoples and what justifies the toils and agonies of the race? The answer to this inevitable question is this: Almighty God is leading the nations toward the goal of the highest life, and the struggles of the ages find justification in the birth of the world-soul. And if the fact that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, so that he became a living soul is sufficient recompense for the bloody brute battles of the world's gray dawn, the thought that He will breathe a soul into the nations should likewise be deemed ample compensation for the gropings and grapplings of the aspirants for national permanency and supremacy.

The American colonists were not the first men to fight for independence, but the motives that produced the Declaration of Independence made their fight epoch marking as no other fight had ever been. Other nations had given up slavery, but no nation was ever before called upon to furnish so awful a proof of sincerity of motive in striking the shackles from the limbs of the enslaved. Other nations have had to deal with the problem of undesirable aliens, but no nation ever felt as feels America the imperativeness of a course of action based upon righteousness and justice. Other nations have seized the territory of the weak and helpless, but none has felt such deep, unselfish solicitude for a dependent people as has characterized our country in her dealings with a primitive people committed to her care as the outcome of her intervention in the interests of humanity. Other nations have had to effect adjustments between employer and employe, but no nation has ever been called upon to effect such an adjustment when the conditions presented revealed so clearly the fact that a great principle of universal importance is involved. The settlement of the "labor problem" in democratic America means the setlement for the world, for here the employer of the highest type meets the worker of the highest type, and the final result will be in keeping with the character of the contestants.

So we are learning the lesson of deliberateness; and one of the most promising signs of the times is the tendency to deal with great questions cautiously and calmly. The result of this course will be that what the new America settles will stay settled. She will settle, and that for all time, the question of the rights of inferior peoples, the question as to the character of the education most to be desired, the question of the relation of employer to employed. America is to-day solving the accumulated problems of the ages. And God is willing that she should have time to complete her task.

In view of what has been said, it will strike us as a fact of solemn import that our country is preparing for her yet larger service through the slow, constant development of her religious consciousness. The existence and growth of this consciousness the superficial observer of our life and institutions might feel inclined to deny. Nevertheless, we are convinced that this most necessary condition for present and future leadership exists.

Where shall we seek for this religious consciousness? Shall we look for it in the institutions set apart as avowedly religious? No man has the right to scoff at organized religion. Our schools, our churches, our synagogues are, on the whole, true to their mission. But the truly effective religious consciousness must be found in other places as well—in the editorial sanctum, in the political gathering, in the mart and the busy street. Let us find this consciousness in these places, no matter what its form, and we shall have as good a guarantee of the divine favor as though we had gazed upon overflowing houses of worship and listened to the eloquence of the elect. The religious spirit which makes for American pre-eminence may be discerned in many phases of the national life, but it is strikingly evident in the new press, the new politics and the new social ideal. There are many, doubtless, who would not concede that the press of the country furnishes an evidence of growing national righteousness, but the fact remains, that in the newspapers of our land there is a distinct trend toward righteousness and godliness.

The truthfulness and force of our present contention will seem to many hard to reconcile with the well-known fact that in the United States the avowedly religious journals are steadily losing ground. But even this fact, rightly interpreted, is not an evidence of national decay. The religious papers of to-day have a choice between degeneration and evolution. The signs of degeneration are stubborn adherence to denominational shibboleths, fierce championship of exhausted dogmas and growing impatience with progressive interpretation of truth. The signs of evolution are the throwing overboard of useless issues, and the adoption of the leading features of the great "secular" papers. The great religious papers of the country to-day are such in name only. Were the contents of one of these papers rearranged and printed in newspaper form it would pass as a newspaper, minus the newspaper's up-to-date freshness. In the secular press, on the other hand, there is steady progress and increasing vitality. The moral tone of the American people is reflected in the new journalism, and the fact that the citizens of the republic desire righteousness is patent to all who seek the underlying motives of journalistic enterprise of the highest type. And this fact is most significant when we remember that these great agencies of publicity, free discussion and education have a direct bearing upon the shaping of the ideals of the inflowing millions of our population. The spirit of the American journalism is communicated to the Americanized representatives of these foreign peoples, and they in turn give it to their dependent fellows through the columns of their publications. We have no right to assume that papers published in foreign tongues stand for Old World anarchy; we should, the rather, heartily concede the fact that these journals, printed in Italian, German, Hebrew, Welsh and other languages, constitute a great missionary agency for doing foundation work in Americanism and altruism. Indeed, the very fact that our citizens in the making eagerly grasp these informing agencies is a prophecy of great things to come. We have here no isolated, lethargic, self-satisfied aggregation of human beings, but we have millions of men who are being inspired by the air of a free country and by her institutions. The newspapers in the hands of these men are as banners waving encouragement to faraway nations in darkness and distress.

When we come to speak of American politics we invite the smile of those who see in American politics at best only a crude "shirt-sleeve" democracy and at its worst a contemptible system of loot and graft. And the apologists of our political life ignore the inconsistency in that they condemn which they take pains to defend as "only an experiment" to secure the smoothness of an old governmental machine. The man who is contented to live in a primitive cabin, subject to the inconveniences of a semi-barbaric life, may plead quietude and peace of a certain kind, but he should be the last person to criticise the man who is battling against conditions for better and more adequate habitations. As a nation we are to build a better house. We have found the stone for the edifice, the labor and blood to secure the edifice, that our material resources, the forests of the Old World have been seasoned; that sometimes we have been unwise to enter unselfishly into the enterprise. We admit that we have not followed [illegible] the exact architectural specifications necessary for such a building, that in tearing down [illegible] we have left the leaking roof of the old house to mar the beauty of the rising mansion in the distance.

The nation's [illegible] able demands upon every citizen in public. The world [illegible] the matchless beauty of [illegible] wealth, and the [illegible] is that this unprecedented [illegible] so peculiarly American [illegible] imperative claims of our [illegible] lic sentiment demands [illegible] recognize the demand [illegible] wealth should be spent for [illegible] nation and for the good [illegible] educator feels the same [illegible] the voice of the people [illegible] a free search for truth [illegible] leader recognizes the same [illegible] vice; so he becomes [illegible] trator between two [illegible] story in the good Book [illegible] Babel a mighty calamity [illegible] that there the speech [illegible] confused. In this land of [illegible] versed. The nations are [illegible] to build the greatest tower, [illegible] the confusion of the Babel [illegible] place little by little to a [illegible] language of love, spoken [illegible] millions, so that in a [illegible] sense than ever before it [illegible] the whole earth shall be [illegible] and of one speech.

Thales of old, with [illegible] ception of God that we [illegible] to classify him as atheist [illegible] strangely conceived of [illegible] the great world temple and [illegible] it as to reveal in its very [illegible] ence of the Creator. The [illegible] time may seem strangely [illegible] that presence of God which [illegible] the race feel to be the [illegible] fact of life. But the world [illegible] forever content with mere [illegible] time is to come when the [illegible] the Divine Presence. [illegible] comes the cry of the [illegible] "Wherewith shall we come [illegible] Lord?" God grant that in [illegible] day of the world's supreme [illegible] granted unto us as the teacher [illegible] tions to shout the great [illegible] showed you, O nations, what [illegible] what doth the Lord require [illegible] do justly, and to love mercy [illegible] humbly with your God."

Resisting Power.

When a physician is called [illegible] of severe illness, the first [illegible] estimates is the resisting power [illegible] tient. The chances for his [illegible] in proportion to his vitality. [illegible] little of that at the outset [illegible] hope of overcoming the disease [illegible] sisting power of persons in [illegible] such that in an epidemic they [illegible] the disease germs that prostrate [illegible] One cannot always tell from [illegible] just how much ability one has [illegible] the inroads of a malady. Some [illegible] parently are robust almost [illegible] succumb, while others who [illegible] cover from violent attacks. Dissipation, unhygienic living, [illegible] surroundings sap one's resistance [illegible] that when a virulent ailment [illegible] attack one has strength [illegible] fight it off.

You see that it is not so [illegible] lignancy of the disease as [illegible] ive of the man that [illegible] suit. Just so it is [illegible] to. There are some people [illegible] right, so spiritually healthy [illegible] practically immune from [illegible] when they are overtaken [illegible] cover themselves, for [illegible] ance is great. On the [illegible] are those who after [illegible] temptation are conquered [illegible] the power of evil. How [illegible] counted for? Obviously in [illegible] that the ability to resist [illegible] is to be explained. [illegible] wholesome moral living [illegible] been permitted to become [illegible] evil thoughts; the soul [illegible] miasma and corruption and [illegible] ability to put away temptation.

All this suggests the need [illegible] power both against disease [illegible] sin. A pure, clean, whole[illegible] cal and moral, will make [illegible] against any harm that either

Always at Our Side

Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, the deaconess and writer, says:

"A busy woman entered her [illegible] as twilight shades were [illegible] rectly to her desk, turned on [illegible] began to write. Page after page [illegible] The solitude became oppressive [illegible] wheeled her chair around and [illegible] of joyful surprise looked [illegible] face of her dearest friend, [illegible] lounge at her side. "Why, I [illegible] you were here!" she cried [illegible] you speak to me?" "Be[illegible] busy. You didn't speak [illegible] Jesus—here all the time. [illegible] of Him, always ready to [illegible] smile—but we are so busy. [illegible] solitude grows oppressive [illegible] turn, and lo, He is at our side [illegible] to Him and He speaks to us [illegible] deepest yearnings are satisfied.

Men Wanted.

There is nothing we are so [illegible] of in our city and country [illegible] When we think of the "epi[illegible] that alarms us, the social [illegible] disgusts us, the commercial [illegible] that startles us, we wonder [illegible] opulence in material resources [illegible] spread of educational advantages [illegible] growing men, true men, as [illegible] Rev. Joy That Helps.

Christian joy is an experience [illegible] depth and solemnity. It never [illegible] the sadness and sternness of [illegible] never shallow or unreflective [illegible] strained, tender, sympathetic. [illegible] We know it when we see it [illegible] any whom we love; it helps [illegible] Campbell.

Be at Your Best Always

THE LAND OF REGRET.

There is a city whose gates are wide,
Its pavements pure and clean,
Where shadowy forms flit side by side
On the road called "Might Have Been."
But folks walk there with their heads bowed low,
And heavy eyelids wet,
For ev'ry corner is haunted so
In this, "The Land of Regret."

They meet the ghosts of those other years
In dreams of memory sweet,
And wet with passionate frenzied tears
The graves which lie at their feet;
But never, long as their lives shall last,
Can they again forget
Who once have walked with ghosts of the past
In this, "The Land of Regret."

They feel the touch of a hand grown still,
Its fingers softly press,
The tender passion of kisses thrill
Their own in a fond caress.
Ah, me!—but pity the folks who stray
Where long the sun hath set,
And walk with the ghosts who're laid away
In this, "The Land of Regret."

The Revolt of Two-Strike.

"Yes," said Kelly, the post trader, reflectively, "I think that McLaren was the best Indian agent I have known—best for the Indian and the government. If we'd had more agents like him, we should have had fewer Indian wars.

"After the trouble with Two-Strike, McLaren had things his own way with the Sioux here. Ever hear about that? No? Well, that happened before the Wounded Knee trouble, and some years after I had secured my license as agency trader.

"There'd been a change in the administration, a shift of party power in Congress, and as a result Indian appropriations were slow, and McLaren had run short of rations for his Sioux. The Indians here hadn't learned much about farming yet. The buffalo had all been killed off or driven away, so that for a time they were on short rations, half starved in fact. They had to kill some of their ponies for subsistence.

"Finally Two-Strike and his band, to the number of about three hundred, moved across the agency near to the ledge of the cattle-range and began to kill beeves. This of course made trouble, and soon a lot of cowmen, as hot as hornets, rode in at the agency to warn Mac that if he didn't take care of his Indians and get them home, they would see after 'em themselves.

"Mac knew what that meant. If Two-Strike's party were attacked, every man of his four thousand would be up in arms. He said what he could to pacify the angry cow-men, and promised remuneration for the damage doen their herds.

"'I'll get my Indians back,' he said, 'and very soon.'

"He sent a courier across the river with a dispatch to the Secretary of the Interior, asking, not for soldiers, but for emergency supplies. Taen he came to me. 'Aleck,' he said, 'I want you to go with me tomorrow and bring in Two-Strike.' You may guess how I liked the prospect of that job!

"I suppose I really had more influence with the Sioux here at that time than any other white man; I'd been with them so long and spoke their language readily, but—well, I knew old Two-Strike pretty well, and my faith in the undertaking wasn't strong. Yet I agreed to go and do what I could to help Mac out.

"The cattlemen had hardly got out of sight, though, when a Sioux runner came in with the news that Two-Strike had pulled his teepee stakes and cut loose for the Bad Lands.

"Still McLaren didn't waver. 'Aleck,' he said, 'we must go after them at once.'

"Thirty minutes later three of the swiftest ponies on the reservation were brought in for us. We packed one with our blanket rolls and five days' rations, mounted the others, and set out on an errand that seemed to me risky and hopeless enough.

"It took us all night to cross the reservation, and about sunrise we found ourselves at Two-Strike's camp, which had been abandoned some twenty-four hours. Here we grazed our ponies and took three hours of sleep.

"Two-Strike had made no attempt to conceal his trail, but was dragging his 'travvies' at a headlong rush for the Bad Lands. We followed the second day in a ride which covered seventy miles. We were now in the heart of a big cattle-range, and just before sunset we found near to their trail the heads and refuse of eleven steers, which had been corralled and shot down in a bunch. The Indians had camped here and cooked meat within two miles of the Honeycomb Ranch.

"Mac looked sober enough, and I ventured to say that we might as well turn back, for old Two-Strike was surely burning his bridges behind. But Mac Wouldn't turn back, and I went on with him. We slept the whole of that night, for our ponies were sadly in need of rest.

"About noon the next day we came to the mouth of the Belle Fourche, where we found evidence of another round-up and cattle-killing.

"A little later we saw three cowmen cross our trail, a half-mile or so in advance, and ride rapidly toward the foot-hills on our left. McLaren waved his hat at them for five minutes or more, but they gave no sign of having seen us. Our horses were not in fit condition to chase them, and so we rode on after Two-Strike.

"We rested again at sunset; then, as the trail of the Indians was very fresh and the stars were shining, we pushed on. At midnight, and at a point fully half-way from our agency to the Bad Lands, we came upon the Sioux camp. We ran against a bunch of ponies just at the mouth of a coulee, and as these whinnied and snorted a picket fired two shots at us before I could raise my voice and make myself known.

"His bullets sang close, and the man was surly and glum when I asked why he had fired at friends. We rode in among the teepees to find a lot of Indians outside with guns in hand. They supposed their camp had been attacked, and they were in a wild and bitter mood.

"With difficulty, among the mob, we found the teepee of Two-Strike, and the chief standing at its doorway.

"'Have you sent for your soldiers?' was his first question.

"'No,' said MacLaren. 'I have a message for you from the Great Father. He asks you to return to the agency.'

"'I'm going to the buffalo country, where my people need not starve. We wish nothing to do with white people. You may go back and tell the Great Father this,' said Two-Strike. Then he stepped inside his teepee and jerked its flaps together with a snap.

"This was bad. Two-Strike had shut the door of his lodge in his agent's face, and no act short of presenting a gun could have more certainly shown a hostile intention. Angry mutterings all round us, too, warned us of danger. Anything might happen, and I felt my skin prickle with apprehension.

"As the anggry mutter continued and wolf-dogs snapped and snarled at us. Mac raised his voice.

"'Listen, brothers' he said. 'Your Great Father has sent you a paper which I have brought. I am cold and hungry and wish the shelter of your teepees until morning, when I can talk with you openly.'

"I interpreted, but there was no answer. We stood in silence for some minutes; then a figure, muffled in a blanket, stood beside us. 'Come!' said the Indian, and I recognized the voice of Yellow Iron, an old subchief, who had more than once proved friendly to the whites. I was glad to follow him.

"We went with the old chief to his teepee, and while Yellow Iron picketed our ponies, his wife broiled some beef over her fire.

"'Our young men killed some cattle,' said Yellow Iron when he came in. 'They did not wish our people to starve.'

"He spoke grimly and would say nothing more, only grunting at my inquiries. Our errand seemed to me worse than hopeless, and I was glad to roll into my blankets and forget trouble in sleep.

"We were awakened the next morning by the sounds of breaking camp. Yellow Iron's old squaw was actually taking down her teepee over our heads when I crawled out of my covers. She had cooked some meat for us, and we had slept like tired dogs through a deal of racket.

"Well, while we were eating our breakfast all the Sioux pulled out and left us.

"We said nothing, for there was nothing to say; but when I looked at Mac, after we had finished our meal, his face was set and dogged.

"'We'll follow them,' he said. 'We'll show them that they're wanted at home.'

"If I hadn't been tired and disgusted and fearful, too, of consequences, I should have had some fun out of the chase. The sight of a lot of hostiles making a break for liberty, and their agent and trader running with them, would have tickled any one with less responsibility than we had.

"As it was, we rode solemnly enough at the tail of the string. The Indians paid no attention to us, but thumped and whacked their loaded and travvy-dragging ponies, going up the Belle Fourche in a cloud of dust. So we rode, the two of us, for two or three hours, bringing up the rear in gloomy silence. Then there was a sudden change in our program.

"We were riding between two low ranges of hills when a bunch of cowmen charged out of cover on our left, and opened fire on the Sioux. We might have expected such an outcome to the cattle-killing, but we were surprised at the force which had gathered.

"It was the work of those three riders we had seen the day before. They had followed and drummed out a crowd among the hills ranchmen, and by changing horses and riding hard, they were upon us. There were thirty or forty of them, armed to the teeth, and not more than seventy or eighty poorly armed fighters among the Indians.

"We saw quickly that it must go hard with the Sioux. But old Two-Strike and his men were game. They threw themselves between the enemy and their women and children, and instantly began a fighting retreat to the river banks upon our right.

"'What did Mac do?' Well, sir, he rode straight into the bunch, and I was fool enough to follow him. In a minute we were between them, scurrying Sioux on one hand and charging cowboys on the other, and all shooting and yelling like wild men. They were all ring at long range, as yet, but the fight was getting hotter every second.

"Riding like the wind, Mac went straight for the biggest bunch of Indians. We came up with these just as their squaws and young ones were piling pell-mell over the river bank. Mac jumped from his horse and grabbed a travvy-pole out of a pack which had broken loose in the scramble. Before I could have time to tell it he had jerked a flag—which he had brought as a present for Two-Strike—out of a saddle-bag and tied it to that pole.

"Then he jumped into his saddle, and with the Stars and Stripes fluttering above his head, rode toward the cow-men. Well, sir," and the trader's eyes grew moist, "I never saw 'Old Glory' put to better use.

"Mac had hardly ridden a hundred yards, I think, when the shooting stopped, and all those reckless wild riders sat their horses in silence. They wouldn't fire on a United States flag.

"Mac halted and made signs to them to come on. They bunched and talked together for a minute; then their leader rode forward alone. He was a small, sandy-whiskered man, as mild and quiet-looking as you'd wish to see.

"'How?' he said, with an inquiring look straight into Mac's eyes.

"'I'm the Indian agent at Fort Y,' said MacLaren, 'and I'm after my runaways. If you gentlemen will have the goodness to present a properly sworn statement of your losses by this band, I will give you my check in payment.'

"The cattleman's face lighted. 'That's good talk!' he said. We haven't lost any cattle or horses up here yet. We didn't intend to,' he added, smiling as pleasant as a school-ma'am. 'Glad to know these reds have a responsible guarantee with 'em. So long!' and he cantered away.

"Then Mac and I talked with Two-Strike. It didn't take long to bring him to reason. He had seen that the flag of this country would protect even the ndian. Though his band had lost several ponies and had two men badly hurt in the fight, they returned to the agency peaceably.

"And after that warning to the department at Washington, we had rations for our Indians."—Youth's Companion.

Curtain Calls in Germany.

"There is an unwritten code of etiquette among actors in regard to curtain calls that appears to differ widely in different countries," says Mr. P. Short.

"A friend of mine was recently telling me about the custom that obtains in this respect in certain theatres and opera houses in German cities, and from what he says it is exactly the reverse of what it is here. Over there the star or leading player takes the first curtain call alone. If there is a second curtain call, the star and associate player of the opposite sex appear on the stage to respond to it, and should a third call from the audience be given, the entire company appears in answer to it. The customs of our stage generally reverse this procedure. Among us the first curtain call is responded to by the entire company, the second by three or four or five of the principal players; the third by the leading man and woman alone, and then, if there are more, by the star or leading player.

"This is, of course, dealing with the subject in a general way and considering the circumstances as those which may ordinarily obtain. Where two or three players only are concerned in the scene that brings the applause, why, naturally, the other members of the company would have no part in the responses.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Background of the Human Eye.

A highly important invention affecting optical science in general, and the further development of the eye specialist's profession in treating eye diseases and faulty vision in particular, was recently made in Berlin. According to a German exchange, the assistant of the University Clinic of the Royal Charity Hospital, Dr. Walther Thorner, has succeeded in solving a problem which has received much attention from many others before him, but with little or no success. He has managed to photograph the background of the eye and obtain good pictures of it, too. His invention represents a material improvement on the ophthalmoscope invented by Helmholtz in 1850. The latter, however, only admitted of viewing the background of the eye.

The fact that all attempts to photograph the interior or the background of the eye had remained fruitless so far was due to the peculiar construction of the eye. It is difficult to light up the interior to such an extent as to enable one to take a photograph of it, and even in the use of strong sources of light the exposure would require so much time that the eye would have to be fixed, which would mean great inconvenience to the patient. Now Dr. Thorner has constructed an apparatus with which he first succeeded in photographing the eyes of animals, especially cats.—Jewelers' Circular.

THE PELICAN AND THE HAWK.

A pelican filled his pouch with pelf
He gathered on land and water;
And when he was laid upon the shelf,
Since he could not take it with himself,
He willed it to his daughter.

Pearls there were in the pouch of wealth,
And dredgings of gold and silver;
For the wise old bird, while he kept his health,
Grew fat and rich with the hoard of stealth,
And all he could earn and pilfer.

A gay young hawk on a foreign shore
Heard the squack of the old bird's daughter;
He trained him well on his family lore,
Counted the ducats he needed sore,
And crossed the briny water.

He wooed the pelican twenty days
(His wiwgs had not miscarried),
She showed her gold with every phrase—
Pelicans squack such funny ways!—
He won her—and he married!

It wasn't the pelican maid herself
The hawk desired to win;
'Twas more the glittering pouch of pelf
The rich old bird upon the shelf
Had tucked beneath her chin.

They have gone to a foreign shore to dwell,
Pelican and hawk, together,
In a house of gold, by a pearly dell;
A nest egg?—yes—but the chick!—ah, well,
That's a bird of a different feather!

"The Unknown Army."

It is interesting to learn that what the commissioner calls "the unknown army," that is, the living soldiers of the civil war who have not applied for pensions, numbers about 200,000, or about 30 percent of the total number of survivors, who are placed at about 900,000. This "unknown army" is applying for pensions at the rate of about 14,000 a year. Mr. Ware estimates that if the pension laws remain unchanged this army in five more years will be reduced about 60,000, and in ten years will cease to be a factor. The Union soldier who has the distinction of being the first to have a claim allowed at the pension office appears to have been one Leopold Charrier, a member of Company G of the Twelfth Regiment, New York Militia Infantry, whose claim was allowed August 12, 1861. Mr. Charrier, it appears from the record, was discharged from the service August 6, 1861, because of a gun shot wound through both arms, received while at drill by accidental discharge of a musket. The woman who obtained certificate number one as the widow of a Union soldier was Mrs. Caroline Ohl of Washington, D. C., whose husband was killed in a skirmish at Great Falls, Md., in June, 1861.—Leslie's Weekly.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

A DISCOURSE ENTITLED "ULTIMATE AMERICA."

A Patriotic Address by the Rev. J. Alexander Jenkins, Pastor of Immanuel Congregational Church—This Country the Spiritual Teacher of the Nations.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—In Temple Israel the Rev. J. Alexander Jenkins, pastor of Immanuel Congregational Church, delivered an address to a large audience on "Ultimate America, the Spiritual Teacher of the Nations." He said among other things:

It is a commonplace of the newer thinking that the evolutionary process culminates in the soul of man, the whole mighty movement being satisfactorily explained, according to the thinking of the theistic evolutionist, when matter endowed with life and perfected through countless generations, has at last given to the mind of the human being the instrument for the elementary exercise of its endless life. The struggles of the [illegible] soul. The student of [illegible] hears the groans [illegible] travailings of the nations through the centuries, and his natural and legitimate query, as he beholds the rise and fall of nations, is, Where lies the goal of the peoples and what justifies the toils and agonies of the race? The answer to this inevitable question is this: Almighty God is leading the nations toward the goal of the highest life, and the struggles of the ages find justification in the birth of the world-soul. And if the fact that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, so that he became a living soul is sufficient recompense for the bloody brute battles of the world's gray dawn, the thought that He will breathe a soul into the nations should likewise be deemed ample compensation for the gropings and grapplings of the aspirants for national permanency and supremacy.

The American colonists were not the first men to fight for independence, but the motives that produced the Declaration of Independence made their fight epoch marking as no other fight had ever been. Other nations had given up slavery, but no nation was ever before called upon to furnish so awful a proof of sincerity of motive in striking the shackles from the limbs of the enslaved. Other nations have had to deal with the problem of undesirable aliens, but no nation ever felt as feels America the imperativeness of a course of action based upon righteousness and justice. Other nations have seized the territory of the weak and helpless, but none has felt such deep, unselfish solicitude for a dependent people as has characterized our country in her dealings with a primitive people committed to her care as the outcome of her intervention in the interests of humanity. Other nations have had to effect adjustments between employer and employe, but no nation has ever been called upon to effect such an adjustment when the conditions presented revealed so clearly the fact that a great principle of universal importance is involved. The settlement of the "labor problem" in democratic America means the settlement for the world, for here the employer of the highest type meets the worker of the highest type, and the final result will be in keeping with the character of the contestants.

So we are learning the lesson of deliberateness; and one of the most promising signs of the times is the tendency to deal with great questions cautiously and calmly. The result of this course will be that what the new America settles will stay settled. She will settle, and that for all time, the question of the rights of inferior peoples, the question as to the character of the education most to be desired, the question of the relation of employer to employed. America is to-day solving the accumulated problems of the ages. And God is willing that she should have time to complete her task.

In view of what has been said, it will strike us as a fact of solemn import that our country is preparing for her yet larger service through the slow, constant development of her religious consciousness. The existence and growth of this consciousness the superficial observer of our life and institutions might feel inclined to deny. Nevertheless, we are convinced that this most necessary condition for present and future leadership exists.

Where shall we seek for this religious consciousness? Shall we look for it in the institutions set apart as avowedly religious? No man has the right to scoff at organized religion. Our schools, our churches, our synagogues are, on the whole, true to their mission. But the truly effective religious consciousness must be found in other places as well—in the editorial sanctum, in the political gathering, in the mart and the busy street. Let us find this consciousness in these places, no matter what its form, and we shall have as good a guarantee of the divine favor as though we had gazed upon overflowing houses of worship and listened to the eloquence of the elect. The religious spirit which makes for American pre-eminence may be discerned in many phases of the national life, but it is strikingly evident in the new press, the new politics and the new social ideal. There are many, doubtless, who would not concede that the press of the country furnishes an evidence of growing national righteousness, but the fact remains, that in the newspapers of our land there is a distinct trend toward righteousness and godliness.

The truthfulness and force of our present contention will seem to many hard to reconcile with the well-known fact that in the United States the avowedly religious journals are steadily losing ground. But even this fact, rightly interpreted, is not an evidence of national decay. The religious papers of to-day have a choice between degeneration and evolution. The signs of degeneration are stubborn adherence to denominational shibboleths, fierce championship of exhausted dogmas and growing impatience with progressive interpretation of truth. The signs of evolution are the throwing overboard of useless issues, and the adoption of the leading features of the great "secular" papers. The great religious papers of the country to-day are such in name only. Were the contents of one of these papers rearranged and printed in newspaper form it would pass as a newspaper, minus the newspaper's up-to-date freshness. In the secular press, on the other hand, there is steady progress and increasing vitality. The moral tone of the American people is reflected in the new journalism, and the fact that the citizens of the republic desire righteousness is patent to all who seek the underlying motives of journalistic enterprise of the highest type. And this fact is most significant when we remember that these great agencies of publicity, free discussion and education have a direct bearing upon the shaping of the ideals of the inflowing millions of our population. The spirit of the American journalism is communicated to the Americanized representatives of these foreign peoples, and they in turn give it to their dependent fellows through the columns of their publications. We have no right to assume that papers published in foreign tongues stand for Old World anarchy; we should, the rather, heartily concede the fact that these journals, printed in Italian, German, Hebrew, Welsh and other languages, constitute a great missionary agency for doing foundation work in Americanism and altruism. Indeed, the very fact that our citizens in the making eagerly grasp these informing agencies is a prophecy of great things to come. We have here no isolated, lethargic, self-satisfied aggregation of human beings, but we have millions of men who are being inspired by the air of a free country and by her institutions. The newspapers in the hands of these men are as banners waving encouragement to faraway na[illegible] darkness and distress.

W[illegible] we have not [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] struggles of the [illegible] soul. The student of [illegible] hears the groans [illegible] travailings of the nations through the centuries, and his natural and legitimate query, as he beholds the rise and fall of nations, is, Where lies the goal of the peoples and what justifies the toils and agonies of the race? The answer to this inevitable question is this: Almighty God is leading the nations toward the goal of the highest life, and the struggles of the ages find justification in the birth of the world-soul. And if the fact that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, so that he became a living soul is sufficient recompense for the bloody brute battles of the world's gray dawn, the thought that He will breathe a soul into the nations should likewise be deemed ample compensation for the gropings and grapplings of the aspirants for national permanency and supremacy.

The American colonists were not the first men to fight for independence, but the motives that produced the Declaration of Independence made their fight epoch marking as no other fight had ever been. Other nations had given up slavery, but no nation was ever before called upon to furnish so awful a proof of sincerity of motive in striking the shackles from the limbs of the enslaved. Other nations have had to deal with the problem of undesirable aliens, but no nation ever felt as feels America the imperativeness of a course of action based upon righteousness and justice. He doesn't know the milky way from a streak of snow in the moonlight—doesn't know the flickering of a barnyard lantern from a threatened eclipse of the sun. Our editor—B. Franklin, what an editor! He couldn't write 'yours truly.' And punctuate! Why, he couldn't place a period after the word sausage. Why, he couldn't slip a comma in between the fool and jimjam. I am on my way, gentlemen, to get something to eat. At the next village I will distribute six yards of patent medicine ads. for a piece of home-made bread and a hard-boiled egg; but that will be better than remaining at your table hearing the cronch of the pithy radish and observing the wind from the fly-brush blow the bread off the table. We may never meet again—we never shall, if I see you first. Yours,

The Quill did not appear again; indeed, the great university was laughed into nothingness. The President is now a justice of the peace, while the editor, Colonel Gapps, is roustabout at a tollgate.—Opie P. Read, in Artist Printer.

China and the War.

The underlying belief that the Chinese, if not China, may be made a militant Power probably lies at the bottom of the idea of dividing China. What seems easier than to lop off Manchuria for the Russians, the Yalu for the Japanese, Shantung for the Germans, the upper valley of the Yangtse-Kiang for the French, and the rich coast provinces for the British? But dividing China is like dividing a pond by putting down nets; you may keep the fish from swimming freely about, but, after all, it is one water, and the moment a hole is made in the net it is again one shoal of fish.

This conviction of the physical impossibility of tearing China into fragments immensely strengthens the insistence of the United States that China shall not be nominally divided into spheres of commercial influence, that in all parts of the empire there shall be equal privileges of trade and of intercourse, and here comes in the great solicitude of the Administration over the present war.—Albert Bushnell Hart, LL. D., in Harper's Weekly.

Consensus.

"What is your idea of happiness?" was asked.

Said the millionaire: I should be happy if I could spend my money where it would be of some real benefit. This, and a good digestion.

Said the poor man: Happiness is having enough money to spend without anxiety.

Said the society woman: Happiness is rest.

Said the wash woman: To be able to dance all night, and lie abed as long as I wanted to the next morning.

Said the soldier: To live peaceably all the rest of my life.

The sailor: To feel the solid earth under my feet for the rest of my days.

The artist: To paint a picture to please myself, and not the public.

The author: To have time enough to think.

The diplomat: To be myself.

The journalist: To tell the truth.

The wise man: To be a fool.

The fool: To be a wise man.—Life.

Day of Scientific Feeding.

The search for the fountain of youth has not been abandoned, as the numerous dietary experiments abundantly attest. Science is the modern Ponce De Leon. The era of strictly scientific living for the most of us has not dawned, and is afar off, but may we not hope that the time is coming when the most casual caller at the lunch counter will order as many grams of protein, fat, carbohydrates and the rest as his physical or intellectual necessities seem to require? The man who is about to produce an epic will see to it that his bill of fare contains the requisite amount of nitrogen and phosphorus, and that he secures a sufficient number of calories of heat value daily.

Struggle and Strength.

Strength comes only through struggle—through struggle and earnest work—never through a frantic beating against the bars nor through self pity. Ill health is a prison of your own building, a prison wherein you are locked by your own thoughtlessness and lack of self control. Circumstances have something to do with it, and you may have inherited a tendency toward disease. In that case circumstances must be altered and inherited weakness outgrown. Both can be done. Earnest thinking and thoughtful work will move mountains.—Maxwell's Talisman.

When Easter Was Not Popular.

Our New England forefathers were sternly opposed to Lent; they had a grand sufficiency of fast days in the wilderness, in the long, hard winter of want and suffering, when the Pilgrims' cry for help went up in prayer to the Pilgrims' God.

Prosperity, however, seems to have brought changes with it. After the Revolutionary War Easter sermons were preached, especially by the Presbyterians, and churches were decorated with flowers, though New England was the last section to adopt the festival upon which the Pilgrims looked with peculiar abhorrence.

ALASKA AS IT REALLY IS.

FEW HAVE A TRUE IDEA OF ITS ENORMOUS SIZE.

Its Wonderful Natural Riches and Possibilities of Development Celebrated—Grandest Scenery in the World and Sufficient Resources to Support Ten Million People.

The President of the Alaska Geographical Society, writes as follows in the National Magazine:

Alaska is a great empire, of the enormous size of which few people have any just conception. It is more than 550 times as large as the State of Rhode Island and nearly equals in area all the States of the Union east of the Mississippi River. It has the grandest scenery in the world, and resources sufficient comfortably to support ten millions of people.

Through the heart of the vast territory flows the mighty Yukon River, the largest in North America, larger and longer than the Mississippi. On this great river one may ride for more than 2,000 miles with as much comfort as upon the Hudson.

The valley of the Yukon has been pronounced richer than the valley of the Missiouri, and it will undoubtedly some day support an immense population.

People in Pennsylvania are very much interested in coal, and know what a source of wealth it is. I believe that there is more coal in Alaska than in Pennsylvania.

Coal is but one of Alaska's many mineral resources. The enormous deposits of copper in the Copper River region are now attracting great attention. It has even been predicted by Capt. Healy, who was a resident of Montana for twenty-four years and Alaska seventeen years, that Alaska will in the next thirty years produce more mineral wealth than the whole United States has produced in the thirty years just ended.

The Russians made enormous fortunes in furs, and millions more have been made by Americans since the purchase by the United States. Alaska has the richest fisheries of the world. Competent authorities declare its fisheries greater than those of Newfoundland and the North Sea combined.

There are vast forests of timber in Alaska which remain practically untouched.

Alaska is certain to become a great agricultural country. It will some day produce more grain and of a better quality than any State in the Union. It has been within my lifetime that the cultivation of wheat was begun in Manitoba, Dakota and Minnesota, and, as a rule, the further north the better the quality of the grain grown.

The fact that thousands upon thousands of acres of the finest grasses cover the river valleys from four to six feet high is evidence of the great opportunities for stock raising. Cattle can be wintered in southern Alaska with far less difficulty and expense than in Montana, and in many places cattle will look out for themselves and keep fat all winter. I believe that Alaska is certain to become one of the greatest stock raising regions of the world.

The United States Government has for several years past had experts at work carefully investigating its resources and possibilities, and after these years of painstaking investigation makes public its estimate that there are at least 100,000 square miles of territory in Alaska admirably adapted to agriculture. Prof. C. C. Georgeson of the United States Department of Agriculture says: "There could never be a greater misconception in regard to a geographical fact than the popular idea that Alaska is a snow covered waste. As a matter of fact, one can travel from one end of the Yukon to the other in summer and never see snow. On the contrary, one will see a tangle of luxuriant vegetation, large forests and such delicacies as wild raspberries, red currants, huckleberries and cranberries in profusion. In places the grass grows as high as a man's shoulders."

The finest vegetables I have ever eaten were grown on the Yukon and served on the river steamers. Prof. Macoun of the Canadian Government Botanical Department explains this fact by saying that "the vegetables are finer than grown elsewhere in the world because the twenty-four hours of sun in summer rushes the growth so that they have no time to harden or grow tough, and are sweet and delicious and almost melt in the mouth."

The greatest mystery to most people is the climate of Alaska. Cherishing a vague idea of a barren waste of snow and ice, it comes as a rude shock to learn that it is very much like Pennsylvania, New York and New England in summer; and in winter, while cold at the north, peculiarly mild in the south, so mild that from Sitka a thousand miles west the mean winter temperature is very much like that of the city of Washington. Of course, in a region of such vast extent as Alaska, stretching as it does further east and west than from New York to San Francisco, and further north and south than from the Gulf to the Great Lakes, there is naturally a great diversity of climate. The peculiar modifying influence along the whole southern coast for 2,000 miles is the Japanese current, which tempers this region as it does California, Washington and British Columbia.

Over vast areas of the interior the summer is warm and delightful, and vegetation grows with an almost semi-tropical luxuriance. There are millions of birds. The winter in the interior is cold, clear and exhilarating, much the same as in Dakota and Manitoba.

What now is most urgently needed is railroads in all parts of Alaska. They are indispensable, and would prove immensely profitable enterprises. It is strange that capital should be timid about constructing these lines, considering that every mile that has thus far been built has more than paid for itself within a year.

GARDENS OF THE ALCAZAR.

One of Their Greatest Charms Is the Apparent Lack of Cultivation.

The garden of the Alcazar is one garden composed of several, each opening into the other by steps descending from a terrace or through arches in marble or living green.

All the gardens are surrounded with wonderful hedges of myrtle, juniper or box. If the gardens of the Alcazar should be stripped of all but their hedges, palm trees and magnolias they would still be most wonderful. In some places walls about eight feet in height separate the gardens, and against these walls are trained orange and peach trees, with a tangle of jassamine and roses climbing among them as they will. In fact, the flowers grow in such careless and natural profusion and there is seemingly so little cultivation that one might almost think the hoe of the gardener had not visited the place for a hundred years. This very carelessness was one of the greatest charms of the place and added to the effect of age that clung to everything. Modern gardeners would stand aghast at such apparent neglect.

I recognized that the very lack of modern care was artistic and suitable and yet wondered, if the place were mine, whether I could forbear the use of shears, trowel and hoe. The hedges were trimmed. These, with some orange trees growing in a solid mass of gree along some fifty feet of palace wall and reaching to the very roof, alone bore signs of the gardener's shears.

The flower beds were of intricate shapes, filled with a tangled mass of flowers and always surrounded with box. And such box! My heart sank within me when I thought of the box in my garden at home, where not even a hundred mild winters and a hundred rainy summers could give growth like the smallest of that at the Alcazar.

The bouquet that is considered in Seville as a model of beauty and elegance was to our eyes a most hideous thing. In shape like a pyramid, about fourteen inches high, it was formed by fastening a magnolia bud to the top of a smooth, round stick and then winding flowers tightly around the stick, each succeeding row becoming larger, so that at the bottom the bouquet was probably two feet around. It was a frequent sight to see two men carrying a pole between them with from six to a dozen of these bouquets swinging, heads down, from the pole.—Scribner's.

RARE "DEVIL" FLOWERS.

Single Plant Worth $10,000 in a $1,000,000 Orchid Collection.

The flower pot was like a toy. The moss in it would not have made a teaspoonful. Out of the moss two tiny leaves, each less than a half-inch long, peeped. They were variegated leaves, their right halves were green and their left halves white. Pot, earth, leaves and all, this plant would have slipped easily into a man's waistcoat pocket.

And yet $10,000 had been offered for it. It did not weigh an ounce. There was nothing to it but two tiny leaves upon a stem less than an inch long. Yet it was worth $10,000.

It was an orchid in the collection of Mrs. George B. Wilson of Philadelphia. Mrs. Wilson's orchids are said to be the finest in America—some say the finest in the world. The little plant was a cross between a Cattleya aurea and a Cattleya labiata. It was two years old, and it would be five years more before it would begin to bloom. But it was the only orchid in the world with leaves half green and half white, and therefore Sanders, the English collector, seeing it in November, said:

"I will give you $10,000 for it."

But Mrs. Wilson's gardener replied:

"We buy all we can, but we never sell."

Mrs. Wilson lives at Forty-third and Walnut streets, Philadelphia, says the New York Tribune. Then years ago she bought the orchids of Erastus Corning of New York—40,000 plants, which Mr. Corning had been forty years in gathering. She engaged for her gardener Alphonse Pericat, who had been head gardener at the orchid farm of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild of Paris, and she sent off, with a roving commission, Henri Barrault, a skilled orchid hunter. For the last ten years, thanks to the daring and the industry of Barrault, and thanks to the patient art of Pericat, her collection has been growing greatly. It is practically a collection that represents fifty years of work. It numbers 20,000 plants, over 2,000 of which are unique, with duplicates nowhere in the world, and it is worth (as Erastus Corning spent $100,000 on it, as Mrs. Wilson has spent $250,000 on it, and as Pericat has propagated from it over 2,000 hybrids), close upon $1,000,000. It is said to be the best collection in America, and Sanders says it is in many respects the best collection in the world.—Chicago Record-Herald.

TEA GROWING IN INDIA.

LIFE OF PLANT FROM SEED TO FINISHED PRODUCT.

Stages of Curing the Leaf—Withering, Fermentation and Sorting—Unbroken Buds the Finest Grade—Refiring the Final Process.

Well-cared-for tracts of level or mountainous land are used in India for the cultivation of tea. The term "gardens" is used to denote these tracts, which vary in size from 100 acres in the hill districts of the lower Himalaya mountains to 1500 acres on the plains. The tea bush is raised from seed, which is now carefully planted about one inch deep in a nursery of soft, fertile soil. In the early days of tea planting the seed was sometimes scattered broadcast from the back of an elephant. The young plants require a rich soil and a very moist heat in order to thrive well. When the plants have obtained a height of 12 inches they are transplanted. It is generally considered that a bush requires about 16 square feet of well-cultivated soil around it to gain the best results. The tea is planted in regular rows, either insquares or triangles. The triangular planting, which giving each bush exactly the same space from its neighbors, effects a saving of nearly 15 per cent space, as it is possible to plant 115 bushes in the same area that would be occupied by 100 plants in rectangular planting.

By the third year the plants should be from four to five feet high, and they are then pruned down to about 20 inches, so as to promote the growth of new branches and tender shoots and thus produce a larger number of new leaves. The methods of pruning vary greatly and in some cases the plants are pruned before they are taken from the nursery. The bush is so pruned and trained that instead of growing tall it is kept short and broad in order to furnish a greater plucking surface. When the young bushes have developed succulent shoots upon which there are four or five leaves they are said to have produced their "first bush"—that is, they have sprouted sufficiently to pluck. During the rains successive "flushes" occur at intervals with 15 to 20 days, varying according to the soil, cultivation and climate. The top part of the shoot is the only portion that is plucked. It includes the bud and the first two or three leaves, according as fine, medium or coarse tea is wanted, for tea can only be made from the young and tender leaves, and the younger and tenderer the leaf the better the quality of the tea.

Plucking is performed by turning the thumb downward and nipping off the shoot between the thumb nail and the forefinger. It is done almost entirely by women and children, as it is comparatively easy work and does not require any physical strength. Each plucker carries a large open-mouth bamboo basket about two feet in diameter and three feet in length, tapering toward a rounded bottom. The leaf is thrown into this basket and protected by a covering from the rays of the sun, which would otherwise cause it to turn red. Late in the afternoon the leaf is brought to the factory, where it is carefully weighed and examined by the manager and his assistants and the several amounts entered in a book against each plucker's name. To earn a full day's pay a certain number of pounds of leaf must be brought in. This amount is determined beforehand by the manager, and varies, as it depends upon the condition of the flush. Extra pay is given for whatever quantity is brought in above the required amount of the day, and in this way many good workers earn double pay during the height of the season. The rate of pay for the extra work is always relatively higher than the regular wages in order to offer an inducement for hard work.

The leaf is taken to the withering room after it has been weighed, and evenly spread upon wide trays. The men who spread the leaves work with remarkable dexterity, making a pound of the green leaf cover about one square yard. By morning the leaf is sufficiently withered to be rolled without being broken, and is then taken to the rolling machine. The object of rolling is to liberate the juices of the leaf cell, and during the operation the leaf changes color from a bright green to a slightly yellowish tint. In former years the rolling was done by hand, and 80 pounds was a good day's work for one man; now the machine does about three times that amount in one hour. The rolled leaf is then taken to a cool, dark, moist room, where it is spread out on a cement floor, or in long trays, and covered with a wet cloth, where it is left to ferment or oxidize, which turns the leaf a dull, rusty color. This fermentation is a most important part of the preparation of the tea leaf, and upon the process depend the flavor and appearance. There is no rule for the length of time of the operation, one garden's product requiring six hours, while another may take only two. After fermentation has proceeded far enough, the leaf is rolled again for a few minutes, when it is taken to the firing machine, and subjected to a blast of hot air, between 240 and 300 degrees Fahrenheit, for 20 minutes. This instantly stops fermentation and removes the moisture from the leaf, and causes it to curl up and blacken. It comes out of the machine three-fourths fired, and is then again fired at a much lower temperature. It is now dry and crisp, and is the tea of commerce. During the process of curing it is estimated that about three-quarters of the weight of the green leaf is lost.

The tea is then taken to the sorting room, where it is first spread on a cement floor, and women carefully pick out any foreign matter, such as little sticks and pieces of stone, which somehow find their way into the mass of tea. It is then put into a long sieve in which are wire meshes of different sizes. The tea which drops through the different meshes is called "unbroken tea," which is the finest grade, as it is made up of the tip of the bud and the delicate part of the leaf. The tea which does not find its way through the meshes traverses the entire length of the sieve and falls into large baskets, from which it is taken and placed in a machine to be broken up fine and again sifted and automatically sorted into various grades. The names given to the different qualities are as follows: The unbroken teas are divided into Flowery Orange Pekoe, Orange Pekoe, Pekoe, and Pekoe Souchong. The broken teas include Broken Orange Pekoe, Broken Pekoe Souchong, Broken Pekoe, Fannings, and Dust. The division into these classes is not uniform among the different tea gardens, and as the names given to the various grades are more or less optional, some confusion arises when attempts at comparison are made. Just before it is packed into lead-lined chests containing 100 pounds, it is refired a short time to remove any traces of moisture gathered while being worked.

LONELY TELEGRAPH LINES.

Repairs in the Australian Desert—Savages and the Wires.

A break occurred about three months ago in the telegraph line that extends up the Shire river from the Zambesi to Lake Nyasa. In such countries, where there is little civilization, weeks sometimes elapse before accidents to the telegraph can be repaired. On this route, however, the stations are only about 50 miles apart and the line is usually put in order within three or four days after the break occurs.

Probably the line with the longest distance between repair stations is that which crosses the great Australian desert from Adelaide on the south to Port Darwin on the north side of the continent, 1700 miles. There are no human inhabitants in the desert, except a few wandering blacks. The stations are about 200 miles apart.

At each station there are usually two operators and four line repairers. They have no nearer neighbors than the occupants of the next station, and of course, the men lead a very lonely life.

Whenever a break occurs two men start from either of the stations between which the line has become unworkable. They take with them camels, loaded with food and water, repair implements and a field telegraph apparatus.

At every ten miles each party taps the wire and communicates with its own station. So each moves on until one or the other finds and repairs the breakages.

Communication being restored, the news is conveyed to the other party and both retrace their steps to their quarters without having seen one another. They very seldom see a white man, except their own comrades.

Many persons have wondered how telegraph lines can be protected from barbarous natives through whose territory they pass. This problem has been successfully solved both in Australia and in Africa, though the method in one continent differs from that in the other.

When the line was being stretched across Australia it was feared that the blacks would constantly interfere with the wire. The plan adopted has worked like a charm and the blacks have never touched the wires, though on several occasions they have attacked the stations and killed operators and repairers.

Every effort was made to fill the savages with awe of the wire. Their nerves and imagination were worked upon by telling every black who was met while the line was being built that the wire was the white fellow's devil, and not a single native came within reach who was not treated to a gratuitous electric shock. There is not a black in Australia who is not convinced that the white fellow's devil is something to let severely alone.

In Africa, on the other hand, every chief of the tribes through whose land the telegraph lines extend is in the pay of one or another of the colonial governments. He receives a small monthly subsidy, and is held responsible for the wire in his territory.

The will of these chiefs is law, and although many hundreds of miles of wire are now extended through various parts of barbarous Africa, only two or three instances have occurred where the natives have interfered with it. In fact, the natives are used to some extent to keep the lines in order.—New York Sun.

Declined to Strike Out.

Danny Coogan, the new baseball coach engaged by the University of Pennsylvania, was a well-known baseball man when he went to the university in the early nineties. He was the receiving end of the famous Bayne-Coogan battery.

When Bayne died poor Danny was nearly heart-broken. Danny was very popular at the university, and possessed a fund of Irish wit and humor that generally kept the crowd a-laughing. He is a little fellow with a big voice.

He tells a good story on himself when he started out in life after college. His father had been giving him good advice about his career.

"All I have to say is this: You are now going out into the world, my son, and you'll find it quite different from college life. The road will be rough and stormy. But strike out, my boy, strike out."

"Not on your life," said Danny. "I'm going to be a baseball player."—Philadelphia Press.

IMPORTANT

THE PEOPLE'S PRIMARY WILL BE HELD ON TUESDAY, JULY 26th, 1904.

W. F. DE SHAZO,

Who is out for tax collector, was born and raised in Chilton county in the "Mulberry neighborhood" and is yet a resident of beat 3. He is a young man about 30 years of age, of quiet, sober and industrious habits, and has always voted the populist and republican tickets. He has never been a party to a law suit of any kind whatever, not even as a witness He is apparently ably qualified to fill the position if he is successful.

ENOCH H. ADAMS.

Mr. E. H. Adams is out for the office of county treasurer. He is a young man, well qualified for the position, having worked in the office of the probate judge for several years, thereby acquiring a knowledge of county affairs, for which opportunity he feels very grateful to the people of Chilton county, realizing that it was to them he owed thanks. He has always voted the people's ticket, and when his father, Probate Judge S. M. Adams, saw fit to change his politics, Enoch stood true to his first convictions and the people's cause, and says now that he proposes to stand by his convictions, even if kindred and friends oppose.

B. H. WELLS.

Mr. B. H. Bells, who is a candidate for tax collector, was born in Lee county, but when he was ten years old his family moved to Chilton, where he has resided ever since. Mr. Wells was raised as a farmer and has worked at that business all his life. In his early manhood he voted the democratic ticket, but in 1886, when the democrats counted out the rightfully elected officers and put in others and were sustained by democratic courts, he left that party and joined the people, where he still "stands with both feet," for he can't forget the "dotted tickets" that were sent out in this county to catch as many of the honest voters as possible, so they could be thrown out. Mr. Wells is a self-made man, and if elected would efficiently discharge the duties of his office.

MOSES ROBINSON.

In standing for commissioner from the fourth district, Mr. Robinson has many supporters, who maintain that he was one of the best commissioners that this county has ever had. He has served twenty years in this capacity, and from Judge Callen up to the present time he has always been put in office at the proper time to help break in the new probate judge, so it seems very appropriate that he should resume the office this fall and help to initiate the new judge we will put in. One part of his record is especially to be commended. While a commissioner he never missed a meeting of the court, regular or special; snow nor rain could not keep him away from his post of duty. He helped build the jail; also our court house, and is a good man to represent the fourth district, which is the most populous in thecounty, consisting as it does of beats 4, 5, 6 and 10.

T. G. MILLING.

Mr. Milling is a candidate for tax assessor and is highly spoken of by his neighbors in beat 8. In this connection we can not refrain from publishing an extract from a letter on the subject from one of his neighbors, as follows:

* * * *

"I wish to say a few words to let the brethren know that I am yet alive. I wish to say to my populist brethren and friends that since the democratic cloud has blown away and the people's sun is now shining bright and clear our prospects are good, were never better in fact. I am glad to say that Brother T. G. Milling has decided to run for tax assessor. Now, friends, let me say to you that he is the only officer we have asked for in beat 8. We do not ask for him because he lives in beat 8, but because he is the man we want, because he is thoroughly competent to fill the office, because he has done eight years' work and has not made any mistakes. He 'totes fair' with us and I am sure that he will 'tote fair' with the people of Chilton county. If you will all support him he will add strength to our party, for he has a lot of friends in the democratic party who will support him, not for anything he has done for them except he has always 'toted fair.'

"Success to the UNION.

"WILLIAM PRICE."

L. B. POUNDS.

The friends of Mr. L. B. Pounds will find his name in the list of announcements for tax assessor. All we wish to say is that we consider Mr. Pounds too well known to need an introduction to Chilton county people, for he has been a prominent figure in our politics for the last twelve or fifteen years, being one of the pioneers in the organization of the people's party and a strong, active and true worker under any and all circumstances. He was elected to represent Chilton county in the legislature of 1900-01, where he made a good record, securing the passage of several local bills, among which was the uniform text book law, etc. Mr. Pounds is well qualified to discharge the duties of the office to which he aspires, which is a great essential in the consideration of men for places of public service.

JOHN J. LETCHER.

This gentleman, who announces for tax collector, is well known to all members of the people's party, as he has always been with them. He is highly thought of in his community and is spoken of as a man who could accentably fill the position he aspires to. A man's neighbors are pretty good judges of a man's merits.

W. C. ROBINSON.

This gentleman announces for treasurer of our county and is very highly recommended for the office. Though only 35 years old, he has accumulated an independent fortune by his own efforts and is noted as a successful man of business. The county affairs would no doubt be entirely safe in his hands if our people should bestow on him the nomination.

BEAT ONE.

Please give me a little space in your valuable paper.

The farmers in this settlement are taking a great interest in their occupation this year. We have our corn all worked over the first time, and about half done planting cotton. The ground is in fine condition for making a good crop this year.

Now for a little about politics. I'll name a ticket, and if some one else can name a better one, I am with him: For probate judge, L. H. Reynolds; county clerk, J. W. Kicker; treasurer, E. G. Rollins; tax collector, J. W. Thomas; tax assessor, L. B Pounds; superintendent of education, J. W. Moore. This ticket will take all "O. K." in beat one.

FOX HUNTER.

OUR NEW JUDGE.

Hon. T. Scott Sayre is now the judge of the fifteenth judicial circuit. Judge Richardson having resigned his temporary appointment, as contemplated by Governor Jelks when he appointed him to fill Judge Winter's place. Governor Cunningham has appointed Mr. Sayre for the unexpired portion of the term, and as he is sure of election in November there will be no interval. Our county is to be congratulated on getting so good a man to fill the judicial chair.

PRODUCE THE LISTS.

If the "Loafer on the Corner" in last week's banner, who says "I know" will produce the poll sheets of the last democratic primary in this county THE UNION will guarantee to name not one only, but scores of men who were disqualified from voting by the laws of Alabama, but who DID PARTICIPATE in that primary. What the editor of THE UNION has to say about anything, he says in his editorial column, for which he holds himself personally responsible; he does not evade responsibility by writing under an alias.

A GOOD UTTERANCE.

In a number of counties in this state the apparent results of the last democratic primary, held on April 11th are challenged and contests instituted. The following editorial is from the MONTGOMERY JOURNAL of 22d inst. (the Journal is one of the very few democratic papers that has the courage to publish the truth about what goes on in its party). We heartily indorse the article and hope every grand jury in every county will look for and unearth and punish any and all violations of the laws of the state enacted for the ostensible purpose of protecting the ballot box:

PUNISH THE GUILTY.

"The Journal is surprised to note that there has been any fraud, or even cause for charge of fraud in the recent primaries.

"Contests have been instituted in several counties, and this would seem to indicate that the purpose and hopes of the framers of the new constitution and the new primary election law have been thwarted and blasted. Every effort was made to frame a statute under the new constitution that would secure absolutely fair elections and fair primaries. The penalties for fraud were made severe, and the protections that were intended to be thrown around the sacredness of the ballot was regarded as nigh perfect as it could be made under something new and untried; yet in Perry, in Houston, in many other counties, contests have been instituted to right alleged wrongs in the primary.

"These contests argue nothing against primaries, but they argue that the most carefully framed statutes throwing safeguards around the ballot can not always be depended on to prevent partisans in contests of the heated kind that have just been brought to an end in this state from taking all the risks of the severest penalties to secure the success of one candidate and the defeat of the other. But when the Perry committee meets and the committees in the other counties meet to investigate the alleged dishonesty of the primaries, if they find irregularities the matter should not stop there. The guilty persons should be punished.

"The grand juries should be appealed to, indictments found and the severest penalty of the law inflicted.

"Alabama expended a hundred thousand dollars for a new constitution, and the chief purpose of the constitution was to eliminate the ignorant and vicious vote and place the state in the hands of the white people, doing away with any alleged necessity for tampering with the ballot to secure white supremacy and a stable, honest government, and a man who would now steal a vote in the primaries, in a contest within the democratic party, is capable of doing worse things, to express it mildly, and if the Journal rightly judges the sentiment of the people there is no penalty that could be meted out to the offenders that would be regarded as too severe.

"Let the guilty be punished."—Montgomery Journal.

TAX NOTICES.

The delinquent tax notices are published in THE UNION by authority of the tax collector of Chilton county. While the banner can no doubt copy with advantage to itself many articles it finds in THE UNION it should give credit to that paper for such articles. Anything else is downright THEFT and a LIE to its patrons.

H. A. J. HARRIS.

This candidate for treasurer was born in Coosa county about 52 years ago. He was raised on a farm and received a common school education. He has been a resident of Chilton county about twenty years, during which time he has followed farming for a livelihood. For the past eight or nine years he has been deputy tax collector, which business he understands thoroughly, but his health is too poor to warrant him in offering for that office. Of late years, through an accident by which he lost part of one of his jawbones, he has been practically incapacitated from following a plow. Mr. Harris has been a people's party man since its inception, but has never asked for an office before, but is fully qualified to fill the position he is offering for.

J. BICE.

Mr. Bice is well known by the people in Chilton county, having resided at Strasburg (or Thorsby) for about thirty years, and having been a justice of the peace for a long time. He is competent and well qualified for the office he seeks. It is said that in the twenty years he was a justice that he only had one case reversed by the circuit court. Up to a few years ago Mr. Bice was aligned with the democratic party, but to give it in his own language, he says: "I was a democrat and worked hard for that party, but I finally decided that I was in the wrong party, so I went to the republican party, as that party stands for high tariff, and high tariff means prosperity to the people, and I am with them. If elected I promise to do my best to fill the office so that no one will regret that he voted for me."

MOSES ROBINSON.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Mrs. Becky Burnett died Thursday in Clanton of paralysis. She was in Phillip's store doing some shopping and was taken ill, and Dr. N. S. Johnson was called in, who had the lady removed to his home for treatment, but death ensued almost immediately after she was taken in the house. Mrs. Burnett, who was formerly a Miss Martin, leaves a husband, Mr Joe Burnett, and five children, the youngest of which is five years old She had been a sincere and consistent member of New Salem Baptist church for twenty-six years and was beloved by all who knew her—a good neighbor, a kind friend. She was buried at New Salem church on Friday, Rev W. J. Armstrong officiating, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends.

"WHEN THE DEMOCRATS WILL RULE."

"When the lion eats grass like an ox
And the fish-worm swallows the whale;
When terrapins knit woolen socks,
And the hare is outrun by the snail.

"When fish creep over dry land,
And elephants roost in the trees;
When insects in summer are rare,
And snuff never makes people sneeze.

"When plough-shares are made of gold,
And mules on velocipedes ride;
When billy-goats butt from the rear,
And women in dress take no pride.

"When feathers are found on hogs,
And wool on the hydraulic ram;
Then the democratic party will rule,
And this country won't be worth a d—n.

"VERBENA KID."

As the Polish language is placed under restriction in German Poland, Paderewski has forbidden the performance of his new opera, "Manru," in any German theater. He says that if the Polish language is not good enough to be used in Germany the Polish music might jar upon Prussian ears.

THE NATIONAL GAME.

Jimmy Bannon, late of Columbus, has signed with Newark.

Flick is batting in his old Philadelphia form for the Clevelands.

Jack Taylor is pitching better ball than ever for the St. Louis Nationals.

That wonderful pair of youngsters, Parent and Ferris, are faster than ever this season.

St. Louis appears to have picked up a jewel in "Spike" Shannon, the outfielder secured from St. Paul.

Comiskey says that he feels sure his reconstructed Chicago Americans will prove the surprise of the season.

Ned Hanlon says that young players overdo themselves in the spring, being anxious to make too good a start.

The great Hans Wagner has not rounded out to his game at all this spring, says a Pittsburg correspondent.

Billy Lauder, the retired New York National third baseman, is finding time from his law studies to coach the Columbia base ball team.

The Detroit Club has taken out a $5000 insurance policy on each one of its players, to guard against loss by railroad or other accidents.

Frank Selee has a great pitching staff, all of his men having made good. Chicago will have a great chance at the National League leaders.

The New Yorks claim that George Browne is the fastest sprinter in the National League, and are willing to match his against any comer for a purse.

Although Hans Wagner is regarded by many as the greatest ball player in America he admits that he has not seen a dozen games of ball in his life as a spectator.

Devlin, the new third baseman of the New York Nationals, is six feet tall, but is an excellent base runner. He led the Eastern League in this department of the game last year.

Russia's Sacred City.

Moscow, the Old Capital, Place of Shrines and Nihilists. :: ::

TO see a real Russian city it is absolutely necessary for the foreigner to visit Moscow.

Its narrow streets, countless minarets, Moorish architecture, and the ancient walls are full of interest to the stranger. Merchants from Siberia, China, Japan, Persia, Turkey, Syria and all parts of Eastern Europe journey to Moscow to dispose of their wares.

The markets are a babel of strange tongues, intensified by the violent gesticulations of the speakers.

Moscow is the Manchester of Russia and the centre of the commerce and wealth of that vast empire. The sturdy Muscovite merchants begin work early in the morning, and have all their business finished before St. Petersburg confreres are scarcely out of bed.

Napoleon the Great was the most important tourist who ever visited Russia. In the spacious courtyard of the Kremlin there are 869 pieces of cannon which were left behind him in the retreat of 1812.

These cannons, mostly bronze, were originally taken by Napoleon from the Prussians, Austrians, Italians, Spaniards and Portuguese during his various victorious campaigns.

Recently thousands of soldiers have passed through Moscow on their way to Manchuria and Siberia.

They marched through the silent streets at midnight or early in the morning, when the inhabitants were asleep. The military bands and waving of handkerchiefs by wives and sweethearts were missing from the scene. Nothing but the tap-tap of the drum was heard as the soldiers silently marched through the snow-clad streets on their way to the Siberian Railway station.

WHERE WAR IS DECLARED.

It is an ancient custom that war must be proclaimed from Moscow, and nowhere else in the Russian empire. The report that the Czar was to visit Moscow on January 21 gave rise to the rumor that war was to be declared with Japan, and caused a fall of stocks on the Russian markets.

For the Czars, the ancient capital has always been considered dangerous. It is the hotbed of socialism and revolutionary ideas in Russia, and it is the place where the students have been trying to organize revolts against the government during recent years.

On the day of the Feast of St. John (January 19), I went to the Kremlin to see the "blessing of the waters," performed by the Metropolitan and his assistants.

Thousands of peasants rolled in through the "Holy Gate," like a resistless tide, and assembled in the great square of the Kremlin, which overlooks the river. For hours they waited in the snow and icy blast in order to bare their heads and utter prayers as the holy relics were carried past by the priests.

I watched the enormous throng, numbering over 100,000, for three hours, as it was a far more interesting sight than the religious processions.

Men and women with matted hair and dull, staring eyes, trampled over each other without uttering a word. They came shambling along like a vast herd of buffaloes being driven into a stockade. There were no sounds of merry laughter or jesting to be heard on every side, as there would have been in England, but simply a sullen silence that grew oppressive as the hours sped by.

LACK OF ENTHUSIASM.

The peasants, standing high up on the church steps, when they wished to come down simply stepped on the people below them without saying a word, although there was really plenty of room to have avoided it. Those who were knocked down just got up, brushed off the hard snow, and looked sullenly after the man or woman who had caused their fall, but said nothing.

The Russian peasants are awful when once aroused, as they have no intelligence to enable them to be reasoned with. The mounted Cossacks can handle them up to a certain point, but when the peasants have stood enough they seize the Cossack and pull him off his horse and throw him on the ground.

Ten years ago there was a strike among workmen of a large mill a little way out of Moscow. The English manager, who was popular with the people, went outside to address the men and try to induce them to return to work.

Without uttering a sound they seized the unfortunate manager and literally rent him to pieces in full view of his horror-stricken wife, who was looking out of an upper window.

These are the wild hordes that the Moscow students are trying to arouse against the government. If once they succeed in getting the peasants to rise, heaven help those they meet on the way, because these terrible, ignorant slaves of the soil will show no mercy to man, woman or child.

MULTITUDES OF SHRINES.

There are about 1,500,000 inhabitants in Moscow, and 1750 churches and chapels. The Church of St. Basil, in the Kremlin, has eleven spires, and each one is a complete and separate chapel.

The Muscovites are more devote even than the people of St. Petersburg, and pray at all hours of the day and night. The streets literally teem with shrines on either side of the way. One the length of Chancery Lane in London would contain about six shrines.

Occupants of sleighs offer a prayer while the driver slows up and also performs his devotions.

Russians try to believe that they only tip on New Year's Day, but this is a myth, as the custom goes on night and day throughout the year. It has to be done on a larger scale on the first day of the year, that is all.

All Russians tip the porters of the hotels or restaurants each time they hang up their coats. Living in hotels is expensive, and hot baths cost 3s. 6d. in the bathroom. There is a police charge on passports at each town, and hotel bills are full of various extras, from candles up. It is absolutely neccessary to have candles in the bedroom in order to see the electric light.

During the present war crisis one did not hear the subject mentioned publicly in St. Petersburg, but at Moscow it was the subject of discussion and argument. The ancient capital is really the Manchester of Russia, and the Muscovite merchants greatly resemble the merchants of that northern English town with their sturdy business-like ways and plain, abrupt form of speech.

The wealth and prosperity of the Russian empire is collected in Moscow, and its men of standing and repute were all strongly against war with any nation. The masses of the common people were simply indifferent. Dynamite would not cause them to turn round quickly.

Beyond the cafe chantants at Ammon, one of the suburbs, and the opera and circus, there is very little in the way of amusements in Moscow.

Nearly every male in Russia wears an order of some kind or other. The most popular one, perhaps, is the "Sons of Continuous Rest." Including Sundays, there are 220 public holidays in Russia and this enables members of the order to act fairly up to its rules.

Uniforms are worn by at least two-thirds of the male population on some excuse or other. Amateur gypsy bandsmen are attired more gorgeously than Cossack officers. Russians pride themselves on the fact that they are the only nation where every individual washes once a week. I do not wish to deny this, as I may have met them on their non-washing days.

Moscow is far more healthy than St. Petersburg, but a dearer town to live in generally. The wealthy inhabitants spend money like water. Restaurants have to pay from 1000 to 1500 pounds sterling per annum for their wine and spirit license. Generally speaking it costs thirty pounds sterling a year to send a child to an ordinary day school, so education is very limited and the majority of the peasants cannot read or write.

The Writing of Letters.

A successful merchant once said: "In my younger days I used to write some pretty 'sassy' letters and signed them with a bold, large signature. On my first visit to New York I called on a house with whom I had done a large business, and introduced myself to the senior partner. He looked down at me a moment and said: 'So this is Mr. Blank, is it? I thought from your letters that you were at least seven feet high.'" A large proportion of people with whom the average man does business, form their impressions of him from correspondence, and as the good opinion of a correspondent, whether buyer or seller, is a valuable asset, the importance of good letter writing is obvious. There are three simple rules to be observed in correspondence. Keep cool, be plain, and boil it down. A "sassy" letter is a good outlet for the feelings, but when it is written the best thing to do is to tear it up. It never accomplishes any good if it is sent. No man raises himself in anybody's estimation by lowering his dignity, and an angry letter is a most undignified performance. A funny or sarcastic business letter is at best a risky experiment. A letter is not always read in the mood of the man who sends it, but of him who receives it, and one can never tell at long range how his correspondent's liver is acting. Time used in rewriting a letter is never wasted. It not only makes that letter better, but it helps to make the next one right the first time. The fewest words which make the meaning plain are enough, and anything more is too much.

The Retort in Kind.

W. D. Howells, the novelist, seldom fails, when any one has animadverted on his corpulence, to come out with a neat retort.

When Mr. Howells was consul at Venice a very lean and long American said to him one day jocosely:

"If I were as fat as you I'd go and hang myself."

"Well," said Mr. Howells, "if I ever take your advice I'll use you for a rope."—New York Tribune.

The Frozen Rabbit Industry.

Consul-General Bray, at Melbourne, Australia, has reported to the Department of Commerce and Labor upon the frozen rabbit industry, which has become an important one in Victoria. During the year 1903, 3,650,000 pairs of rabbits were exported, as compared with 3,244,210 pairs for the year 1902. —Washington Star.

AGRICULTURAL.

Feeding Rye to Hogs.

In feeding young hogs the rye may be fed either ground or soaked to growing hogs. It is not desirable to feed the whole grain dry. The better method of feeding is to grind the rye and feed it as slop. As to which is the more economical method, will depend on the question of grinding. The man who does his own grinding will find it more profitable to grind his rye and mix it with some corn and oats ground, feeding this combination as slop feed. Where it is necessary to pay for the grinding, the soaked grain will probably be more economical, as soaking costs but little; twelve hours' soaking is sufficient. Rye makes a splendid feed for growing pigs. It should be free from the disease known as "ergot," as rye which is thus affected is poisonous to stock.—J. H. Skinner, in Indiana Farmer.

Feeding Sheep in Troughs.

The design of a sheep trough illustrated this week is one which has been found entirely satisfactory, all things considered; it is some little trouble to make it, but its superiority over the average trough is so great that the labor spent in its construction will be well spent. As shown, the trough is twelve feet long, sixteen inches wide, twenty-two inches high, tapered as shown. With the exception of the slats, which are one-half inch thick, and two and one-half inches wide, the trough is made of inch lumber. The sides, which are nailed on the edge of the bottom, are six inches wide. The end pieces, or legs, are three inches wide and extend six inches below the bottom of the trough as shown. These legs are, of course, fastened securely to the trough after the latter is built and are independent of the rack itself. The rack is built by nailing the slats one foot apart on pieces three inches wide and twelve inches long, and are then hinged to the sides of the trough so that they rest on the edges of the trough when closed. Two hinges on each side (strap hinges, of course,) will be sufficient. At about the middle of the racks a bent hasp is fastened so that when the racks are in place they may be held so by turning the hasp to the other side over a staple and holding it in place with a bit of wood. In this arrangement either rack may be let down and the trough thus filled from either side.—Indianapolis News.

Two Mistakes.

It is a mistake to allow colts and calves to remain out in wood or field through winter storm and cold with no other shelter than a fence corner or tree trunk. Hardening them, some farmers call it. It surely is a case of the survival of the fittest if they survive it and do well. The bony, scraggy colt and calf brought up in the spring may live out its allotted time in spite of such usage, but it is at a loss. If you trust to the mercy of nature, she asks pay for it in shortened days or stunted growth. The other day, passing a large field, I saw one lonely calf, its back parts to the storm, covered with snow, shivering in the fence corner. Not a shed or straw stack in sight. And I thought of the proverb concerning the merciful man. Stock should never be turned into corn stalk or wood pasture in winter without having something provided in the way of shelter, which they can reach in stormy weather. Better not sell off all the straw to the strawboard, and use it in covering rude sheds for cattle and other stock. Our cattle are now far removed from their wild ancestry and do not bear cold and exposure well. Again, it is a second mistake to confine horses and cattle too closely. They require plenty of fresh air. The stables and cow sheds should be as warm as possible to make them, but they should be provided with good ventilators. Cows standing in a close atmosphere, laden with the poisonous exhalations from their own bodies, pass that poison back again to diseased lungs and milk. Some exposure to the cold and fresh air is necessary for the well being of the cow. It is a tonic that shows up quickly in her appearance. You can kill or weaken your stock by lack or care, and sometimes you can weaken them by too much care.—Ida Shepler, in The Epitomist.

Chutes For Grain.

In a great many farm barns the feeding grain is kept on the upper floor, and all that is fed out is carried down in one way or another. An American Agriculturist writer has a barn arranged thus and with no suitable space in the basement for a grain bin. As a way out of the difficulty he put in some grain chutes to run from the bins above, as shown in the accompanying cut. In some cases the chute could be allowed to drop directly from the bin above without any joints. Under few circumstances will a chute with less than half pitch be satisfactory. Oats will run through such a pitch with little difficulty. Wheat or rye will follow even a less slant, but with bulky stuff like ground feed there is considerable danger of clogging.

The interior of the chute ought not to be less than six inches square—six by eight would be even better. The interior should be free from all obstructions. The hopper shaped device just under the bin is quite necessary with oats and ground feed to give greater headway. The cut-off (A) is an ordinary draw supported by two cleats on either side. An extension is also made to the rear board of the chute so that it projects about half an inch outward, thus giving chance for holding a bag if necessary.—Connecticut Farmer.

Practical Farm Dairying.

Thinking, perhaps, the experience of a "common" farmer with a common herd would be interesting as well as instructive, I submit this: During the year ended April 1, 1903, our herd averaged a trifle over 300 pounds of butter each. We sold the same at twenty-two cents net. During the last year we sold part of the cows. At the present time I am milking four October cows, which make an average of forty-two pounds a week. It would be somewhat difficult to average them to April 1, but I am confident the four will make 400 pounds each next year. The cows are common Jerseys. Not one is registered. No two are alike, nor is there one which could compete in the show ring. In fact, they are what Mr. Pack would call "scrubs."

They are stabled in a rather cold upground stable, confined in stanchions, and let out twice a day for water and put back immediately, except on pleasant days, when they are given an hour's run. Their feed consists of plenty of good oat straw and timothy hay twice a day, and shredded corn fodder or chaff at noon. The grain ration is four quarts of whole oats and bran mixed and four quarts of buckwheat rinds once a day. They are watered at a trough from which the ice has been removed beforehand. They have no ensilage or summer grain; are well bedded, but never curried. They are treated kindly, but in no sense are they under different conditions than are, or should be, in reach of every farmer. We try to have them dry through September. While I fully agree that cows will do better with scientific surroundings and better breeding, still there is better money for the plain farmer with a common herd of full blooded Ayrshires, but the scrub cow is where we got the start to do so, and, in defense of this much abused beast, will say that many a one with a reasonable chance would surprise the fellows with the high-priced fancies.—Lee Hathaway, in Tribune-Farmer.

Poultry Notes.

See that there is vigor and activity in the male bird.

Changing hens to new quarters is apt to check their laying.

It is best to cook cut clover hay and then mix it hot with ground grain.

Even if the chickens do belong to the wife, you should help her with the heavy work.

Exposing fowls to heavy wind storms is as dangerous to their health as is rainy weather.

Crowded roosts at night will bring colds to the flock about as quickly as anything we know of.

Heavy forcing will no doubt increase the egg yield, but it will cripple the stamina of future generations.

Sifted coal ashes should be spread, several times a week, upon the dropping boards. Never use wood ashes.

Feed the morning mash before giving water to drink. It is a mistake to allow a fowl to become chilled by drinking cold water while the crop is empty.

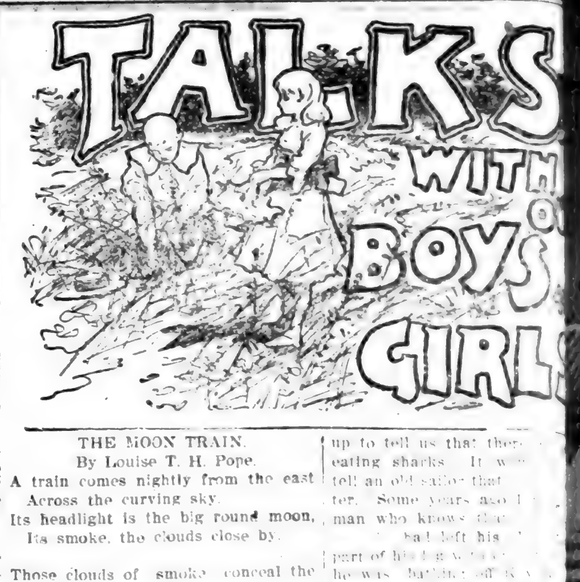
It is a very easy matter to improve the farm flock, and now is the proper time to look over the flock and select a few of the very best pullets and mate them up with the best cockerel upon the farm. They can be confined in a wire netting yard adjacent to a portion of the poultry house.

The use of the lead pencil in putting down in black and white the number of eggs and fowls produced and the price received for them is a good way to change the mistaken belief that hens do not pay for their feed. A record should be kept of the fowls and eggs consumed for family use.

This is the season when many farmers are moving from one locality to another. Changing hens from one place to another is a good way to cause them to stop laying. They may be coaxed to resume operations sooner than they would otherwise by changing their diet. Give something new and they will come to their meals with an appetite.

Durability of Sycamore.

The durability of sycamore wood is vouched for by a specimen in a Cairo museum. It is nearly 6000 years old and is in perfect condition.



THE MOON TRAIN.

By Louise T. H. Pope.

A train comes nightly from the east
Across the curving sky.
Its headlight is the big round moon,
Its smoke, the clouds close by.

Those clouds of smoke conceal the train
I long to have appear;
I watch the brilliant, brilliant light
That makes the path so clear.

The litle sparks of stars fly out
Along the moon train's way;
I'd like to hear the engine puff
And some bright night, I may.

I'd like to see the passengers;
Perhaps a boy like me
Rides on the train to China, now,
But oh! I cannot see.

The splendid headlight blinds my eyes,
The train seems but to creep;
And long before it reaches here,
In bed I'm fast asleep.

A LOST CHILD.

Nobody ever called this tiny child Beth, or Bess, or Betty. She was such a solemn little creature, that Elizabeth, though quite a mouthful, suited her best. She took life seriously, this maiden of five summers, and brooded over many things, as she sat in a diminutive rocker, which her mother had secured at the hotel for her special accommodation.

It was a great summer hotel in a fashionable watering place, where the Eldridges were stopping until they secured a permanent boarding-house for the summer. Meanwhile, Elizabeth had been having a very good time, for she was very popular with everyone, from the head waiter to the elevator boy. Indeed her own heart turned to the elevator boy, and she often thought how lonely he would be without a little girl to say "Good morning" to him each day.

When the time of parting came, Elizabeth was very sad indeed. She felt that she couldn't bear to leave her elevator boy, and I'm afraid she cried the least little bit, when he shook hands with her. But she never forgot him, and after they left the hotel, she often spoke of him to the cook's little girl.

It is very nice, if one is in a large boarding-house, to know the cook's little girl. The acquaintanceship brought Elizabeth many outside treats in the kitchen, and here, too, she made friends, as she did in the hotel.

One afternoon Elizabeth was missing; so was the cook's little girl. They were not to be found upon the premises, and soon the alarm spread from house to house along the street. Elizabeth's nurse was frantic; she had gone indoors to get a glass of water, leaving Elizabeth leaning over the railing of the low veranda, talking to the cook's little girl. When she came back, both children had disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed them.

All the afternoon they hunted, going from house to house, store to store. Mr. Eldridge roused the little town, sending scouts in all directions. Many things might have happened; they might have fallen in the lake; they might have been run over, or, worst of all, they might have been carried off by one of the small bands of gypsies infesting the region, and held for ransom. Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge were distracted, and the cook folded her arms, and wept and wailed, while dinner waited.

But the nurse, who stood wringing her hands, stopped suddenly, for she had an idea. She ran out of the house straight across the velvety common, to the hotel from which they had moved only a few days before. She was quite out of breath when she reached the elevator, meaning to ring and question the boy. But there was no need, for there, side by side, she found Elizabeth and the cook's little girl, serenely content, and chatting away as if there were no such things as distressed parents and cooks, and sympathetic neighbors.

Elizabeth looked up with a start, as she saw her nurse.

"Have you come for me?" she asked. "Please, Nurse, let me stay for one more time, and we've had such fun!"

"You're to come home at once, you naughty child! To think of the state we've been in!" exclaimed Nurse.

Elizabeth never could understand why she was kissed and cuddled and scolded in the same breath. But the cook's little girl understood perfectly, after the mourning parent had unfolded her arms and administered justice; for cooks' little girls are brought up in a much harder school.

UNCLE SAM'S WORLD'S FAIR BUILDING

At the St. Louis Exposition the United States Government Has Erected a Structure Which is a Model of Grace and Beauty.

BY MARK BENNITT.

THE Government Building at the World's Fair ranks with any on the Exposition ground in point of architectural design and sculptural beauty. The architect is Mr. James Knox Taylor, Supervising Architect of the United States Treasury. The sculptor is Mr. James Farrington Early, the youngest pupil ever admitted to the Royal Academy.

The exterior of the building is classic, stately and beautiful. The main entrance consists of a portico of eight Ionic columns, five feet in diameter and forty-five feet high, surmounted by an entablature and attic.

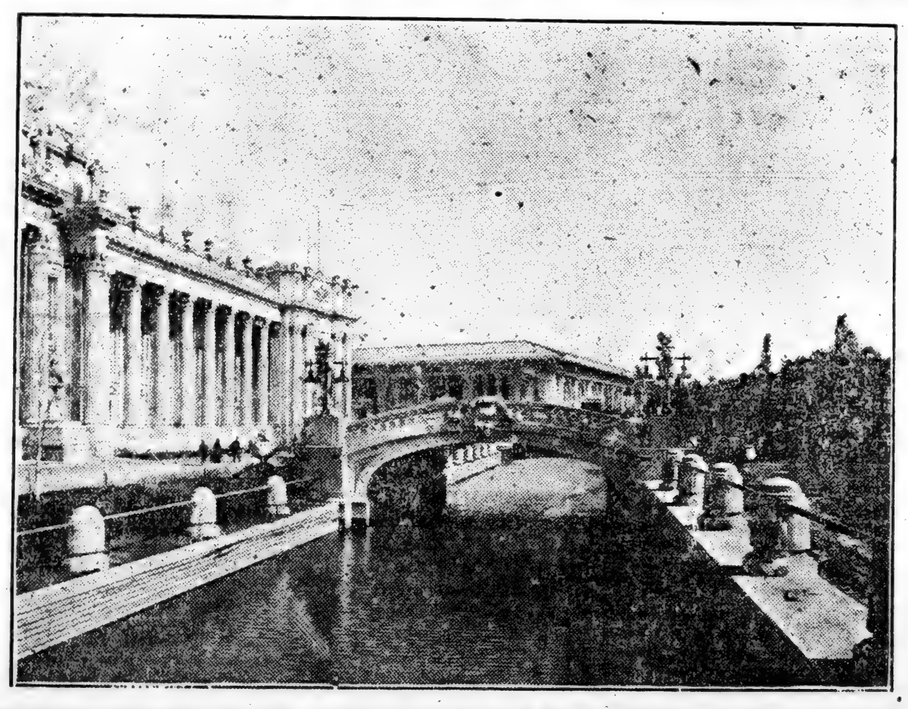
The attic is enriched by eight colossal female figures eleven feet high, representing Music, Painting, Sculpture, Architecture, Agriculture, Manufactures, Transportation and Commerce.

On each side of the central portico and just above the top of the attic are groups of four figures each. A seated female figure, fourteen feet high, representing America, with a torch in one hand and an eagle at her feet, is surrounded by three young athletes, each ten feet six inches high, typifying the youth and strength of the Republic. Each has a laurel wreath in his hand.

The dome is surmounted by a quadriga, a Goddess of Liberty fourteen feet high, bearing a torch in one hand, and an eagle in the other, standing in the triumphal chariot drawn by four colossal horses. The horses are guided by two nude male figures, each twelve feet high.

The Fisheries Building, which is connected with the United States Government Building by a colonnade, is severely classic in outline. It is as simple as the Greek temple of Poseidon, which still crowns "Sunium's Marbled Steep." Groups of naiads, mermaids, mermen, sportive dolphins, sea shells and tridents adorn every available place. The friezes and crests around the building all suggest the sea.

The central ornament for the United States Government Building proper is the statue of "Armed Liberty." The first plaster cast of this statue was made in Rome by Thomas Crawford, the sculptor. It was used by Clark Mills in 1860 for making the mold in which he cast the bronze statue surmounting the dome of the Capitol in Washington. The height of this statue is nineteen feet six inches. The Government Board appropriated $15,000 for the interior decoration of the Government Building. This work was under the immediate supervision of Miss Grace Lincoln Temple, whose plans, however, were subject to the approval of the members of the United States Government Board.



GLIMPSE OF THE WORLD'S FAIR, SHOWING A BRANCH OF THE WATERWAY, THE EDUCATION PALACE ON THE LEFT AND THE PALACE OF MINES AND METALLURGY IN THE CENTER.

AUTHOR OF THE WORLD'S FAIR HYMN

The selection of the veteran poet, Edmund Clarence Stedman, to write the World's Fair hymn, seems to have been a popular choice. When the question was asked who should be invited to undertake a work of such moment, the name of Mr. Stedman was suggested from many quarters.

The poem has now been completed and set to music by Mr. John K. Paine, of Harvard University. The title is the "Hymn of the West." Permission to hear this notable composition is withheld from the public until the opening day of the Exposition, but that an unusual treat is in store for them is assured.

Poems by Mr. Stedman have been used for musical settings of several of the most distinguished American composers, and he is especially gifted in lyric composition. The song for the World's Fair is considered his best effort.

Mr. Stedman was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1833, and was graduated from Yale in the class of 1853. He became editor of the Norwich (Conn.) Tribune and the Winsted (Conn.) Herald, and in 1859 joined the staff of the New York Tribune. He was war correspondent of the New York World from 1861 to 1863. After the war he purchased a seat in the New York Stock Exchange, and while devoting his life to literary work, has also carried on a successful business. He has published many volumes of his own poems and is the editor of several collections and libraries of poetry and literature.

Frank Vanderstuken, director of the Cincinnati Orchestra, has written "Louisiana," the World's Fair march, and Henry K. Hadley, of New York, has written the Exposition waltz, "Along the Plaza."

A FEW WORLD'S FAIR FEATURES.

In a short article such as this, one can only refer to such great features as the Philippine exhibit, covering forty acres and containing more than 1000 natives from those far off Pacific Islands; the United States Government Indian exhibit, covering many acres and occupying a large building; the exhibit of the United States Bureau of Plant Industry, consisting of an outdoor map of the United States, covering four acres; the great Athletic Field, where the Olympian Games of 1904 will be held; the Aerial Concourse where the airship and balloon contests, having prizes aggregating $200,000, will take place; the Anthropology exhibit; the forty or more State buildings; the outdoor exhibits of the Departments of Agriculture and Horticulture, covering many acres; the Palace of Horticulture, 400 by 800 feet, containing the largest exhibits of horticulture ever brought together; the beautiful Temple of Fraternity; the magnificent buildings erected by foreign nations; the great Inside Inn, where 6000 guests may find accommodation at rates from $1.50 to $5.00 per day; the extensive Live Stock Pavilion; the great landscape clock, made of flowers.

The black hole of Calcutta was 18 feet square. When Fort Williams was taken, in 1756, by Surajah Dowla, nabob of Bengal, 146 persons were shut up in the black hole. The room afforded each person a space of 26 1-2 inches by 12 inches, which was just sufficient to hold them without their being violently packed together. To this dungeon there was but one small window and the weather being very sultry, the air within could neither circulate nor be changed. In less than an hour many of the prisoners were attacked with extreme difficulty of breathing and several were delirious. In less than four hours many had died in delirium. In five hours all the survivors except those at the grate, were unconscious. Eleven hours after they were imprisoned 23 only of the 146 came out alive and all of these had high fever, from which they were slow in recovering.

Over the trans-Siberian railroad a fast freight train leaves Moscow once a week and reaches Vladivostock in eighteen days and Port Arthur in twenty-one days. During the year 1902 the railway transported over its entire length 1,980,000 tons of freight and 1,370 passengers, though some of the short hauls exhibit much larger figures. The pettiness of this business is shown by a comparison with the same amount of mileage on American roads, on which the amount of freight carried in a year is from 40,000,000 to 100,000,000 tons.

SUPERSTITIONS OF MECHANICS.

Some Queer Beliefs That Obtain Among Craftsmen.

Cal McSimms, of the Bricklayers' Union, speaking of superstitions known among his craftsmen, said: "Should a bricklayer drop a brick from a wall while at work and break it lengthwise it is a sure token of great luck, and that the man will get money, but if it falls and alights on its end and stands in that position for a moment, he is sure to die in a month.

The painters have only one real superstition, and that is that, if while one of their number is at work fitting a pane of glass he lets it fall, and it is broken into thirteen pieces, he will meet with ill luck within the next twenty-four hours.

Many of the waiters in the restaurants believe if the first order they take in the morning is for ham and eggs they will have good luck all that day. It is a common superstition among the barbers that if a man comes into the shop and has a long beard removed there will be a marriage among the barbers in the place soon.—Kansas City Journal.

"What is the King?"

The Hereros, now in rebellion against Germany, have a pretty fair opinion of themselves and of their chief. One of their songs begins: "What is the King of England, what is the King of Germany compared with thee, O, Mahereo, first among all princes? Have they so many thousand cattle as thou? No! Who is so mighty as thou?" The Hereros despise Europeans. The name for a European is "otyirumbo"—"White thing."

THE CROWS AND THE BALL.

An Invincible Egg That Baffled All Their Attacks.

During a piazza game of ping-pong one of the balls was sent quite a distance out over the lawn, where a crow seized it and bore it off in triumph, evidently thinking it was an egg. After much pecking, from all of which the frolicsome little ball bounced away unbroken, the crow had an excited consultation with several of his fellows, and then deliberately carried the ball to the top of a high tree and let it drop. Again the assembly of black feathered experimenters gathered around in amazement. Was there ever such a remarkable egg? It had fallen from a height that played havoc with their eggs and their little ones as well and yet survived intact! Then one after another tramped on it, cawing loudly all the while.

At last, in sheer exhaustion and disgust, they all gave it up, flew to the top of their favorite tree, and, still cawing loudly, watched one of the ping-pong players came out from the house and carry off the invincible egg that had baffled their boldest attacks.—Boston Watchman.

The Odd Korean Flag.

The Koreans, who have lately recalled their Minister in Washington, attract attention for one reason if for no other. Their peculiar flag adorns their legation building. The body of the flag is white, and in the centre is a design about the size of a football in red and blue, looking very much like huge entwined comma marks. On the top, bottom and sides are short lines of dots and dashes, reminding one of the Morse code alphabet.

DIGGING UP GREECE.

They are digging up Greece to find out how the men of olden times lived, carried on business and died. According to a dispatch from London, a large number of expeditions under the leadership of scientific men are at work studying archaeological remains.

The American school under the direction of T. W. Heermance will continue its excavations at Corinth, where the difficulties in connection with the expropriation of landowners stopped the work in 1903. These have now been settled.

The British school will now resume its excavations at Palaeocastro, Eastern Crete, where a rich series of Mycenaean vases and terra cottas have been discovered. Trial excavations will be made at Laconia. The first site will be the Temple of Artemis, at Kary.

The French school will continue more completely and more systematically the Delos excavations of 1903, which have already revealed interesting traces of the commercial activity of Roman republican times.

Onions For the Nervous.

Onions eaten raw, with bread and butter, make a capital complexion clearer and nightcap, especially for the nervous person, who is generally inclined to lay awake o' nights and to make up at disheartening early hours of the morning. Slice the onions thin and sprinkle lightly with salt to take off the raw, crude taste, and have the bread thin and a good deal of butter. Talking of nervousness, there is no better nerve food than good butter.

TORONTO SWEPT BY FIRE

Heart of City's Wholesale District Burned Out.

ESTIMATED LOSS IS $10,000,000

Firemen Handicapped by Strong Wind—London, Montreal, Hamilton and Buffalo Send Assistance—Chief Thompson Leaps Six Stories and Escapes With Broken Leg.

Toronto.—Fire swept through a section of Toronto's wholesale business district, causing a loss which is estimated at over $10,000,000.

The fire started in a factory in Wellington street. In less than an hour the flames had spread from building to building on both sides of the street, until the whole block was a mass of flames and the fire was utterly beyond the control of the local department.

Appeals were sent to every surrounding city, where fire-fighting apparatus could be obtained, asking for assistance. Montreal, London, Hamilton and Buffalo at once responded.

The Fire Department was almost overwhelmed, so rapid was the spread of the flames, fanned as they were by the wind, and finding ready fuel in the big wholesale houses and their inflammable stores. They hardly knew where to use their water, being driven back again and again from the stands they endeavored to hold.

The tremendous heat prevented them, in many instances, from taking positions near enough to the burning buildings to use their apparatus effectively, and walls fell with loud crashes and heavy rumbling, making their work extremely perilous.

The following places are among those that have been destroyed: Gillespie, Ansley & Co., hats and furs; Dignum & Moneypenny, importers; Comfort Soap Works; Davis & Henderson, wholesale stationers; Jessop Steel Company's building, occupied by R. B. Hutchinson & Co., wholesale woolens; Alcott, Sargent & Westwood, fishing tackle; Dodd's Medicine Company; Western Steamship Company; Richard L. Baker Company, agents; E. T. Corset Company; C. H. Westwood & Co., fishing tackle; Garland Manufacturing Company, F. H. Cragg, agent; Rothschilds Brothers & Company, manufacturers; C. W. Bangard & Co., brokers; Richie & Ramsay Company, paper manufacturers; Thomas Hoskin, manufacturers' agent; Kinleith Paper Company; Andrew Muirhead, wholesale paints; E. W. Gilmore & Brother, silverware; W. H. Payne & Co., commission agents; R. M. Slater & Co., wholesale dry-goods; International Brokers, Limited; Gale Manufacturing Company; Whiteman & Brown Brothers, wholesale stationers; Ralph Smith & Co., lithographers; George H. Hess, Son & Co., window shades; Menzies Manufacturing Company, window shades; H. F. Sharp & Co., photograph supplies; Crown Hotel; Office Specialty Company.

At that time the firemen believed that the fire was under control, but a shift in the wind sent the flames roaring down Bay street, destroying every building on both sides of the street, from the National Club down to Front street.

Nothing could resist the force of the flames as they swept down Bay street toward the lake, and the firemen fought back the fire from the side streets, confining the fire zone to the one thoroughfare wherever possible. Several frame buildings which threatened to cause a spread of the fire were blown up with dynamite.

Chief Thompson of the Fire Department and George Dowkes of Montreal were cut off by the flames while directing the work of firemen from a roof. Thompson jumped six stories to the ground and miraculously escaped with a broken leg. A mass of tangled wires broke his fall near the ground.

TREATY WITH US URGED.

General Council of the Bar of England Eager For Such a Step.

London, England.—The General Council of the Bar of England at the annual meeting unanimously passed the following resolution proposed by Sir Edward Clarke, former Solicitor General:

"This meeting expresses strong approval of the conclusion by this country of treaties of arbitration with other countries and also of manifestations in Canada and in the United States in favor of a similar treaty between this country and the United States. The meeting trusts that the General Council of the Bar will take advantage of every opportunity of co-operating with the legal authorities of Canada and the United States for the attainment of this object."

A suggestion was made that the Attorney General, Sir Robert B. Finlay, on his forthcoming visit to the United States should convey the resolution to the congress of lawyers, to be held at the St. Louis Exhibition.

ADMIRAL ALEXIEFF RESIGNS

Blamed For the Several Disasters to Czar's Fleet.

RUSSIAN TROOPS INVADE KOREA

Three Officers and Fifty-five Russian Seamen Perished on the Bezstrashni—Engineers to Repair Russian Warships—Foreign Representatives to Join Japanese Army.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—Viceroy Alexieff has applied by telegraph to the Emperor to be relieved of his position of Viceroy in the Far East.

While no official announcement has yet been made, there is reason to believe that the above statement is correct.

The immediate cause of the Viceroy's application is reported to be the appointment of Vice-Admiral Skrydloff, one of Admiral Alexieff's strongest enemies and sharpest critics, as successor to the late Vice-Admiral Makaroff in command of the Russian Navy in the Far East.

Vice-Admiral Skrydloff had an interview with the Czar and discussed with his Majesty the question of his (Skrydloff's) relations with Alexieff.

Skrydloff has not hesitated in talking to his friends to charge Alexieff with responsibility for the disasters to the Pacific Squadron, by his division of the fleet, which segregated four armored cruisers at Vladivostok and stationed the Variag and Korietz at Chemulpo.

It is said that Vice-Admiral Skrydloff in his interview let his Majesty understand that he does not care to assume command of the fleet until Alexieff has withdrawn. Therefore, the two men will not meet at Port Arthur.

Viceroy Alexieff recommended the appointment of either Vice Admiral Deubassoff or Vice Admiral Makaroff to command the fleet in succession to Vice Admiral Stark. The Czar selected Makaroff and at the same time issued a special ukase maxing him absolutely independent.

This was the first blow publicly given to Alexieff. The second was the appointment of General Kuropatkin as Commander-in-chief of the army in Manchuria. Kuropatkin was opposed to the policy of Manchurian annexation and stated to the Chinese Minister to Russia, Mr. Hoo Wei Teh, that the whole trouble originated with Alexieff.

By his withdrawal from the Far East Alexieff will not only lose the dignified position of direct representative of the Emperor, but the salary of $56,000 and an allowance of $25,000 per annum.

When Alexieff severs his connection none of the men responsible for the policy pursued before the war will be in power, M. Bezobrazoff having already lost the confidence of his Majesty.

Russians Again Invading Korea.

Tokio.—One thousand Russian troops are reported to occupy Yonggan in Northeastern Korea.

A detachment of forty Cossacks has appeared for a second time at Sungjin (about 150 miles north of Gensan), where they burned the Japanese settlement and seized the post and the telegraph offices. There were no Japanese troops present.

Another detachment of seventy-five Russian soldiers has advanced as far south as Packchong, about seventy-five miles down the coast from Sungjin.

Loss on the Bezstrashni.

London.—A dispatch from Odessa says it has been definitely ascertained that three officers and fifty-five seamen perished when the destroyer Bezstrashni was sunk by the Japanese at Port Arthur on April 13.

To Repair Russian Warships.

Sebastopol.—The number of engineers and artificers who will proceed from this place to Port Arthur has been increased to 1500, depleting the Black Sea shipyards. The Franco-Belgian Company at Nikolaieff will lend fifty-six men.

It is understood that in addition to repairing the warships they will build torpedo boat destroyers at Port Arthur.

To Let the Attaches Go.

Tokio.—It is reported that the military headquarters will be advanced in the near future and that the first contingent of foreign military attaches, including Colonel Crowder and Captain March of the United States Army, will proceed to the front.

A brilliant court garden party that was planned for the foreign military officers and distinguished visitors was later abandoned.

Mrs. Griscom, wife of the American Minister, and Mrs. Frederick Bronson were received by the Empress at a special audience.

Pittsburg Teachers Demand More Pay.

More than 1000 schoolteachers, of Pittsburg, Pa., met at the North School and enrolled as members of an organization which has for its object to obtain an increase of salaries. The teachers will demand a minimum salary of $45 a month and a maximum of $75. There is conflict between the teachers of the primary and grammar grades as to salaries.

Trying Weather on Fruit.

Fruit has experienced a week of trying conditions throughout the central valleys and Middle Atlantic and Southern States.

As a rubber-producing state, Colorado is making a bid for the attention of the world. Within the last few months experiments with a species of sage brush that grows wild over an immense mountainous area have proven that rubber of fine quality can be produced from the shrub. Companies have been organized for the purpose of developing the new industry. Special machinery has been invented for the manufacture of the rubber.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR MAY 1.

Subject: Prayer and Promise, Luke xi., 1-13—Golden Text, Luke xi., 9—Memory Verses, 11-13—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. Christ teaching His disciples to pray (vs. 1-4). 1. "Was praying." It was the habit of Christ to pray. Many instances are referred to in the gospels besides the general statement in Heb. 5: 7. "When He ceased." Perhaps He was praying such a powerful prayer as to arouse the feeling that they knew not how to pray, and needed to be taught. "Teach us to pray." They knew that prayer was important, and they had a desire for ability to pray aright. "As John also taught." Each new dispensation may not only have its new unfolding of truths, but its new revelations may open new modes of access, and new topics of prayer and modes of worship. A different prayer was offered in the Mosaic ritual from the patriarchal form. John opened up a new scope of prayer; and this new dispensation requires of Jesus to set the range of prayer in accordance with the new range of truth, and the new position of man with God.

2. "Say." The beauty and value of the lessons in the Lord's prayer arise from: 1. The tone of holy confidence; it teaches us to approach God as our Father (Rom. 8: 15), in love as well as holy fear. 2. Its absolute unselfishness; it is offered for all the brotherhood of man. 3. Its entire spirituality; of its seven petitions, one only is for any earthly boon, and that only for the simplest. 4. Its brevity and absence of all vain repetitions (Eccl. 5: 2). 5. Its simpliicity, which requires not learning, but only holiness and sincerity for its universal comprehension. For these reasons the Fathers called it the "epitome of the gospel" and "the pearl of prayers." "Our Father." An expression of love and condescension. Here are two grand ideas: 1. That tender and respectful love which we should feel for God, such as that which children feel for their fathers. 2. That strong confidence in God's love to us, such as fathers have for their children. This relation dictates to us reverence for His person, zeal for His honor, obedience to His will, submission to His dispensations and chastisements, and resemblance to His nature. "Which art in heaven." In the former clause we express His nearness to us, in this His distance from us. In this we contrast Him with the fathers we have here below, and so raise our souls to that "heaven" where He dwells, and that majesty and glory which are there, as in their proper home.

3. "Give us." The good things of this life are the gifts of God. This teaches us our dependence upon Him, and is a lesson of contentment, frugality and patient labor, moderation, benevolence and faith. "Day by day." In the order in which our needs are felt. "Our daily bread." Life's most common necessity. Strength to gain it, skill to earn it, power to eat it—all are from God. From Him the soil, the seed, the sun, the harvest. This includes a prayer for the instruction of God's word, which is often compared to food (Job 23: 12; 1 Tim. 4: 6), and for the assistance and support of His grace, for strength to do His will, for that bread which endureth unto everlasting life.

4. "Forgive us our sins." Sin is here represented as a debt. Man has nothing to pay; if his debts are not forgiven they must stand charged against him forever. Sin is an old debt, a just debt, a great and growing debt. "We also forgive." Else how could we entreat Thee for pardon? "Not into temptation." As the prayer for daily bread raises us above care for to-day, and the prayer for the forgiveness of sins is meant to quiet us concerning the past, so is the prayer against temptation a weapon for the uncertain future, that we may not fall again under the might of evil. "Deliver us from evil." From all the wicked fascination and miserable results of sin.

II. The parable of the importunate borrower (vs. 5-8). 5. "He said." Although idle repetitions in prayer are forbidden, yet persistency and importunity in prayer, wrestling with God and not letting Him go until He has blessed us, are here distinctly taught. See Luke 18: 1-8. "Midnight." In those hot countries it is common, where it can be done safely, to travel in the night. "Lend me." It was usual with the Jews to borrow bread from one another; and certain rules are laid down when and upon what condition this is to be done. 6. "Friend; is come." Benighted, belated, and who has lost his way. A strong reason why he should have prompt relief.

7. "Trouble me not." The trouble made him insensible both of the urgency of the case and the claims of friendship. "In bed." We learn from travelers that it is usual in the East for a whole family to sleep in the same room, each laying his mattress on the floor. "I cannot." Without exertion, which was equal to "I will not." 8. "His importunity." Literally, his shamelessness; that is, his unblushing persistence. His perseverance in asking and stating his own inability to supply a friend. "As many." His reluctance once overcome, all the claims of friendship and necessity are felt to the full.

III. The disciples used to persistency in prayer (vs. 9-13). 9. "I say unto you." We have it from Christ's own mouth, who knows His Father's mind, and in whom all promises are yea and amen. "Ask, seek, knock." This verse contains very important directions. In everything, by prayer and supplication, we are to make our requests known unto God; then we are to "seek," continue to ask and knock at the door of His mercy. Our approaches to God should be with earnestness and in sincerity. These three words include the ideas of want and loss. We are destitute of all spiritual good, and have lost God, and are in danger of losing eternal life; be in earnest; be importunate; ask with confidence and humility; seek with care and application; knock loudly and long. 10. "Every one receiveth, etc." Christ binds Himself to hear and answer. No soul can pray in vain that prays as God has directed. But our asking must be in harmony with the will of God, and in faith (James 4: 2, 3).

11, 12. "If a son shall ask, etc." From that which the friend will do, the discourse of the Saviour rises even to that which one could expect of a "father;" and from that which an imperfect earthly father does even to that which the perfect Father in heaven bestows. The stone represents to us useless gifts, the serpent and the scorpion things which are really harmful. If human fathers would not give either one or the other to their children, then it is impossible that our father in heaven will mock the prayers of His children who call upon Him. 13. "Being evil." Sinful people are ready and anxious to give good gifts to their children. From natural affection they are ready to provide everything necessary to their support and comfort.

Safe Breakers Get Thirty-five Cents.

Robbers entered the office of the Pittsburg, Pa., Filtration Commission and bound and gagged George Stewart, a watchman, and the janitor, Lee Lowry, and his wife. They blew open the safe with nitro-glycerine. They got a few trinkets and thirty-five cents from the janitor.

Pig Iron.

Iron production in Alabama is holding up. Furnaces are breaking records. The Republic company is making more than 700 tons of iron daily at three furnaces at Thomas. The Sloss company has six or seven furnaces in operation, and each furnace is turning out 200 tons and more daily. Other companies report good production. The shipments equal the production.

Work on new furnaces is being pushed, two iron makers being under way, one at Woodward, belonging to the Woodward Iron Company, and the other at Ensley, belonging to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company.

Up to July 1st sales have already been made which will require almost steady production, while a few orders have been booked for delivery after that period, and there is an inquiry for iron which guarantees a steady business to the first of November.

The Canal Commission's Work.

The sanitary officers connected with the isthmian canal commission find they have a task on their hands. They have returned from a month's trip to the isthmus, where they went over the field. Nowhere were there the commonest facilities for the preservation of health. In all the isthmus the doctors found but one bath room.

So far as the quarters for employes along the route of the proposed canal were concerned nothing for the preservation of health had been considered. The first step will be the creation of a water supply and sewerage system. There will have to be medical attendants for forty thousand people.

The Illinois Central announces the immediate expenditure of $250,000 on its machine shops in Memphis. It is the intention of the system to double the capacity in the shops there and to increase its shop force at Memphis by the employment of 500 additional men.

Three hundred persons assembled to hear the opening sermon of the missionary conference of the M. E. church, south, at Waco, Tex. The conference will be in session some days.

New corporations in the eastern states during April, with a capital of $1,000,000 and over, reached $74,700,000 against $83,050,000 in March.

Statistics show that manufacturing industries in Chattanooga in 1903 increased their business 27 per cent. To provide for this increase, $1,600,000 were expended in improvements. New industries were established to the amount of $1,000,000; or, in other words, Chattanooga manufacturing industries augmented their capital by an amount exceeding $2,500,000 in one year. In 1902 the total value of the manufacturing interests of Chattanooga was over $16,000,000. At the close of 1903 this value was over $19,000,000. In manufacturing growth Chattanooga surpassed any city of equal size in the United States.

HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE

Sustained by Birmingham on Sunday Morning.

Birmingham Sunday morning suffered its most destructive fire since the early nineties, when the six-story Caldwell hotel and a block of buildings were destroyed.

Sunday's result is three handsome four-story brick buildings on the south side of First avenue, between Twentieth and Twenty-first streets, in the heart of the business district, and making up a part of one of the most substantial business blocks in the city, with another smaller building almost totally destroyed. It now appears as if new structures will be erected for probably two hundred feet along First avenue.

The loss from the fire is estimated to be nearly $150,000, with between $75,000 and $85,000 insurance.

The fire started in the one-story establishment of A. T. Killian, wholesale grocer and produce merchant at No. 2023 Morris avenue, from an unknown cause. The building occupied partly by Killian is a one-story brick structure belonging to parties in Mobile. The flames originated in the rear of this store, spreading to the place of business of P. Giacoppazzi, No. 2021 Morris avenue, which was also a one-story building.

When the flames were discovered they were shooting out of the rear of the Killian and the Giacoppazzi buildings. This latter contained a large stock of fireworks. It was just before daylight and the shooting flames lighted up the skies brilliantly and the fire could be seen for miles.

All of the apparatus in the fire department of Birmingham, including the aerial truck, was brought into service.

The principal losers are:

	Damage.	Insurance.
John W. Tomlinson. ..	$10,000	13,000
Mrs. E. W. Turner ..	10,000	10,000
Geo. P. Harrison	30,000	16,000
Caldwell & Meinetts (office building)	10,000	20,000
P. Giacoppazzi	4,500	3,500
Turn Verein Society ..	5,000	2,500
T. V. Boardman	25,000	10,000
W. D. Colby	7,500	5,000
Underwriters' Real Estate & Ins. Co.	5,000	3,000
Attorneys and others, including Confederate Veterans	15,000	5,000
Robert Garry & Co. (damage by smoke and water)	5,000	5,000

It is claimed by the owners of the office building that the structure can be repaired and put in good condition for the sum of $7,500.

Colonel Tomlinson states that his building will be rebuilt immediately.

Colonel W. H. Denson, who had offices in the Harrison building, was probably one of the heaviest losers by the fire. Besides his office fixtures he lost a library of 2500 volumes which he valued at $10,000, his insurance amounting to only $3,000. Included in the library of Colonel Denson was a complete set of the Alabama reports, there being eighteen volumes of the old series and 137 volumes of the "First Alabama Reports."

"I have lost all of professional life practically," declares Colonel Denson. "There are between 2500 and 3000 attorneys at law in Alabama, but there are only 87 sets of reports left. There were also included in my library a full set of the Reports of the British Parliament of 1857, the time of the monetary crises." A number of other attorneys lost their libraries also.

Gadsden sporting men have organized the Etowah Game and Fish Protective Association, which has for its aims the protection of all kinds of game and the encouragement of stocking the streams of the county with fish by the government.

On account of the increased receipts at the Anniston postoffice for the last year the salary of the postmaster will be increased another $100 when the apportionments are made in June. In the matter of postoffice revenue Anniston is the fifth and perhaps the fourth office in the state, Birmingham, Mobile, Montgomery and possibly Selma alone exceeding her.

Lee County Improvements.

The new Phenix-Girard bank, with a capital stock to begin with of $25,000, will open its doors next week. It is reported that a wholesale house is to be established at an early date. Much building is going on. The Columbus Railroad Company now operates car lines through Phenix City and Girard, and the opening up of these new lines has aided much in the development of the two cities.

At Opelika W. O. Harrell is moving the ruins of the Planters' warehouse burned some time ago, and it is rumored will build new stores on the lot. He has a large wholesale house in contemplation. Colonel Lum Dukes will soon erect two stores.

TREASURER ROBBED.

Marengo County's Funds Stolen by Masked Men.

Marengo county's treasurer, Mr. Brasfield, was in his office at a late hour Friday night in the court house at Demopolis preparing his books and other things so as to be in readiness for court this week, and standing with his back turned to the door and did not hear the footsteps of any one approaching.

He turned to face three pistols pointed toward his head by three masked men, who commanded him to throw up his hands. The safe was open at the time and while two held him up the third proceeded to empty the safe of its contents. After getting all that they could, something like $5,000, with a pistol still held upon Mr. Brasfield they backed out of the court house with their boodle and that was the last thing seen or heard of them.

Mr. Brasfield immediately notified Sheriff Hasty and his deputies, who made every effort in their power to catch the thieves. Mr. Brasfield has held the office for the past eight years. The robbers are supposed to be white men.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Huntsville Man Committed a Double Crime Friday.

As she was in the act of laying her baby in bed at midnight Fleming Froman, of Dallas mills, near Huntsville, shot his wife, followed her as she ran into the yard, cut her throat and then inflicted fatal wounds upon himself. Neighbors heard the shots and rushed to the place, Froman meeting them at the gate. He stood there with his throat horribly gashed and told what he had done; then going back to the body of his wife he cut his throat again and fell dead beside her.

Crushed to Death.

Oscar Crauswell, a well known man, met a violent death Saturday at noon at one of the Tennessee company's mines. He was at work about a new piece of machinery and was in some manner caught and crushed to death. The unfortunate young man was but twenty-two years of age and had been married only two months. He had been with the Tennessee company since he was ten years of age.

Restored to Her Parents.

Lucy Cole, who was abandoned in Florence last fall by a tribe of wandering gypsies, has been identified positively as Laura Nation, who disappeared eight years ago from her home in Elwood, Kas., when she was three years old. The child was identified by birthmarks. Her parents live in St. Joseph, Mo. James W. Nation, who believes he has now found his long lost child, was in affluent circumstances when she disappeared eight years ago, but he has spent everything he possessed in a hitherto vain search for her and is now driving a delivery wagon in St. Joseph.

Damages for Blind Girl.

Miss Rosie Middleton, a blind girl of Phenix City, has received $10,500 damages from the Pennsylvania railroad, the result of injuries she received last December in a wreck.

Miss Middleton has been a teacher in a blind academy up north and last Christmas was traveling to a town near Philadelphia to visit relatives when her train was wrecked. The road gave her $10,500 voluntarily, this amount being agreed upon as reasonable.

At Elkhart, Ind., the rays of the sun focused through a gold fish jar, set fire to the clothing of a woman who was sleeping in a chair near an open window and the flames were extinguished only after she had been severely burned.

The government of the republic of Panama has indicated its desire to have $1,000,000 of the amount to be paid to that country on account of the canal purchase transmitted to J. P. Morgan & Co., their fiscal agents, at New York, the remaining $9,000,000 to await the arrival of the Panama minister in June.

Fatally Burned.

At Prattville while Mrs. Martha Hearn was standing before the fire her clothing took fire and before assistance could reach her all her clothing was burned off. The burn proved be so serious that she died. She was 72 years old.

A party of Guntersville people have chartered a steamboat for a trip to the St. Louis exposition. The steamer will leave Guntersville early this summer and will make a leisurely passage down the Mississippi, Ohio and Tennessee rivers. The boat will be well stocked with everything conducive to the comfort of the passengers.

AMONG LAWMAKERS

At the Seat of Government at Washington.

APRIL 28TH.

President Pro Tem Frye adjourned the senate sine die at 2 p. m. today, the hour fixed by resolution of the two houses of congress. The occurrence was devoid of unusual incident and the final close of the session was but slightly different from the end of an ordinary day's sifting.

The senate began its day's work at 10:30 a. m., but the greater part of the time was devoted to a political debate.

The only important acts of legislation during the day were the presentation and acceptance of conference reports on the Panama canal government and emergency river and harbor bills. Neither report aroused debate.

The closing day of the second session of the house of the Fifty-eighth congress was made notable by the demonstration which was evoked by a resolution offered by Mr. Williams, the minority leader, testifying to the courtesy and impartial manner in which Speaker Cannon had presided over the house.

Many conference reports were agreed to on bills which had been in dispute between the two houses. The only debate of any importance was on the bill providing for the restoration to the naval academy of three cadets who had been dismissed for hazing, the house voting overwhelmingly against it.

At 2:10 the gavel fell and the fifty-eighth congress concluded.

ADDED TO THE NAVY.

Uncle Sam Has Another Cruiser, the California.

The armored cruiser California was launched Thursday at the ship yards of the Union Iron works. She was christened by Miss Florence May Pardee, daughter of Governor Pardee, of the state of California.

The cruiser California is supposed to embody the latest and best in vessels of her class. There are to be five vessels like her. She will cost complete $5,000,000. Her principal dimensions are: Length of load water line 503 feet, extreme breadth 69 1-2 feet, mean draught 24 feet and displacement 13,400 tons. She will have a belt of steel armor 7 1-2 inches wide on the water line and varying in thickness from 3 1-2 to 6 inches, as well as the 5-inch casement above the belt of armor for 232 feet of the vessel's length.

The total number of bills introduced in the house during the session just ended was 15,756 and in the senate 5,087. Most of these were of a private nature, involving appropriations for claims or pensions. The total number of private laws approved by the president up to noon Friday was 1441. The total number of public laws 181, and the total number of resolutions which have become law 37. The agregate number of bills was not above the average of a long session, but the number of private bills passed was far in excess of those generally enacted during a similar term. The total number of reports on bills in the house alone was 2943, or nearly double the usual number. The amount of public business transacted was below the average.

The naval board appointed to investigate the circumstances attending the bursting of two 8-inch guns on the Iowa February 5 last, has reported to the secretary that the board finds that in the firing of the guns all precautions were taken. The report says that "when the forgings of the guns were being machined at the gun factory defects developed and the guns were rejected, but on the protest of the manufacturer the guns were accepted.

The bill introduced by Senator Pettus relating to the settlement of the claims of states for organizing, equipping and subsisting volunteers between their muster in and their acceptance for service in the war with Spain, has become a law. Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi are interested in the bill.

IN SIX WEEKS

Payments on Spanish War Claims Will be Made.

Under the terms of the general deficiency appropriation bill, which has been approved by the president, the claims of the several states for expenses incurred during the Spanish war may be filed until January 1, 1906. Practically all of these claims have been filed with the auditor for the war department.

Tennessee and Mississippi will receive about $20,000 each and Alabama $30,000.

TOO MUCH BLAMING.

Praise Helps Children More Often Than Reproof.

The fable of the competition between the sun and the wind as to who could first prevail upon the traveler to cast off his cloak is so well known that it will not bear repetition, and yet the wisdom that it teaches is seldom utilized. Unfortunately it comes much easier to humanity to coerce than to persuade, to blame than to praise, and to command rather than to request. Especially is this the case in our relations with children and dependants. Teachers and parents are much more apt to think they can obtain desired results by exhorting and reproving than by trying to discover the good that is in their charges and developing it by praise and encouragement, and yet it is certain that by this latter method the wished for improvement can be much more easily arrived at. "Mother always takes it for granted when I try to do right," said a child recently, "but when I do anything wrong she always jumps on me," which is a very true criticism, which might be applied in many cases.

The house mistress detects and sharply reproves any negligence on the part of her servants, but she seldom, if ever, praises the daily tasks that are correctly done. Unless some especially brilliant work is shown, teachers rarely commend. Right doing, as the child says, is taken for granted, and it is only the faults that are made much of. "I always find that blame does much more harm than good," said a woman who has been very successful in her dealings with children. Praise awakens ambition, reproof discourages it. Children are not naturally logical and "preaching," as they call it, about the effects of sin, etc., has very little effect upon them, whereas, on the other hand, they are wonderfully responsive to direct commendation and can almost always be persuaded to make an effort by sympathy and appreciation. Children are often very trying. It is hard to refrain from blaming them if it is deserved and even more difficult sometimes to find cause for praise in an unruly boy or girl, but if the effort is made the result will probably be encouraging.

Woman in the Home.

"Emerson says: 'A sufficient measure of civilization is the influence of good women.' Not infrequently the child at her knee is not more readily shaped, by the mother, into an agreeable and promising member of the family than is the husband imperceptibly moulded into a gracious, cordial and agreeable gentleman,' says Mary A. Livermore in Success. "For the child, the best school of manners, as of character, is always the home, if the mother be the right sort of woman. Children are imitators and instinctively copy the manners, gestures, speech, habits and morals of their parents. If love and gentleness pervades the home—if head and heart wisely bear rule—if the daily life is righteous and gracious—if the family government is just and sensible, and the father and mother live up to the standard of their own precepts—we may expect the children will reach adult life upright, self-centred, gracious and useful.

"I have sometimes thought that breakfast should be stricken from the list of family meals, and be served to the individuals of the household in the privacy of their rooms, so frequently does it become a joyless feast. Unless the greatest care be taken, the breakfast table becomes a veritable dump, where each one unloads the grievances of the night. One has not 'slept a wink;' another was scared by a 'horrible' dream; a third, 'nearly died' from an aching tooth; a fourth is dismal because of a depressing nightmare, and so on. If to these enlivening details be added a doleful disarray of dress, tousled hair and a sour disapproval of the weather, the news and the food, the most appetizing breakfast will pall on the taste, and the day will be badly begun. More important than the matter of cooking is it that the family gather around the table cheerful, joyous and in abounding good spirits. Good digestion waits on those who season their food with laughter and fun, and, if we have cares and worries, it is wise to let them wait until after the matutinal meal."

True courtesy is only the application of the golden rule to our social conduct. "A noble and attractive everyday bearing comes of goodness, unselfishness, sincerity and refinement, and these are bred in years, not in moments." They are not the result of an instinct, or an inspiration. They come of a noble character, that cannot be reached until after many struggles and conflicts.

The Petticoated Drummer.

The daughter of the regiment, with her little drum, is known to lovers of romance and opera comique, but the woman drummer who travels about with sample cases and an order book is practically unknown in this land of feminine enterprise. Several women travel as agents for schools, and half a dozen sell perfume, soaps and cosmetics "on the road." Many are book agents, and two represent dressmaking establishments. But in the last case the "drummers" are French women and travel for French establishments. A woman who recently started on a tour as a drummer for basket work came back discouraged, although she had booked many orders and fully satisfied her firm. She met no women, she said, and had more unpleasant experiences in six weeks than in a previous business career of fifteen years.

Although this woman's case may be an exception, it would seem that the female commercial traveler is a diminishing rather than an increasing factor in trade circles. Some few, it is certain, have established themselves in it, and notably in the sale of corsets, underwear and baby clothing. One energetic woman is well known in the stationery trade as traveling with inks, pencils and so forth, and another in the service of a large firm dealing in such medical requisites as bandages and aseptic dressings also proved successful. But prejudices die hard, and in unexpected ways they have been too strong for the lady traveler to overcome. Thus, a few years ago, a wholesale grocery house tried the experiment of sending out a number of good-looking young women attired in the latest of fashion. The first orders they booked fully justified its calculations, but on the next rounds the fair travelers found themselves received by the wives of the retailers, who did not permit themselves to be cajoled by smiles or smart raiment into launching forth upon extravagances for which there was no local market. Travelers are rather clannish, and at the hotels they frequent the feminine traveler is shown to the dining room, not being allowed to join the cafe clique, and is apt to find herself "not altogether popular with the men of the profession," as the basket drummer put it.

A Wedding.

"There is distinct difference in the use and application of the words 'wedding' and 'marriage' nowadays," said a feminine passenger on the street car the other day.

"Of course every girl who contemplates getting married wants to have a 'wedding.' The word 'wedding' carries with it visions of a gown that is a dream of beauty, a gorgeous display of flowers, handsome ushers, and in fact everything that goes to make up an elaborate function at one of the fashionable churches. The word to her means days of preparation for the momentous event, scores of gifts from loving friends and the numerous little parties and affairs that always precede it.

"On the other hand, what does a 'marriage' signify? When I hear the word I always think of a justice of the peace or of a runaway match or of an occasion where 'only a few intimate friends were present.' So don't ask me if I am looking forward to my 'marriage' with all sorts of happy feelings. I want you to understand that I am going to have a 'wedding.'"

FASHIONS OF THE DAY

Parrot green is a leader in fashionable tints.

White shades grade from chalk color to the deepest ivory.

Silk bouillonnees are superseding ruchings in popularity.

Persian bands figure conspicuously in the season's trimmings.

Ribbon bows with their ends frayed out represent a new notion.

White will be worn more than ever during the coming summer.

Soft, pliable materials are given the preference by Dame Fashion.

Ombre effects in ribbon and chiffons are utilized for millinery purposes.

The garland idea will be the keynote of the trimmings for the coming season.

Shanting embroidered with white pastilles, both in ecru and pastel shades, is in favor.

With these very short skirts boots must be more than neat—they must be positively pretty.

Linen collars are very much worn with tailor gowns. The most fashionable of them are of the turn-over styles to be worn with ribbons. Hemstitching, embroidered dots, and even borders of hand embroidery are seen on stiff linen collars nowadays.

On the whole, the best laces for waists are Bruges or Renaissance. Either of these laces trims well with lace, velvet or other applications. They also give good service and can be used as long as anything is left of them. The Renaissance combines most beautifully with chiffon and mousseline de soie.

A lace blouse worn with a blue velvet walking gown was admired at a recent picture show. The wearer removed the coat of her gown in the excessively hot rooms, showing a string-colored lace blouse striped with an inset design of blue velvet motifs. The design suggested grape leaves, but it was too conventional to recognize with certainty. The motifs were small and were connected with a tendril line of blue chenille embroidery in which was a touch of gold.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS

The Sad Case of Tommy Dchool.

Little Tommy Dchool
Had a dreadful time at school,
For spelling and pronouncing made him sad.
When they taught him rough was ruff,
He insisted that dough was duff;
He drove his patient teacher nearly mad.
When he found that tough was tuff,
He replied that bough was buff;
And he wept upon his desk when others roared.
When he said that cough was corf,
And rough was surely rorf,
Her wrath the patient teacher on him poured.
But when Tommy was a man,
Believe me, ye who can,
He made a dictionary all himself;
And every fearful word
Was spelled as it was heard,
And the volume brought him hoards of honest pelf.

—Mary Alden.

The Magic Triangle.

A very interesting experiment may be performed as follows: With a wet lead pencil point draw on a piece of thick paper a triangle—whether the sides are equal or not makes no difference. Lay it on the surface of a basin of water with the drawing up, and very carefully fill the space inside the dampened lines with water, so that there will be a triangular basin of water on the swimming sheet of paper. (The water will not extend beyond the wet lines of the drawing.) Now, taking a pin or a needle, or any thin, smooth, sharp-pointed instrument, dip its point into this triangular basin, anywhere but at its centre of area—say, very nearly at one of the angles. Be careful not to touch the paper and so prevent its free motion in any direction, and you will find that no matter where the point is placed, the paper will move on the water until the centre of area comes under the point. This centre of area may be indicated before placing the paper on the water by drawing lines from any two angles to the centres of the opposite sides; where the two lines cross will be the desired place.

If a square be drawn instead of a triangle, and similarly treated, it will move until the intersection of its diagonals comes under the pin point; and no matter what figure be drawn, it will move along the water so as to bring its centre of area directly under the point.—St. Nicholas.

Biographical Nonsense.

This is a nice game for an afternoon party, and may be played by an number of people. Before the party starts the hostess must have the following prepared:

— was born —, the same year when — discovered —, by sailing through the — in a —. His father was a native of —; his mother of —. He was educated of —, in the city —. His first voyage, which was a long one, was from — to —. He wrote three books before he was — years of age. They were —, and —, and —. He performed the miraculous feat of — with —. He was a great —, and one we shall ever —.

In appearance he was —, being rather — of stature. His nose was —, his eyes —, his mouth —, and hair the color of — adorned his head. He invariably carried in his hand a — and a—, by which he was always known, and with which he is represented to this day. He died at the advanced age of—

Then, when all the guests are seated for the game, one player is given a pencil and a piece of paper, and is requested to write the following:

The name of a noted man.
A date between the flood and the present year.
The name of a noted man.
A country.
The name of a river or some other body of water.
Some kind of vessel. (Examples, warship, rowboat).
A country.
A country.
The name of a school.
A city.
A city, town or country.
A city, town or country.
A number.
The names of three books.
A wonderful performance.
The name of a well-known person.
A professional man. (Examples, doctor, lawyer.)
A word expressive of occupation, such as reader, writer, lecturer.
A term expressing the feeling entertained for another person. (Examples, love, remember, forget).
A term descriptive of some one's appearance.
A word denoting size.
A term describing form (square, pointed, etc.,
A color.
A word denoting size or shape.
The name of an article of some decided color.
The name of any article.
The name of any article.
A number of years.

When this is completed, the game itself is ready to start. The hostess takes possession of the papers that she has prepared, and gives the other one to the player on her right, who begins by reading the first thing on her paper, which is a man's name, and then quickly passing the paper to her right hand neighbor. The hostess then continues reading, pausing at every blank, which must be instantly filled. To make the biography read smoothly it is very necessary to pass the paper quickly from one player to the next. The ridiculous combinations found in this game are very funny, and it is well named "Biographical Nonsense."

Rain Dwarfs.

Did you ever watch the rain as it strikes the sidewalk? If not, be sure you do so the next time there is a heavy shower. As each raindrop strikes the sidewalk the force of its fall makes it rebound, and when it does so it almost looks like a wee, wee person throwing up its arms as if in great surprise.

Little Freddie Brown had often noticed this, and he declared that when the raindrops bounded up they not only looked really and truly fairies—rain dwarfs.

One day, when there was a shower, Freddie put on his raincoat, his rubber cap and boots, and went out to see if he couldn't find out more about the rain-dwarfs. There was a nice, quiet place in his own yard where there was a sidewalk that went directly by the veranda, and here Freddie sat down in the hammock and looked for rain dwarfs.

"Oh, please won't a rain dwarf come over here and talk with me?"

Just as he said this he heard two big splashes of water right beside him on the veranda railing. They came so suddenly he was quite startled and, as he looked at them, instead of the water he expected to see, there stood two little rain dwarfs, jumping up and down.

They were transparent you could look through them.

"Here we are!" they cried, still jumping.

"Oh! how d'ye do?" said Freddie. "Won't you sit down and we'll talk together?"

"Sit down!" shouted one little dwarf, as he went on jumping. "Why, if we should even stand still for a single instant we'd break all to pieces."

"But don't you get awful tired of jumping all the time?" asked Freddie.

"Do you get tired of breathing?" questioned the other dwarf, who had not spoken before. What queer voices they had. It sounded like rain pattering when they spoke.

"Why, no!" answered Freddie, in surprise. "But that's different, you know."

"Not at all!" said both the dwarfs together, shutting and opening rapidly their wee, twinkling silver eyes, until Freddie couldn't help laughing.

"Where is your home?" asked Freddie.

"Everywhere," said one dwarf. "Sometimes in the sky, sometimes in the ocean and sometimes we're dancing on the ground."

"Dear me!" said the little boy, "I wish I could be a rain dwarf. It must be lots of fun."

"It's easy enough to become one," replied one of the wee men. "All you have to do is to shut your right eye, open your left, jump up and down and say:

Rain, rain, come today.
And never, never go away."

Freddie got out of the hammock and began jumping, while saying,

Rain, rain, come today.
And never, never go away.

keeping his right eye shut and his left eye open.

When he first began to say it and to jump, he felt how solid and heavy he was; but the more he jumped the lighter he became. Then he felt himself growing shorter and shorter, until he found he was no taller than the dwarfs on the veranda railing, on which he was standing, or rather jumping, much to his surprise. In fact, he had become a rain dwarf, too!

"Hooray!" he shouted and he and the other two dwarfs took hold of hands and jumped down on the sidewalk, where there were hundreds of rain dwarfs, dancing and throwing up their arms in great glee.

Freddie was sure that he had never had such a good time in all his life. When he was nothing but a little boy he used to get tired after jumping and running a while; but now the more he jumped and danced about the more he felt like it.

Pretty soon the sun began shining, though it was still raining. It seemed to Freddie that the rain dwarfs were jumping more lightly, and they looked strange and misty. He began to feel very queer and so light that it wasn't exactly pleasant.

Then the rain stopped entirely, and he found he was jumping no longer, but that he was floating up, up, drawn by a very hot sunbeam that had turned him to nothing but vapor.

It was not long before he found himself above the treetops, then above the hills, then away above the mountains. He didn't mind the hot sunbeam any more, and only thought what fun it was to be up so high until he began to wonder how he could get down on the earth again, and if he would ever see his mother and father and sister.

That made him homesick; and he put his funny, misty hands up to his funny, vapory face and began to cry, when, presto! he was turned into a through the air, oh, so fast; and then he fell thump on the sidewalk, and, as he bounded back he found he was a little fat boy named Freddie Brown who had gone asleep in the hammock and tumbled out of it.—Florence Peltier in Indianapolis News.
